The Lord Justice-Clerk.—My Lords, at the hearing of this case I formed a fairly decided opinion that this reclaiming note must be successful, and a subsequent investigation of the authorities to be found in previous decisions confirmed my view as taken at first. I agree with the Lord Ordinary that "salvage remuneration" is very much favoured in the law, but he seems to me to err in holding that this is a case of salvage. It does not appear to me that the services rendered by the "Clan Grant" to the "Strathclyde" fall under the description of salvage services. The whole tone of the authorities is to be found in the expression "voluntary." Services to be rendered by one vessel to another in distress are services for which salvage is exigible when the service is not a service of contract or obligation, but is a service which those rendering it could refuse to render without committing any breach of contract or duty undertaken as matter of obligation. It is of course true that there is a duty in the sense of the moral law to render succour as far as may be possible to those in distress at sea. This moral obligation applies on land as well as on sea, and its force as a moral obligation is only greater in the case of sea perils because these are in the general case more clamant in their call for aid, because of their exceptionally dangerous character. But this is an obligation which applies not to seafaring matters only, but to all circumstances in which the citizen can, by timely assistance, save others from danger. And even that obligation can hardly be held to exist as regards saving of corporeal subjects. It applies only to persons. But, whatever be the extent of it, it is plainly not an obligation in law; its non-fulfilment cannot be visited with public official censure or give claim in civil suit in respect of failure. Salvage in its true sense is suitable reward for services voluntarily rendered in circumstances where, by the services offered on the one hand and accepted on the other, there is saving of what otherwise was in risk of perishing or being lost.

It seems to me quite clear that the word "salvage" does not apply to services which those rendering them had by contract undertaken to render.

Here, in this case, the insurance conditions were that the vessels mutually insured gave as part of the consideration for the insurance an obligation to render assistance to vessels mutually insured with them. It may be taken to be quite certain that this obligation was as much a part of the premium of insurance as the money paid by the insurer. Each insured bargained for the assistance of the others, and undertook to render assistance to the others, when any two vessels came to be the one in the position of being a vessel in distress, and the other a vessel able to render assistance. It was a perfectly intelligible and efficient contract for a benefit, which the one had a right to claim, and the other had contracted to give.

That being so, I have without hesitation come to the conclusion that the defenders' plea in law, which the Lord Ordinary has repelled, should be sustained. I do not think it necessary to go over the authorities in detail: I have had an opportunity of perusing an opinion of Lord Ardwall which reviews these authorities very fully, and in which I concur.

Accordingly I would move your Lordships to recal the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, to sustain the first plea in law for the defender, and to grant absolvitor from the claim for salvage. The defenders are willing to meet such charges as may be necessary to meet outlays and payments to officers and crew of the "Clan Grant," and the case will be remitted back to the Lord Ordinary that this matter may be disposed of.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—Had the proof allowed by the Lord Ordinary been a proof before answer, I should have been disposed to think that the enquiry might have thrown some light on the question whether the sum claimed by the owners of the "Clan Grant" was for "salvage services" as claimed in the summons. But that is not the nature of the proof, for the Lord Ordinary prefaces his allowance of it by repelling the first plea in law for the defenders, which distinctly tables the proposition that the owners are not entitled to salvage. Now, being thus brought face to face with the question whether this claim, so far as at the instance of the owners, is a salvage claim at all, I have come to agree with the opinion of your Lordship and also with that which my brother Lord Ardwall is about to read.

Lord Ardwall.—This is an action raised by the Clan Steam Trawling Co. Limited, as owners of the ship "Clan Grant," and the officers and crew of the said ship, against the Aberdeen Steam Trawling and Fishing Company Limited, the owners of the steam trawler "Strathclyde," and it concludes for payment of £500 in name of salvage, in respect of "the salvage services specified in the condescendence."

It is not disputed by the defenders that if the services in respect of which the claim is made had been rendered spontaneously and voluntarily, the owners of the "Clan Grant" would have been entitled to salvage; but in their first plea in law they plead that the pursuers, the owners of the "Clan Grant," being under pre-existing obligation to render the services in question to the "Strathclyde," are not entitled to salvage. With regard to the claim of the officers and crew, the defenders represent themselves as being willing to pay a reasonable amount of salvage, and with regard to them the only question that remains is as to the amount to be paid.

The question that has to be decided now is whether the first plea in law for the defenders ought to be sustained or repelled. The Lord Ordinary repelled the plea, on the ground, apparently, that the services rendered by the "Clan Grant" were salvage services, and that there is nothing in the contract founded on by the defenders to exclude the claim. He expresses himself thus: "The right to obtain salvage remuneration is one very much favoured in the law, and therefore cannot be excluded except by express words or by very clear implication from the language used. Rule 30 contains no express exclusion of such a claim, and it does not appear to me that there is any implication at all that it should be excluded"; and again he says: "I reach the conclusion that the present claim is not barred, because there is nothing in the agreement to exclude the right of the salvor to receive the remuneration for his services which the law gives him."

It humbly appears to me that the Lord Ordinary has in these passages and the rest of his opinion assumed that the services rendered were salvage services, giving the pursuers a right to remuneration unless such right was barred by contract.

I cannot help thinking that the Lord Ordinary by making the assumption alluded to has failed to attend to what is implied in the term "salvage services," and that the question is not whether the pursuers have barred themselves from claiming the salvage remuneration they are entitled to, but whether they are entitled to any salvage remuneration at all—in other words, whether their services were of the nature of "salvage services."

Now, I think it clear upon the authorities that in order to entitle a person to claim salvage remuneration the services in respect of which he claims must have been spontaneously and voluntarily rendered, and not rendered in respect of any contractual or official duty resting on the person rendering them. This, I think, is established by a series of dicta pronounced by judges of the greatest eminence in a variety of cases.

In the case of The "Neptune" (1824), 1 Hagg. 227, at p. 236, Lord Stowell is reported as having expressed himself as follows: "What is a salvor? A person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer without any pre-existing covenant that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of that ship." And the same noble and learned Lord in the case of The "Zephyr," 1827, 2 Hagg. 43, refused to entertain a claim of salvage for services rendered by one vessel to another, where the vessels were sailing as consorts and under an agreement to render mutual assistance. And in the same volume of Reports, in the case of The "Calypso," 1828, p. 209, Sir Christopher Robinson, in considering an alleged distinction between civil and military salvage, expressed himself thus, p. 217: "It will be found, I think, that both these forms of salvage resolve themselves into the equity of rewarding spontaneous services rendered in the protection of the lives and property of others. This is a general principle of natural equity, and it was considered as giving a cause of action in the Roman law, and from that source it was adopted by jurisdictions of this nature in the different countries of Europe." He then refers to a judgment of Sir William Wiseman, in which he refers to the Digest, Lib. 3, tit. 5.

The case of The "Waterloo," 1820, 2 Dodson 433, was quoted by the pursuers for certain dicta therein which they alleged to be favourable to their contention. In that case the East India Company attempted to escape liability for a claim for salvage on the ground that there was a usage and practice exempting them from payment of salvage when ships belonging to them were salved by a ship in their employment. Lord Stowell—then Sir William Scott—held that no such custom or usage was proved, and in the course of his judgment said that where an exemption is claimed from a submission to a general rule, the exemption must be so set forth as to be intelligible in its extent, that an indefinite claim of exemption is "rank," and made other remarks to the some effect; but nowhere, as far as I read the judgment, is there anything controverting the general principle that to bring services within the category of salvage services they must be rendered voluntarily and not in respect of any contract or official duty. The soundness of the definitions and dicta above quoted have been recognised in a variety of cases, for instance, in The "Cargo ex 'Schiller,'" 1877, L.R., 2 P.D. 145, Lord Justice Brett says, at p. 149: "Both cases are therefore consistent with what was said in The 'Thetis,' 1833, 3 Hagg. 14, and The 'Neptune,' that salvage is the service which volunteer adventurers spontaneously render to the owners in the recovery of property from loss or damage at sea under the responsibility of making restitution, and with a lien for their reward."

In the case of The "Solway Prince" [1896], P. 120, it was held by Sir F. H. Jeune, that a contract with underwriters which was not depending on success, precluded the plaintiffs from asserting a "maritime lien" on the vessel and claiming salvage remuneration from her owners. In delivering judgment he said: "There is not, so far as I know, any direct authority in the Court of Admiralty on the point, unless it is to be found in those cases which decide that persons who perform services in themselves of a salvage nature because they are bound by a pre-existing contract or a pre-existing duty to perform them, are not entitled to claim as salvors. See The "Neptune" and The "Hannibal," 1867, L.R. 2 A. and E. 53. . . . These authorities at least illustrate the voluntary character which is held to be essential to the claim of a salvor, and they show that if work be done in pursuance of a contract other than a salvage contract, it does not, under ordinary circumstances, give rise to a salvage claim."

The rule of these decisions is very well set forth in Lord Justice Kennedy's Treatise on Civil Salvage. On page 2 his definition of salvage services concludes thus: "If, and so far as the rendering of such services is voluntary and attributable neither to legal obligation nor to the interests of self-preservation nor to the stress of official duty"; and again he says, on page 28 of the same work: "Voluntariness on the part of the salvor is equally, with danger to the thing saved, an essential element in the constitution of a salvage service."

The cases in which the services of a tug or of a pilot were remunerated as salvage services were referred to as detracting from the universality of the rule regarding voluntariness that I have just been considering, and in particular the case of Akerblom v. Price, etc., 1881, L.R. 7 Q.B.D. 129, was referred to. In that case some pilots had rendered important services towards a vessel, and it was held that they were entitled to be remunerated as for salvage services, but in concluding the judgment of the Court, Lord Justice Brett spoke as follows:—

"We have thought it right to give our reasons at length, but we might decide this case by saying that the service rendered was one which the pilots were not bound to render. It was a danger they were not bound to encounter; next, that the service was not one of pilotage; it was not a piloting to any port or place, but of taking out—a salving from danger."

And so with regard to all similar cases it appears that the services were considered to be salvage services, because they were outside of and not within the contracts of towage or pilotage. In the present case the alleged salvage services, according to the pursuers' own averments, were of a most ordinary description.

The law standing thus, the only question is whether in the present case the owners of the "Clan Grant" were or were not under a contractual obligation to render the services they did to the "Strathclyde." This depends on the effect to be given to the policies of insurance, the articles of association, and the rules of the Aberdeen Mutual Steamship and Trawlers Insurance Company. The "Clan Grant" was insured with this Company, under a policy which is No. 15 of process, and in that policy it is provided that the premiums or contributions of the nature of premiums, payable in respect of the insurance, are to be calculated according to the losses by way of mutual insurance, and the policy goes on to provide thus:—

"And it is mutually agreed between the assured and assurers, that the articles of association of the assurers' Company, and the rules of the Company, shall be deemed part hereof, and be binding upon the assured and assurers as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if such articles were inserted in this policy, and any breach thereof will invalidate the same."

By No. 3 of the articles of association it is provided that every insurer is to be deemed to become a member of the Company, and by article 9 the members bind themselves to accept and agree to be bound by the rules of the Company. Article 30 of the rules of the Insurance Company provides as follows:—

"Ships insured in this Company shall give assistance to any steamer broken down or in distress, which is insured either in this Company or in the Total Loss Mutual Steamship Insurance Company (Sunderland), or the United Kingdom Steam Tug and Trawler Insurance and Indemnity Association (Shields), or any other Association with which an agreement is or may be entered into." And rule 32 provides that the funds required for the payment of claims shall be raised by contributions from all the members.

The "Strathclyde" was insured with the same Company under a policy of insurance in identical terms with the policy over the "Clan Grant."

It is obvious from the above contract of insurance, taken along with the articles and rules which are declared to be incorporated therewith, that there was established a mutuality of obligation between all the members of the Insurance Company. All the members had an interest in keeping down claims for loss, because the fewer of these, the smaller would be the contribution periodically demanded from the various members, and while each member was bound by the rules to give assistance to ships of other members of the Company, he was on his part entitled to receive assistance from them; and if a ship belonging to any member of the Company failed to give assistance to any other ship insured in the Company, which was broken down or in distress, it is, I think, clear, first, that the owners of the former ship would be guilty of a breach of contract, in consequence of which their own policy would be invalid, and they might in addition be subjected to an action for damages.

I therefore think that it is perfectly plain that in the present case the "Clan Grant" was bound to give assistance to the "Strathclyde" which was in distress at the time the services condescended on were rendered. If this is so, it appears to me that there is an end of the pursuers' case so far as at the instance of the owners of the "Clan Grant," because there was a pre-existing contract under which that vessel was bound in the circumstances to give assistance to the "Strathclyde"—in other words, the services which were rendered by the "Clan Grant" to the "Strathclyde" were not in law salvage services at all, but were services rendered in pursuance of the contract between the owners of the "Clan Grant" and the Mutual Insurance Company in which the owners of the "Strathclyde" had a jus quæsitum.

This being so, it is irrelevant and unnecessary to enquire whether the owners of the "Clan Grant" are barred by the contract from claiming remuneration as for salvage services, there being no salvage services for which remuneration can be claimed. But it is satisfactory to notice that the conclusion I have arrived at as matter of law is truly in accordance with the special contract, because I think it clearly appears from Article 25 that no remuneration for services was contemplated by the contract, except for charges and expenses; and Rule 92 of the Total Loss Mutual Steamship Insurance Company, which was referred to by the pursuers as aiding their argument, is, I think, equally clear to the effect that salvage remuneration is not contemplated as a reward to steamers insured in that Association giving assistance to vessels in distress, but only such "compensation" as may be determined by the committees of the Association, and I need hardly point out that compensation and salvage remuneration or "reward," as it is sometimes termed, are two very different things, and are arrived at in very different ways. To take one point of difference, the value of the property salved falls to be taken into account in salvage remuneration, whereas it has no place in a claim for compensation.

On these grounds, I am of opinion that the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor should be recalled, that the first plea in law for the defenders should be sustained, and the defenders assoilzied from the conclusions of the action so far as at the instance of the Clan Steam Trawling Co. Ltd., and that quoad ultra the case should be remitted to the Lord Ordinary for further procedure.—25*th February* 1908.

Appeal from the Town Council of the Burgh of Ayr in Works Committee.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Town Council of the Burgh of Ayr in Works Committee, on a petition presented by Robert Hutchison and others, under section 11 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1903. The circumstances are narrated in the following extract from the opinion of Lord Pearson aftermentioned.

"This is an appeal by the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company against a deliverance of the Town Council of Ayr sitting as the Works Committee, in a petition by certain proprietors of feuing ground for authority to form and lay out a new street on the line of an existing road known as Oswald Road.

"These proprietors are desirous of building houses on their feus, and one of them applied to the Dean of Guild for warrant to erect buildings. But it is provided by the 11th section of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1903, that the Dean of Guild shall not grant warrant for the erection of buildings abutting on any new street until warrant for the formation of such new street has been granted. Accordingly the Dean of Guild refused to grant warrant to build until the proprietors petitioned the Town Council under the same section to have Oswald Road at that part of it formed and laid out as a new street.

"Oswald Road runs in a southerly direction from the lands of Prestwick through what was formerly the burgh of Newton-on-Ayr (now merged in the burgh of Ayr), and thence to a place called Oswald Yard at Ayr harbour.

"The petitioning feuars are frontagers to Oswald Road on the east side of it for a length in all of about one-third of a mile. The frontagers on the west side of the road are the appellants (the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company) and Messrs Wylie & Co. Messrs Wylie & Co. are owners and occupiers of chemical works and stores extending along the west side of the road for about 400 feet. Their ground is practically all occupied by buildings, and they do not oppose the petition. The Railway Company, besides having a title to the road itself, as I will presently explain, are frontagers for a length of about 800 feet to the south of Wylie's works, and for a length of about 350 feet to the north of those works. For this length of 350 feet their property next the road is a field unbuilt on. For the length of 800 feet just mentioned, their railway line approaches the west side of the road. It is stated in a note to the deliverance appealed against that the line is a foot or two above the level of the road, and that there is a railway retaining and boundary wall running outside the railway and abutting hard on the proposed street.

"By section 61 of the Act of 1903, as adopted by the burgh of Ayr, it is not lawful to lay out or form any new street unless it has a width of forty feet of carriage-way and footpath, and sixty feet between the building lines. We are informed by the Town Council that the Dean of Guild being directed by the statute to refuse to pass plans of buildings abutting on an intended new street until warrant for the street has been obtained, this in practice prevents buildings being put down so as to form a street until the line and level of the street has been fixed.

"Now Oswald Road, as it exists, is an unformed road, forty feet in width, and is used by carts and foot passengers. The whole solum of the road, and indeed all the neighbouring ground, originally belonged to the old burgh of Newton. The road was at first only thirty feet wide; but at some date which does not clearly appear, it was widened to forty feet by the addition of a ten-foot strip along the east side. The original thirty-foot road was acquired by the Railway Company in 1889 by disposition in ordinary form from Mr Oswald of Auchincruive, by whose ancestor it had been acquired in feu from the magistrates of Newton in 1765, to be used as a waggon road from his coal pits to the harbour of Ayr. Both titles contain a reservation of minerals, and are granted subject also to this special provision and declaration—'that the freemen and other inhabitants of the said burgh of Newton, or others having their permission, shall not be stopped, barred, or impeded from crossing or passing over the said piece of ground hereby fewed out of the breadth foresaid from the march of the grounds belonging to the said burghs of Prestick and Newtown to the north dyke aforesaid, with their horses and carriages, leading dung to their lands, lime, sand, stones, or other materials for building or for any other lawful purposes; and free liberty to the cattle pasturing upon the Newton common to pass and repass over the same in all places. And also providing and declaring that there shall be at all times a free passage to the inhabitants of said burgh of Newtown of therty feet wide betwixt the said north dyke and the said acre and ffourteen falls of ground or thereby ffewed out.'

"It further appears from the title that the road was acquired by them in virtue of the power to purchase land for extraordinary purposes conferred by section 38 of the Railway Clauses Act 1845, and section 12 of the Company's special Act of 1865.

"By the decision under appeal, the Town Council of Ayr, sitting as the Works Committee with powers, authorised the petitioning feuars on the east side of the road to form and lay out the road as a new street ex adverso of their feuing-ground under section 11 of the Burgh Police Act 1903, the Dean of Guild Court having, as I have said, held this to be a necessary preliminary to granting the feuars a lining for their building operations.

"The petition was opposed by the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company, and they now appeal against the deliverance of the Town Council. It does not appear that there were any objections stated in detail to what is proposed. The appellants' objections go to exclude altogether the laying out of a new street at the place proposed, and in particular the assuming as part of the new street of any portion of their thirty foot road. Their position is that that is private property; that it is part of their railway; that they have already set apart and used other portions of Oswald Road for railway purposes, and that they will from time to time so dedicate and use the part of the road now in question, though they have not yet done so; and that if the feuars desire to have a new street laid out they must themselves supply the ground."

The Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1892, sect. 4 provides:

(31) "Street" shall include any road, highway, bridge, quay, lane, square, court, alley, close, wynd, vennel, thoroughfare, and public passage or other place within the burgh used either by carts or foot passengers, and not being or forming part of any harbour, railway, or canal station, depôt, wharf, towing-path, or bank.

The Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1903, sect. 103, provides:

(5) "Public street" shall, in the principal Act and this Act, mean (1) any street which has been or shall at any time hereafter be taken over as a public street under any general or local Police Act by the town council or commissioners; (2) any highway within the meaning of the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Act 1878, vested in the town council; (3) any road or street which has in any other way become or shall at any time hereafter become vested in or maintainable by the town council; and (4) any street entered as a public street in the register of streets made up under this Act.

(6) "Private street" shall, in the principal Act and in this Act, mean any street other than a public street.

The Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1903, sect. 11, provides:

Petition for warrant to form new street.—Every person who intends to form or lay out any new street, or to widen, extend, or otherwise alter any street, shall present a petition for warrant to do so to the town council, and along with the same he shall lodge a plan of the street as proposed to be laid out or altered, with longitudinal and cross sections, shewing the proposed centre, building, and kerb lines, and also the inner lines of the footway where these differ from the building lines, shewing also the levels and means of drainage, specifying the proposed material and mode of construction, and having marked upon it the names of all persons owning the street or any ground abutting thereon affected by the proposal and appearing in the valuation roll. A copy of said petition shall be served by the petitioner upon all such owners and also upon the burgh surveyor, and the town council shall within fourteen days from the presentation of the petition afford the petitioner and all other parties interested an opportunity of being heard, and shall dispose of the application as soon as possible thereafter. If it shall appear to the town council that the proposed street, or any portion thereof, or any of the details shewn on the said plan, does not fulfil the conditions required by the Burgh Police Acts, or is otherwise contrary to law or to private rights, the town council may either refuse the said petition, or grant the same subject to such alterations and modifications on the plans, or other lawful conditions, as may be necessary in the circumstances. The Dean of Guild Court shall not grant warrant for the erection of any buildings abutting on any new street until warrant for the formation of such street has been granted. The plans approved of by the town council shall, except in so far as they may afterwards be altered in terms of this section by the authority of the town council, be adhered to by the applicant and by every person erecting any building abutting on the street. In the event of no part of any new street for which a warrant has been obtained being formed or laid out within twelve months from the date of the warrant, the warrant shall lapse, and it shall be necessary before the street is formed or laid out to obtain a fresh warrant.

The Court on 7th November 1906 allowed parties a proof of their respective averments. The Opinion of the Court was delivered by Lord Pearson.

Lord Pearson [after narrating the facts as above quoted]:

The appellants point to the provision in section 11 to the effect that if the proposed street does not fulfil the statutory conditions, "or is otherwise contrary to law or to private rights," the Town Council may refuse the petition or alter the proposed plans. In the first place they maintain that the proposal is contrary to law on the ground that section 11 applies only where a proprietor seeks to have the whole thing done on his own property. Now, while the section plainly does apply to a case where a proprietor petitions for authority to make operations in suo, it is not confined to that case; and I have no doubt that where feuing-ground is bounded by a road (as we are told is the case with the titles of all the feus belonging to the petitioners), this lets in the possibility of including that road in the new street to be laid out, unless there is some specific reason for excluding it. Such reason the appellants find in the definition of the term "street" in the Burgh Police Act 1892, section 4, sub-section 31, which enacts that "street" shall include any road, etc., within the burgh used either by carts or foot passengers, and "not being or forming part of any harbour, railway or canal, station, depôt, wharf, towing-path, or bank." This road, or the portion of it in question, is (the appellants say) part of a railway, acquired by private agreement for extraordinary railway purposes; and to lay it out as a new street or part of a new street is contrary to law, seeing that it falls within the exception, and is thereby excluded from the definition of "street" in section 4. But obviously a piece of ground is not "part of a railway" merely because it belongs to a railway company; and, on a sound construction of the section, this ground does not appear to me to fall within any of the categories set forth in the words of exception. Nor do I think that the question can be solved in favour of the appellants by their statement that, as their traffic requirements demand, this road will be dedicated to and used for railway purposes, if it is clearly shewn that this is not within their power. Now this, which I think is the crucial part of the case, involves matter of fact on which the parties differ widely in their averments. They are substantially agreed as to the legal attributes of the road so far as these depend on the titles; but as to all beyond that they are entirely at variance. There are two possible results flowing from the petitioners' averments, if these are established. Either the portion of the road now in question is subject to a public right of way; or, short of that, it is subject to a servitude of way so wide and indefinite as to make it practically impossible to restrain the public from using the road. If the former alternative were set up, it might have an important bearing on the position of the Railway Company on all the matters raised on the record; and even if the lesser alternative were established, it might affect the position of the Company upon their plea that they are still entitled to dedicate this part of the road to railway purposes. I indicate no opinion as to whether or how far the position of the appellants will really be affected in these various events. I only say that it may be materially affected; and I think this is clearly a case in which we should not decide upon the appeal until the parties have an opportunity of laying the facts before us by proof or admissions.

Argued for Appellants: (1) This road was land forming part of a railway. It was acquired by agreement, and therefore was in the same position as land acquired by any other purchaser, and could not become superfluous (Caledonian Railway Co. v. City of Glasgow Union Railway Co., 1869, 7 M. 1072, 1871, 9 M. (H.L.) 115. A railway company could not acquire land except for the purpose of its undertaking. This land was acquired under compulsory powers, and was land forming part of the railway undertaking. It had been proved that the appellants were able to utilise the road by putting rails on it for railway purposes without doing anything inconsistent with the right of the public in it. It belonged to the Company; they acquired it for railway purposes, and the fact that no rails were yet laid down did not prevent it from being part of the railway. If the respondents' claim was made good, it would prevent the use of the road for the purposes to which the Company proposed to put it. The doctrine of dedication to public use had no application to cases of this kind. A town council might hold ground dedicated to public uses, such as recreation, which had been so dedicated by grant. There might be a dedication by grant for a purpose for which one could not prescribe a right, or one for which one could prescribe a right (Dyce v. Hay, 1852, 1 Macq. 305). And in the latter case a right prescribed was as good as one by grant. The present right of public user could have been acquired by prescription, and the respondents were in no better position than if it had been. The right was not inconsistent with the use of the land for railway purposes (In re Gonty v. The Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Co. [1896], 2 Q.B. 439; Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Petty, 1888, 21 Q.B.D. 273). (2) Sect. 11 of the 1903 Act did not apply in this case, the ground being part of a railway. Further, the section protected private rights, and these would be injured by the granting of this petition. The applicants were not entitled to lay out a new street on ground belonging to other people. And the erection of houses did not make a street (Mair v. Police Commissioners of Dumbarton, 1897, 25 R. 298; Stewart v. Marshall, 1894, 21 R. 1117).

Argued for Respondents: The applicants were not proposing to make a road. The road was there already. The whole question was as to the parties' rights in it. The Railway Company got the solum for extraordinary purposes, as these are described in sect. 38 of the Railway Clauses Act. They proposed to put it to ordinary railway purposes. It was originally meant to do no more than put down a tramway. The purpose to which the Company now proposed to put it would interfere with the right of the public in it. A different test was to be applied in this matter from a case where a public right-of-way crossed a line of rails and that did not interfere with the use of the line for its usual purpose (Stewart v. Greenock Harbour Trs., 1864, 2 M. 1155). This road became a private street by virtue of the Burgh Police Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. cap. 101, sect. 3), and it remained so under the Acts of 1892 and 1903. Counsel referred on this point to Campbell v. Police Commissioners of Leith, 1866, 4 M. 853; Kinning Park Commissioners v. Thomson & Co., 1877, 4 R. 528; Neilson v. Borland, King & Shaw, 1902, 4 F. 599). The test of whether the road formed part of the railway was not ownership but occupancy (Adamson v. Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Co., 1855, 4 Macq. 331; North British Railway Co. v. Greig, 1866, 4 M. 645). The Railway Company was not bound to use this ground for railway purposes, as would have been the case if they had acquired it compulsorily (Magistrates of Edinburgh v. North British Railway Co., 1904, 6 F. 620). If the land was acquired by compulsion the Company could not make a grant of a right which was inconsistent with the purpose for which it was obtained. And as it was a private street, the magistrates might prevent it being used for a railway. They had power to order the removal of any obstruction (Matson v. Baird & Co., 1878, L.R. 3 A.C. 1082). Sect. 11 of the 1903 Act did not require the applicants to do anything as a consequence of the warrant being granted. The result was merely to establish a set of rules with reference to the area of ground which the Dean of Guild found to be a new street. What the section meant was that a street in the popular sense was to be formed (Robinson v. Barton Local Board, 1882, 21 Ch. D. 621; Attorney-General v. Rufford & Co. [1899], 1 Ch. 537). The putting up of houses on the side of what came to be a street might be the formation of a new street. It was a question for the Town Council whether what was proposed to be done amounted to the laying out of a new street.

The Court sustained the appeal, recalled the interlocutor of the Town Council, and dismissed the petition.

The Lord President.—The circumstances under which the present appeal is brought have been detailed in the opinion delivered by Lord Pearson, when a proof was allowed. We have now the proof before us, and have to dispose of the petition. In my opinion the result of the proof and admissions of parties is to establish the following propositions. Oswald Road belongs, as far as the western portion of thirty feet is concerned, to the Railway Company. It is not occupied by lines, and is in fact shut off from the railway sidings or yard at that place. Over Oswald Road there exists a public right of way for traffic of every description. The result of this in law is, I think, first, that the thirty feet of roadway is not "part of the railway" in the sense of the exception to the 31st sub-section of section 4 of the Burgh Police Act, 1892, and that accordingly, second, by the combined operation of said sub-section and of section 103, sub-sections (5) and (6), of the Burgh Police Act of 1903, the road in question is a private street within the burgh of Ayr.

This makes it necessary to decide the case purely and simply on the applicability of the 11th section of the Act of 1903, under which the petition was presented. After repeated consideration I have come to the conclusion that that section does not give any powers whatever, and that it is therefore improperly invoked by one person against another. It is to be observed that although not actually so expressed, there can be no doubt that it and the succeeding section were meant to replace sections 146 et seq. of the Act of 1892. This is made clear by the repealing schedule to section 104, which repeals sections 146–148 inclusive, and also section 153. This seems to me to let in as authority the case of Mair v. Police Commissioners of Dumbarton, 1897, 25 R. 298, decided by the Second Division. The opinion of Lord Young on the point is quite clear. Speaking of the applicant, who had been told he ought to have applied to lay out a new street under section 146, Lord Young says, "he was not in a position to do so." And Lord Moncreiff says: "I am inclined to think section 146 is confined to the case of a proprietor who intends to construct a street on his own land."

Apart from authority, I think the whole phraseology of the clause leads to this conclusion. There is no indication in it of doing what no doubt the Legislature might do, but which it is never presumed it will do, giving to one person a right to proceed to do something on the property of another in invitum. The whole structure of the clause points to veto and regulation, not to authorisation. It need not be strictly confined to his own property; for there is certainly the case where there is the consent of other parties, and there might be the case of including an existing road where there was no one with rights in the solum of the road who came forward and objected. There is a sentence in the opinion of Lord Pearson which might be construed as going beyond this; but it is only the more limited construction that on the maturer consideration of the case we hold as the judgment of the Court.

1st Div.

The Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co. v. The Provost, Magistrates and Councillors of the Burgh of Ayr and Others.

The Lord President.

The result of this is that I think the present petition is in the circumstances incompetent, and ought to be dismissed. It follows, I think, that the Dean of Guild was wrong at an earlier stage in refusing de plano to grant warrants of lining. In fact, I think that part of his judgment is not in accordance with Mair's case, which probably was not brought before his notice. We were much pressed by the counsel for the respondents with the English case of Robinson v. Local Board of Barton, 1882, 21 Ch. D. 621, decided by the Court of Appeal and partially affirmed in the House of Lords. I do not think that a matter which depends purely upon statutory enactment in a complicated set of provisions can ever be much helped by decisions on quite a different statute with other provisions. The statute must be taken as a whole to see its scheme. Further, there is a great difference between applying provisions to a street when a street becomes so in fact, and applying them to a place which is only a street by virtue of definition. An instance of the difficulties which arise is well shewn by the variation made by the judgment of the House of Lords on that in the Court of Appeal. It must also be remembered that the result of our decision is not to relegate Oswald Road to a state of perpetual quagmire. As it is by virtue of definition a private street, that lets in the whole fasciculus of sections, beginning at section 133, and partly amended by the 1903 Act, under which the municipal authorities have very considerable powers.

III. Revenue—Stamp Duty — Finance Act 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. cap. 18), sect. 12—Railway Company—Stamp Duty upon Conveyance of Property Purchased under Statutory Power—"Completion of Purchase"—Production of Deed of Conveyance Duly Stamped—Opinion that Date of Completion of Purchase is Date When Purchase Price Paid.

The Pursuers reclaimed and argued: (1) This was clearly a case to which the section applied. Its application to all property authorised to be purchased was without qualification or ambiguity. The reference to the practice in previous legislation in order to put upon the words of the section an interpretation other than their plain meaning was neither necessary nor admissible. (2) The production of the deed for the purpose of stamping was not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the section. The deed had not, in fact, been produced when "duly stamped," nor was the stamping already effected final; it was still open to the Inland Revenue, and until adjudication, to challenge the deed as not duly stamped (Eastbourne Corporation v. Attorney-General [1902], App. Cas. 155; Inland Revenue v. Irvine Water Board, 1905, 13 S.L.T. 582; Attorney-General v. Felixstowe Gaslight Co. [1907], 2 K.B. 984). (3) The date of the "completion of the purchase" must be held to be that at which the purchase price is paid (Lewis v. S. Wales Railway Company (1853), 22 L.J. Ch. 207).

Argued for the Respondents: (1) The application of the section was limited to the case of previous agreements sanctioned by statute. Previous to the passing of the Finance Act it had been usual to insert in Railway Acts a provision similar to that made in sect. 12 with regard to the purchase of lands or undertakings under agreements already arrived at, but not with regard to purchases to be made under compulsory power. The object of the Act was to embody such a provision in a general statute, and the provision should not be given the wider interpretation sought to be put upon it by the reclaimer. (2) The production already made for the purpose of stamping had fulfilled the requirements of the statute; the demand of the Inland Revenue for a second production was only for the purpose of establishing a register or methods of recording conveyances for the convenience of the Department, for which the statute makes no provision. That this was the proper view of the provision appeared from the terms of the penalty clause; it was absurd to say that duty already paid should be a debt, that that which was not a debt should bear interest. (3) The Lord Ordinary was right in holding that the date of the completion of the purchase was that of the delivery of the conveyance.

The pursuers did not insist in their claim for penalty.

The Court recalled the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, and found in terms of the first conclusion of the summons; and in respect the pursuer did not now insist in the other conclusions of the summons, dismissed the same.

The Lord President.—My Lords, in this case two questions were argued to us. The first is the purely general question of whether the 12th section of the Finance Act imposes a duty upon persons, in the position of the Railway Company here, to produce, within a period of three months after the completion of the purchase, an instrument of conveyance of property where that property is acquired in respect of the exercise of compulsory powers; and then there was the second question, whether a particular conveyance by which the Caledonian Railway Company acquired St Columba's Gaelic Church in Glasgow had been duly produced to the Inland Revenue authorities.

The Lord Ordinary has discussed the first general proposition, but he has not actually come to a decision upon it. In his view, as the pursuers, the Department, were wrong upon the second question, he thought that that disposed of the conclusions of the summons; but he has, I think, indicated in his opinion a certain amount of sympathy with the view of the defenders, namely, that the provisions in the statute were not really meant to apply to cases of property taken in the ordinary manner under compulsory powers, but were meant to embody in one general statute a class of provision which in the past it had been customary to put into special statutes, where, for instance, some railway company or other great corporation took over, by special statute, the whole undertaking of some other company, and where, accordingly, the conveyance was really contained in the statutory enactment itself—a condition of circumstances which made it unnecessary to execute a formal conveyance which would, in the ordinary way, bear a stamp.

It may be, and I dare say it is, true that the historical reason, so to speak, of this section of the Finance Act was to effectuate that general object, but your Lordships, I am afraid, cannot construe statutes, when their terms are plain, by consideration of the historical reason for which they were passed. No doubt the history of a statute may often throw light upon a disputed provision; but if the language is plain, then there is nothing more to be done than to obey that language; and here it seems to me that the language is so exceedingly plain that it leaves no room for discussion. For reasons best known to itself the Legislature has gone beyond what was done before; but that it has included in perfectly plain terms not only the cases where a transference is made by virtue of a statutory provision, but also cases where transference follows upon the exercise of compulsory powers, is, I think, absolutely clear as soon as you read the words of the statute itself. The Lord Ordinary has set them forth very clearly in his note, and, leaving out the parts that do not apply, you have it enacted that when any person is authorised to purchase property in virtue of an Act—that is, the ordinary case of a railway company which has compulsory powers—such person shall within three months after the completion of the purchase produce to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue an instrument of conveyance of the property duly stamped. My Lords, that seems to me to end the whole matter so far as the first question is concerned.

I now come to the second question. If the Inland Revenue, in this case, had insisted upon the penalty, I think the case would have been one of considerable difficulty, and I confess I think I should have probably arrived at the same practical conclusion as the Lord Ordinary, although not perhaps precisely on the same grounds. But the Inland Revenue have, I think very properly, conceded that they have no intention here of asking for the penalty in this case, because what happened in the case of this title to St Columba's Church was that the title was taken to the office in Glasgow with the view of having what is really a sort of preliminary marking put upon it as to what the stamp ought to be. We have had a long enquiry in the case, which I do not think I need detail, but it comes to this, that for the convenience of everybody—and I have no doubt it is most convenient and a perfectly proper plan—the Inland Revenue are in the habit of allowing persons to bring their deeds which are going to be stamped, and to have a sort of provisional opinion given as to what the stamp should be. It is only a provisional opinion, because everybody knows that it does not carry finality. If a person wants to be perfectly certain of the amount, and to be perfectly certain that that amount will never be questioned thereafter by the Inland Revenue, there is a well-known and statutory way of doing it, namely, by asking for an adjudication stamp, and of course if he gets an adjudication stamp, then the mouth of the Inland Revenue is shut for ever upon the question of the amount of the stamp. But side by side with that, which is the method when it is wanted to make the thing absolutely certain, there is the very convenient method which I have described. Now, when the question had never been raised, it would perhaps have been rather hard if a penalty had been incurred, when the deed had been brought in this way and when it had been stamped, and, for aught seen, perfectly properly stamped,—but as I say, that question is not raised.

But when we come to the question of what is to be done in the future, it seems to me that the Inland Revenue are entitled to make their own arrangements about what is a proper production in answer to the words of the statute. I do not mean to say that if they made utterly unreasonable arrangements they could not be interfered with, but within reason they are, I think, entitled to make their own arrangements; and I can quite understand, from their point of view, that it is not such a production as they wish, namely, this bringing of the deed before it is stamped at all in order to get a certain provisional view from the officials in the office as to what the stamp should be.

My Lords, if you merely take the question literally, it is quite clear that the production of an unstamped instrument will scarcely fit the words of the statute, which puts a duty "to produce an instrument of conveyance duly stamped." And really I think all hardship is out of the matter, because there was a circular, which was brought before our notice in the case, which was sent out by the Inland Revenue and sent to the railway companies drawing attention to the provisions of sect. 12 of the Finance Act, and putting it to them perfectly clearly that it would be necessary in the future for them to produce their conveyances, in the case of lands acquired compulsorily, within three months.

Accordingly, my Lords, it seems to me that the proper disposal of the case is not to do as the Lord Ordinary has done, which is to assoilzie the defenders, but to pronounce a declaratory finding in the terms of the first conclusion which, I confess, does nothing except simply to shew that the case has been decided, because it is a mere echo of the statute, and then, in the circumstances, to find it unnecessary to dispose of the other conclusions of the case.

There is one other question which it is right we should make clear, and that is, what is the completion of the purchase. Now, the Lord Ordinary has given very cogent reasons why the completion of the purchase in cases of this sort cannot be taken to be the date of the notice. My Lords, upon the whole matter I come to the conclusion that the simple date to take as the completion of the purchase is the final payment of the price to the seller. That date seems to me to get rid of all real difficulties. It will never be too soon, because the Railway Company will take care that it does not pay the price finally until it gets a disposition from the purchaser. That it would do for its own protection. On the other hand, it will never come too late, because we can be pretty sure that the purchaser will not be content to wait for an indefinite time for his money. Accordingly, I think that is the date that is meant by completion of the purchase There was an authority quoted—Lewis v. South-Wales Railway Company, 1853, 22 L.J. Ch. 209—in which Lord Justice Turner seems to have come to the same conclusion upon a different matter, but he construed the same phrase in the same way. I do not really put that as an authority, but at the same time I think it does no harm to the conclusion at which I have independently arrived.

1st Div.

Lord Advocate v. Caledonian Railway Company.

The Lord President.

Lord M'Laren.—I concur in all that has been said by your Lordship in the chair. Upon the second point it seems to me that the date of the transaction must either be the date of the contract of sale or the date of completing the execution of the contract. Now, it could not be intended that the date of the contract of sale should be taken, because it would not always be possible to have the transaction carried through, and a stampable deed executed, within three months of the contract. I see no intermediate point of time, and it is plain that the Company, in the case supposed, would not pay the price until they were put into possession of the subjects. In the general case they have possession of the subjects under their notice before the price is paid; so that, if the date of payment of the price were taken, that necessarily would be the date of the complete fulfilment of the reciprocal obligations under the contract.

Succession — Trust Disposition and Settlement—Vesting—Vesting Subject to Defeasance—Estate to be Realised and Divided Among Children of Testator on Death of Liferentrix—Issue of Predeceasing Children Taking Share Which Would Have Fallen to their Parents—Power to Trustees to Advance Capital to Children During Subsistence of Liferent—Held Children Took a Vested Interest a Morte Testatoris Subject to Defeasance in the Event of their Predeceasing the Liferentrix Leaving Issue Who Should Survive the Liferentrix—Cairns' Trs. v. Cairns, 1907, S.C. 117, Followed—Opinions Reserved on Question Whether Defeasance Took Place in the Event of a Child Predeceasing the Liferenter Leaving Issue who also Predeceased the Liferentrix.

Special Case.

The late James Penny of Park, in the counties of Aberdeen and Kincardine, died on 22nd January 1902, possessed of estate of the value of about £20,000, of which about £19,500 consisted of heritage. He left a general settlement in the following terms:—

I, James Penny of Park . . . . appoint my wife to be my sole trustee and executrix, with power to her as trustee and executrix foresaid to borrow money on the security of my estate, either for the purpose of setting up any of my children in business or on their marriage, or for the purpose of paying estate duty, or for the proper upholding of the buildings on the estate of Park—all payments made to children being reckoned as part of their ultimate share when the same falls to be divided: And I leave my said wife the liferent of my whole means and estate of every kind, the same to be realised and divided equally on her death among my children, share and share alike, the issue of predeceasing children taking among them the share which would have fallen to their parents if in life: And I grant full powers of sale by public roup or private bargain. . . .

The truster was survived by his widow Mrs Mary Penny, who was alive at the date of the case. Mrs Mary Penny and another, as trustees under the settlement, were the first parties to the case.

The second parties were Mrs Mary Penny or Adams and others, those of the testator's children who were in life at the date of the case.

The testator was also survived by his son James Penny of Lochwood, who died on 1st November 1905, leaving a trust disposition and settlement whereby he conveyed his whole estate to trustees. The trustees were the third parties to the case.

James Penny of Lochwood was survived by his wife Mrs Jane Davidson or Penny, who was the fourth party to the case. He was also survived by three pupil children, Mary Penny and others. The tutors and curators of said pupil children were the fifth parties to the case.

The second, third and fourth parties maintained that a share of the fee of the trust estate vested absolutely in James Penny of Lochwood a morte testatoris. The fifth parties maintained that as James Penny of Lochwood had predeceased the liferentrix, no part of the trust estate had vested indefeasibly in him.

The following Question of Law was stated:—

1. Did the fee of the shares of the estate of the truster vest in his children a morte testatoris? Or Did said estate vest in the children of the truster subject to defeasance in the event of their predeceasing their mother, the liferentrix, leaving issue? Or
   Is the vesting of said estate postponed till the expiry of said liferent?

Argued for the Fifth Parties: A destination over to issue was presumed to be referable to the date of distribution (Bowman v. Bowman, 1899, 1 F. (H.L.) 69; Young v. Robertson, 1862, 4 Macq. 314). The legal result was either that vesting was suspended until the death of the liferentrix (Parlane's Trs. v. Parlane, 1902, 4 F. 805; Forrest's Trs. v. Mtchell's Trs., 1904, 6 F. 616), or that vesting took place a morte subject to defeasance in the event of the institute predeceasing the date of distribution leaving issue (Cairns' Trs. v. Cairns, 1907, S.C. 117). In view of the case of Cairns' Trs. (cit.) the latter was probably the correct view. The case of Cairns' Trs. (cit.) was directly in point, and the point that the destination over was not expressly referred to a specific date was taken in the argument. There was nothing to take the present case out of the ordinary rule. The power to advance was just as consistent with postponed vesting as with vesting a morte (Bowman v. Bowman, cit.; Fyfe's Trs. v. Fyfe, 1890, 17 R. 450, per Lord Rutherfurd Clark at p. 453).

Argued for the Second, Third, and Fourth Parties: The date to which the destination over was to be referable was not specified in the will. Apart from the case of Cairns' Trs. (cit.) there was no case where a destination over to issue in general terms had been referred to any date other than the death of the testator (Thomson's Trs. v. Jamieson, 1900, 2 F. 470; Bowman v. Bowman (cit.); Matheson's Trs. v. Matheson's Trs., 1900, 2 F. 556; Taylor's Tr. v. Christal's Trs., 1903, 5 F. 1010; Ogle's Trs. v. Ogle, 1904, 6 F. 359). Both in Parlane's Trs. v. Parlane (cit.) and Forrest's Trs. v. Mitchell's Trs. (cit.) the destination over was expressly referred to a given date. Cairns' Trs. (cit.) was decided on the authority of Provan v. Provan (1840, 2 D. 298); and the point now argued was not taken. In any view the rule that a destination over was referable to the date of distribution was excluded where a contrary intention appeared from the other clauses of the deed. In the present case the trustees were empowered to make advances to children, but not to the issue of children. If vesting were postponed that clause practically gave the trustees power to determine whether the children should take or not. That was not to be presumed, and the natural inference was that the children were intended to take a vested interest a morte testatoris (Wilson's Trs. v. Quick, 1878, 5 R. 697; Bowman v. Bowman, cit., per Lord Watson; Matheson's Trs. v. Matheson's Trs., cit.; Taylor's Trs. v. Christal's Trs., cit.).

The Court answered the second branch of the first question of law in the affirmative and the first and third branches in the negative.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—The will in this case is a very simple one, with few complications. I am of opinion that its just construction is governed, so far as the provisions of one will can be said to govern another, by the case of Cairns' Trs. (1907), S.C. 117, and that we should answer the first question by affirming its second alternative, i.e. by holding that the fee of the shares of the truster's estate vested in his children a morte testatoris, but subject to defeasance in the event of their predeceasing their mother, the liferentrix, leaving issue.

The only material facts are that the testator, Mr Penny of Park, in Aberdeenshire, died on 22nd January 1902 possessed of a heritable estate worth nearly £20,000, which was almost all he had. He was survived by his widow, who is still alive, and by four sons and four daughters. To his widow he left the liferent of his whole estate. He also appointed her his sole trustee and executrix, giving her power to borrow money on the security of his estate, either for the purpose of setting up any of his children in business, or on their marriage, or for the purpose of paying estate duty, or for the proper upholding of the buildings on the estate of Park, "all payments made to children being reckoned as part of their ultimate share when the same falls to be divided." With regard to the fee of his estate, after giving the liferent to his widow, he directed the same to be "realised and divided equally on her death among my children, share and share alike, the issue of predeceasing children taking among them the share which would have fallen to their parents if in life."

The eldest son, James Penny of Lochwood, died on 1st November 1905, having received a payment from his father's trust of £609, 17s. 9d. under the powers of the will, for the purpose of setting him up in business. He was survived by a widow and three daughters, who are still in pupillarity. It is maintained for the tutors and curators of these pupil children that their father, James Penny of Lochwood, having died before the period of division of the truster's estate, viz. the death of the liferentrix, no share of the fee vested in him, but passed to them as conditional institutes. Their mother also urges a plea which has some similarity to that stated in Cairns' case, viz. that she desires to know what her late husband was entitled to under his father's will, in order that she may decide whether to claim her legal rights or not. [His Lordship then dealt with a question not now reported.]

With regard to the question of vesting, it all turns, just as it did in Cairns' case, on the meaning to be attached to the words "the issue of predeceasing children taking among them the share which would have fallen to their parents if in life." Now when the word "predecease" or "survivorship" occurs in a will, it plainly refers to some point of time—either death before the time, whatever it may be, or survivance after the time. I find that Lord Low in his opinion, at the top of page 124, deals with the words as in pari casu, for he speaks of "there being nothing in the context to take the case out of the general rule that provisions in regard to predecease or survivorship refer to the term of payment." And the effect of the whole judgment was to hold that, while it was impossible to limit the words "any predeceasing child" to the event of the immediate child predeceasing the testator himself, it would be contrary to the current of recent decision to hold that vesting was absolutely suspended. Accordingly, we all agreed with Lord Kyllachy in the view which he had expressed in the case of Wylie's Trs., 8 F. 617, that "a contingency depending merely upon the existence or survivance of issue falls to be read as a resolutive and not as a suspensive condition." But we did not decide there—and, as I understand, we do not decide here—that defeasance necessarily takes place on the child's issue merely surviving their parent (which has happened in the case of the three children of James Penny of Lochwood) irrespective of whether or not they also survive the liferentrix (which either may or may not happen). That question was expressly reserved by Lord Kyllachy in his opinion at page 122 of S.C. (1907), and it would hardly be proper that we should attempt to decide it ab ante, since it may never arise as a practical question. I think therefore that we should reserve it here

For these reasons I am for answering the first and third branches of the first question in the negative, and the second branch of the first question in the affirmative.

Appeal against an Interlocutor of the Second Division (The Lord Justice-Clerk, Lords Stormonth-Darling, Low and Ardwall) adhering to an interlocutor of Lord Dundas.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the previous report.

The pursuers appealed.

The House, without calling on counsel for the respondents, dismissed the appeal.

The Lord Chancellor.—My Lords, I agree with the conclusion of the Second Division for one short reason. The pursuers' contention is that the works executed by the defenders could not lawfully be executed without their consent as required by sect. 217 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892. Now in my opinion that section does not touch this case at all. The Act of 1892 furnished burghs with one method of carrying out sewerage works. Another Act, the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897, furnished burghs with another method of carrying out sewerage works; and each of those methods was complete in itself. In 1901 an Act was passed which put an end to some of the differences between those two methods, and also contained a section, numbered fifth, which to my mind is the only section of that Act which really concerns us to-day. By that section a burgh obtained or retained all the powers created by the Acts of 1892 and 1897 save as altered by the Act of 1901; and the Act of 1897 was incorporated with the Act of 1892 so far as was necessary to give effect to that enactment.

In my opinion the defenders, as the result, possess the right either to proceed under the Act of 1892 (in which case the pursuers' consent was, I assume, needed) or to proceed under the Act of 1897, in which case the consent was not needed. They elected to take the latter course. The appellants cannot dispute that if this be so, their appeal must fail; but they say that the effect of incorporating the latter with the earlier Act was to qualify the powers of the latter Act by the restrictions contained in the former, and that, as consent is required by the Act of 1892, so it is now required if the powers of the Act of 1897 are exercised, because of the incorporation.

I can see no foundation for this view. Section 217 of the Act of 1892, which requires the consent, is expressed to be a restriction only as to what is contained in that Act. If the appellants' contention prevails, the mere incorporation of a later Act would make it a restriction as to what is not so contained.

I think that this is really a plain case, and that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Lord Robertson.—My Lords, I concur, and for the reasons which have been given by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

In reaching this conclusion I do not suppose that your Lordships applaud the legislation as it stands, and it is doubtful whether it is either symmetrical or even entirely coherent; but I am afraid as regards some modern legislation the maxim applies, which primarily relates to an earlier system, Non omnium a majoribus nostris constituta ratio reddi potest.

Husband and Wife—Nullity of Marriage—Impotency — Procedure — Defender in Asylum—Order for Compulsory Examination of Defender's Person.

In this action the pursuer (a wife) sought decree of declarator of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotency of the defender.

The marriage took place upon the 30th January 1900. Shortly thereafter the defender left for service in South Africa. He was invalided home in October 1900. It was averred by the pursuer that, after a period of cohabitation lasting till May 1901, the defender's health got worse and his brain came to be affected: that in September, when the pursuer was herself invalided, he was removed by relatives to a lunatic asylum; that he escaped thence, but that the pursuer never saw him, his relatives assuring her that they had taken charge of him; and that after considerable trouble the defender had been ascertained to be now a resident of Gartnavel Asylum, Glasgow. The case was undefended.

The pursuer moved the Court to appoint a medical inspection of the defender's person to take place, and to appoint certain medical men inspectors. Counsel stated that such inspection was essential to the pursuer's case, and that the practice was well settled in England, although no precedent existed in Scots law. The pursuer did not admit defender's insanity.

The Lord Ordinary granted the motion.

Lord Salvesen.—This is an action of declarator of nullity of marriage at the instance of a wife against her husband. The specialty in the case arises from the circumstance that the husband has become insane, and is in a lunatic asylum. The pursuer now asks me to appoint the defender to be medically examined with a view to corroborating her statement that the marriage was never consummated through the defender's physical incapacity. I am of opinion that this motion ought to be granted. In England, where the law on this subject is substantially the same as our own, it seems to be the regular practice for the Court to order a medical inspection of the defender, and if necessary this order will be enforced; although where the defender being sane refuses to submit to such an inspection, such refusal may in some cases be regarded as sufficient corroboration of the pursuer's evidence. As the defender is insane, I think, however, such an inspection should not take place unless with the permission of the asylum doctor. I have no information as to what is the nature of the defender's insanity, but it may well be that it is not of such a kind as to prevent his giving an intelligent and reliable account of his married life, and this might be very material in expiscating the true facts of the case.

The following interlocutor was pronounced:—"The Lord Ordinary, on the motion of the pursuer, appoints Henry Alexis Thomson, M.D., M.R.C.S., and David Wallace, M.R.C.S., both of Edinburgh, inspectors, to examine the defender with respect to the averments contained in the condescendence annexed to the summons, and to report whether he has or has not any impediment, malformation, or defect on his part such as to prevent the consummation of marriage; and whether the defender is, in the opinion of the inspectors, at the present time impotent and unable to consummate marriage, and whether such condition existed, or, in the view of the inspectors, is likely to have been in existence at the date of the marriage as libelled; and appoints the inspection to take place in Gartnavel Asylum quam primum, subject always to the asylum doctor reporting that such inspection can be made without injury to the defender's mental condition."—5th February 1908.

FIRST DIVISION.

(The Lord President, Lords M'Laren and Kinnear.)

345. Merrilees v. Leckie's Trustees.

Expenses—Reduction of Will—Trustee—Allegations Against Conduct of Trustees—Defences Lodged by Trustees—Will Reduced—Circumstances in Which Trustees, Although Unsuccessful in Defending the Deed, Awarded Expenses as Between Agent and Client.

This was an action brought by Charles Merrilees, dentist, Dublin, one of the next of kin of the deceased Mrs Annie Gordon Merrilees or Leckie, Portobello, in which he sought reduction of a will made by that lady on 27th February 1907. The grounds of reduction were (1) incapacity, and (2) impetration by Mrs Beaton, a neice of Mrs Leckie's, who was the chief beneficiary under the will in question, and her husband, an ultimate contingent beneficiary. The pursuer's statements upon record involved aspersions upon the bona fides and professional capacity of the two accepting trustees, a solicitor and a doctor, who had been called in, the former by Mr Beaton to take Mrs Leckie's instructions, and the latter by the solicitor to satisfy him that Mrs Leckie (who was, as he was informed, seventy years of age and in bed with cold) was mentally capable of giving instructions for a will.

Upon record it was stated by the pursuer, inter alia—

"Cond. 7. . . . . Mr R. is the solicitor of the defender Duncan Beaton.

"Cond. 12. The said pretended trust disposition and settlement is not the deed of the said Mrs Leckie, in respect that at the time when it bears to have been executed she was not of sound disposing mind or mentally capable of giving instructions for the disposal of her estate, or of understanding a deed purporting to deal therewith. Further, even assuming that the deceased was capable of understanding the said deed and executing it, which is denied, she was at its date weak and facile in mind and easily imposed upon; and the defenders Mr and Mrs Beaton, taking advantage of her said weakness and facility, by fraud and circumvention impetrated the said deed from her, to her lesion and the lesion of the pursuer. . . . In point of fact she did not give instructions for the preparation of the said deed, but was induced by the Beatons to sign it, being unable to resist the pressure which they exercised to get her to sign the deed, especially when a lawyer and a doctor who were both strangers to her were brought with the deed."

The pursuer made no attempt in his proof to lead evidence as to the circumstances relating to the instructions for and execution of the deed. The defenders gave a clear account of the whole circumstances, which were briefly these. Mr Beaton, after unsuccessfully attempting to interview two other law agents recommended by a friend, called on Mr R., who was also out, but with whose clerk he made an appointment for the next day. When Mr R. then interviewed him he was informed that his services were required to make a will for his (Beaton's) wife's aunt. The interview was a very short one, but Mr R., upon learning that Mrs Leckie was an elderly lady and in bed with a cold, requested that her doctor be in attendance to satisfy him as to her capacity. Being told that her late medical attendant was dead and that she had required no other since, Mr R. intimated that he would bring a doctor to examine Mrs Leckie. He engaged Dr R., a medical gentleman whom he knew slightly, and who resided near his office. Accompanied by the clerk of the former, Mr R. and Dr R. attended at Mrs Leckie's house next day, when she gave instructions for her will, which was during the visit drafted at the dictation of Mr R. and extended by his clerk in another room, and finally executed by Mrs Leckie. Both Mr R. and Dr R. were satisfied that Mrs Leckie thoroughly understood what she was doing, and Dr R., in addition to hearing all that passed, made a medical examination of her and engaged her in further conversation. Owing to Mrs Leckie's solitary social habits, she was at a loss to think of trustees, and after some discussion Mr R. and Dr R. agreed to act along with another trustee nominated originally by herself.

In spite of the clear statements of the lawyer and doctor, questions insinuating complicity in a fraud were pressed upon Mr R. in cross-examination, and his conduct was adversely commented upon in the speech of pursuer's counsel to the jury. At the close of the trial the jury found unanimously for the defenders upon the first issue (incapacity), and by a majority of nine to three for the pursuer upon the second issue (impetration by the Beatons). After the verdict was returned, Lord M'Laren, the presiding judge, intimated that the verdict involved no reflection upon Mr R., "who in circumstances of great difficulty had acted with perfect discretion."

The pursuer moved the Court to apply the verdict to reduce the deed and to find him entitled to expenses. The defenders moved to be awarded expenses as between agent and client out of the trust estate.

The Court, on the pursuer's motion, reduced the said trust disposition and settlement and found the pursuer entitled to expenses, both as against the compearing defenders (the trustees), and also against the estate of the said Mrs Annie Gordon Merrilees or Leckie; and on the defenders' motion, found the said defenders entitled to expenses as between agent and client (excepting the expenses in connection with the new trial) out of the estate of the deceased Mrs Annie Gordon Merrilees or Leckie.

The Lord President.—There are two motions here. The first, which is made on behalf of the pursuers, is to find them entitled to expenses, not only against the trustees, but also against the trust estate. In the other, that on behalf of the defenders, who are the trustees and the unsuccessful parties in the action, we are asked to allow them their expenses out of the trust estate. There is also a subsidiary question as to whether, if the trustees are allowed expenses, these expenses are to be taxed as between party and party, or as between agent and client.

As to the first, there is no question that the pursuers are entitled to their expenses against the trustees, and—apart from any difficulty as to mere matter of form—it would seem that a finding for expenses against the trustees would carry liability against the trust estate. In the present instance, however, I see no reason why the pursuers should not be allowed their expenses against both the trustees and the trust estate.

As regards the defenders' expenses, it has been pointed out on several occasions that there is no absolute rule. While I am far from wishing to countenance the idea that when a will is challenged trustees are entitled to defend at the expense of the trust estate, no matter what the circumstances may be, there is one consideration which will weigh with the Court, and it is this—"What is said about the trustees?" Now in the present case I do not think it necessary to pursue the enquiry minutely farther than to say that both Lord M'Laren, who tried the case, and my brother Lord Kinnear and myself, who gave the case very careful and special consideration, think that the trustees should be allowed expenses.

As to the scale on which these expenses ought to be taxed, it seems to me that once the trustees have been allowed their expenses these expenses really become expenses of administration and not expenses of litigation. Accordingly I do not see how we can apply to such expenses a scale which is appropriate to the domain of "litigation" and is not appropriate to the domain of "administration." No doubt the administration of an estate may have been so conducted as to disentitle trustees to any expenses, but in the present instance I see no reason why the trustees should not be allowed expenses as between agent and client.

Trust—Administration — Power to Sell Heritage—Trusts (Scotland) Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. cap. 97), sect. 3—Power Granted to Sell Church and Manse, After Congregation Amalgamated with Another, Though Contrary to Original Trust Deed.

This was a petition presented to the Junior Lord Ordinary under the Trusts Act (30 & 31 Vict. cap. 97), sect. 3, for authority to sell heritage.

The subjects were held by the petitioners in trust for behoof of the Old Meldrum United Free Church. The trust was constituted by a tack entered into in 1828 between the heritable proprietor and the managers of the United Outer House. Lord Guthrie. — Managers of the Old Meldrum United Free Church.

Associate Congregation of Old Meldrum. Said congregation became the United Presbyterian congregation of Old Meldrum in 1847, and in 1900 the Albert Road United Free Church, Old Meldrum. On 15th February 1905 the congregation amalgamated with the North United Free Church, Old Meldrum, and the united congregation is now known as the Old Meldrum United Free Church.

After this amalgamation the church and manse, built on the subjects contained in the tack, were no longer required for the congregation. This application was therefore brought for authority to sell the subjects.

The Lord Ordinary remitted to Mr H. E. Richardson, W.S., to enquire and report in the usual form.

The reporter stated inter alia that the original tack provided that "in no case whatever, excepting the foresaid extreme difficulties in which the congregation may fall" (which had not occurred), "shall the members thereof or any majority of them be at liberty at any time during the whole period of this present tack to dispose of said grounds or to use the same for any other purposes than those for which they are hereby let, namely, as sites or stances for a church or meeting house and other necessary buildings for the use and accommodation of a Presbyterian congregation in connection with the United Associate Synod of the Secession Church in Scotland."

The reporter considered that this excluded the possibility of sale, unless on the ground that the trust was self-imposed and that those who created the trust must have the power to remove it, and quoted the following cases: Craigie v. Marshall, 1850, 12 D. 523; Presbytery of Edinburgh v. De La Condamine, 1868, 7 M. 213; and Kennedy v. Morrison, 1879, 6 R. 879. He further considered that even if such a power could be granted on the latter ground, it would not be "for the execution of the trust," but for the purpose of terminating or altering the trust, and therefore the petitioners were really applying for an exercise of the nobile officium of the Court, and therefore the petition was incompetent under sect. 3 of the Trusts Act 1867. If competent, the reporter considered "the proposed sale to be highly expedient."

The Lord Ordinary held that this was a competent application under sect. 3 of the Trusts' Act 1867 and granted the prayer of the petition.

Lord Guthrie.—I think this case is ruled by the case of Downie, 10th June 1879, 6 R. 1013; the power asked in that case was not granted by the First Division under its nobile officium but because the judges thought the application fell within the terms of sect. 3 of Trusts (Scotland) Act 1867.—21*st February* 1908.

IV. Process—Bankruptcy—Bankruptcy of Owner of Ship and Assignment to a Trustee—Action of Judicial Sale—Title of Unsecured Creditor to Defend.

This action, which was one of declarator and for judicial sale of the s.s. "Abbey Holme," was raised at the instance of Robert Clark, shipowner, Glasgow, as mandatory and true and lawful attorney for William Brown, master of the said vessel, and as assignee of certain members of the crew, and as an individual, with consent of the said William Brown; and the said William Brown. The defenders called were (first) Wilfred Hine, the registered owner of the said vessel, a partner of the firm of Hine Brothers, shipowners, Maryport, as such partner and as an individual, and the said Hine Brothers; (second) W. E. Mounsey, C.A., Liverpool, trustee acting under an assignment granted by the said Hine Brothers and Wilfred Hine for behoof of their creditors in his favour dated 16th July 1907; (third, fourth and fifth) three firms who held mortgages on account current over the "Abbey Holme"; (sixth) Messrs Bowring & Co., an American firm having its principal office in New York; (seventh) Messrs C. T. Bowring & Co. Ltd., of Liverpool, who acted as agents for the said American firm in this country; and (eighth) John Simpson, marine engineer, Maryport, who had prior to these proceedings raised an action in the Sheriff Court at Greenock against the master of the "Abbey Holme" for payment of £140 of wages. Said action was defended, and at the date of closing the record in this action the process was ordered ob contingentiam to be transmitted from the inferior Court to this process. The first four conclusions of the summons were for declarator that the pursuers, or one or other of them, had a right of maritime lien over the "Abbey Holme," and were entitled to have the vessel sold. The fifth conclusion was for an order for judicial sale in the usual form.

The only defenders who lodged defences were Messrs Bowring & Co. of New York. The circumstances under which they opposed an order for sale sufficiently appear from the Opinion of the Lord Ordinary. They pleaded, inter alia, that in respect that the pursuer William Brown had been paid the sums alleged to be due to him, and in respect that his right of maritime lien was not transferable, or at all events had not been validly transferred to the other pursuer, neither of them had a title to sue the present action.

The pursuers, on the other hand, pleaded that the compearing defenders had no title to defend.

The Lord Ordinary, holding that the pursuers had a title to sue, and that the compearing defenders had no title to defend, granted decree in terms of the fifth conclusion of the summons, leaving to the pursuers to establish the specific amounts to which they were entitled to be ranked in the competition to follow the sale.

Lord Salvesen.—This is an action for the judicial sale of a steamship called the "Abbey Holme." The vessel is lying at Greenock, but hails from Maryport; and her registered owner, Mr Hine, has become bankrupt and granted an assignment for behoof of his creditors in favour of the defender, Mr W. E. Mounsey, chartered accountant, Liverpool. In such circumstances it is unusual to have an action of this kind defended, because, whenever a sale has been carried through by order of the Court, the sum realised is deposited with the clerk of court; and all creditors are given an opportunity of lodging their claims and competing, inter se, for preferential rankings if the fund should prove inadequate to pay all. In short, the action is really converted into a multiplepoinding, and all the liens and preferences which existed over the ship are ranked upon the price in their order of priority. It is therefore very seldom, where the owners have become bankrupt, that any opposition is offered to a judicial sale.

The compearing defenders are a corporation recognised and existing under the laws of the State of New York. They narrate that on 5th December 1906 the "Abbey Holme" arrived at New York in a damaged and unseaworthy condition, which made it necessary that she should go into dry dock for repairs, that they contracted with the owners to have her put into a seaworthy condition, and paid the shipbuilders' account for repairs and made other disbursements on behalf of the steamer. For those disbursements they drew a bill of exchange on Hine Brothers, the managing owners, dated 19th February 1907. This bill matured on 3rd May, and on that day Messrs C. T. Bowring & Co. Ltd. arranged to give further delay; and, in lieu of the bill which had matured, they, in their own name, drew on Messrs Hine Brothers for the same amount. The bill was duly accepted, but was dishonoured when it became due on 5th July 1907. The compearing defenders say that they relied upon the credit of the ship in making these advances; and that, according to the maritime law of the United States, and of New York State in particular, they have a maritime lien upon the ship in respect of the sums expended by them on said repairs and accessories. At the debate they did not maintain that, according to the law of Scotland or the general maritime law of Great Britain, they could maintain this claim of lien; and as I can only apply our own law in determining the ranking of claims on a British ship locally situated in Scotland, they must be treated as unsecured creditors of the bankrupt owner.

These defenders have an obvious interest in resisting a judicial sale, for if the vessel were to go to an American port they would be able to enforce their alleged lien against her there, and that possibly notwithstanding that she might have changed hands under a private sale. If, on the other hand, the vessel is sold judicially, and declared by decree of this Court "to pertain and belong to the purchaser freed and disburdened of all bonds, mortgages, liens, rights of retention and other encumbrances affecting the same," in terms of the fifth conclusion of the summons, they are apprehensive—and I think with good reason—that the maritime lien which is said to exist in their favour in America might be completely destroyed. Hence their anxiety to prevent a judicial sale taking place.

It is conceded by the pursuers that, in order to give them a title to demand a judicial sale, they must have a right and claim of maritime lien or hypothec and real burden over the "Abbey Holme." If they were mere unsecured creditors of the owner, they would be bound to lodge their claims with the trustee in bankruptcy—to whom the ship itself would belong as part of the assets of the bankrupt estate. Accordingly Mr Clark, the leading pursuer, claims to have such a lien on three heads: (1) as having paid the wages due to the master, from whom he holds a power of attorney, and who is a concurring pursuer; (2) as assignee to the wages due to some members of the crew, under an assignation No. of process; and (3) as having paid two drafts drawn by the master in favour of two companies who had supplied coals and necessaries to the vessel in foreign ports. In addition to the owner and his assignee in bankruptcy, three defenders are called who hold mortgages on account current over the "Abbey Holme." None of these persons have lodged defences to the action, and it may be assumed, therefore, that they admit the maritime lien claimed, although—in the case of the mortgages, at all events—they have a strong interest to maintain the opposite.

Outer House. Lord Salvesen.

Clark and Another v. Hine and Others.

In my opinion the compearing defenders have no title to defend. On their own statement of the facts it is plain that they are merely unsecured creditors of Hine Brothers—or of the registered owner Mr Wilfred Hine, for whom the firm acted as managers. As such they are represented by the trustee in bankruptcy, Mr Mounsey. It is said that Mr Mounsey has no interest to object to a sale, because the prior mortgages are so large as to more than absorb the estimated value of the ship, and that the defenders have the interest which I have already adverted to. That, however, in my opinion, does not entitle them to take up a position which the trustee—who represents other interests—regards as untenable. They are, no doubt, called as defenders in the present action, but that is because they claimed at that time to have a maritime lien, and, in that view, had an obvious interest in opposing the claim of the pursuers to a lien which might take priority of theirs. It having now turned out that they cannot maintain any lien—according to the law which I am bound to administer—they are in no better position than any of the other creditors of Mr Hine, who must be taken to be fully represented by the assignee in bankruptcy. On that ground alone I would be prepared to repel their defences, and to proceed in this action thereafter as if it were undefended.

The same result would follow if I hold that the pursuers have in fact a maritime lien for all or any of the sums in respect to which the claim is made. The leading ground upon which their claim is contested is that a lien for wages or disbursements is a privilege personal to the master and crew, or to the master in respect of disbursements, and cannot be assigned. No Scotch authority was quoted in support of this proposition; but I was referred to a solitary passage in the latest edition of Abbott on Shipping, and to the following cases on which it is founded: The "Lyons," 1887, 6 Asp. M.C. 199; "Bridgewater," 1877, 3 Asp. M.C. 506; "Cornelia Henrietta," 1866, L.R. 1 A. and E. 51, and "The Fair Haven," P. 67. In my opinion these cases do not support the proposition that a maritime lien for wages cannot be assigned in favour of a third party who pays the wages. All the length they go is that the Admiralty Court will not, in the ordinary case, sanction the payment of money by way of wages to the crew by a third party without his first obtaining the consent of the Court. In all these cases an action had already been instituted for judicial sale of the vessel; and Dr Lushington seems to have desired that the Court should be consulted before wages were paid to seamen in order to get rid of the expense of keeping them, if the person paying them was to be assigned into their place. That may be a useful enough rule of court, the real application of which, I rather think, is confined to cases where no assignation has been obtained from the crew, or where it is desired to stop their claims from running without their consent. But there is no case in which a person who paid the crew's wages, and obtained an assignation of their claim, was held to be in no better position than an unsecured creditor. On the contrary, I was referred to two cases: the "William Safford," 1860, Lush., P. 69, and the "St Lawrence," 1880, 5 P.D. 250, in both of which persons who had advanced money to pay claims which conferred a maritime lien, were ranked on the proceeds of the ship in the priority to which the cedents would have been entitled; and I cannot see any principle on which a claim for money against a shipowner, secured by a maritime lien, should not be capable of assignation like any other money claim with its relative securities. It is no doubt true that a maritime lien differs from many other forms of security, in that it may be insisted in to the prejudice of a purchaser of a ship who has no knowledge of its existence, but unless a maritime lien followed the ship after it had changed owners it would really be valueless, and the assumed hardship is not materially increased by holding that the assignee of such a right may enforce it equally with the original holder. The hardships the other way are much more conspicuous. The result of the Solicitor-General's argument would be that the representatives of a master or a seaman who had a good maritime lien for wages, would not have the benefit of that lien to enforce payment of their author's claim. Besides, it would lead to great extra expense if such a doctrine were to be recognised, as crews could not be paid off by a bondholder or other secured creditor, to whose claim the wages were preferable, until the sanction of the Court had been obtained to his doing so by some form of process which has yet to be invented.

A further argument was offered on the footing that the pursuers' various claims were not sufficiently vouched. In my opinion, at all events so far as the master's claim and the claim for disbursements are concerned, there is no substance in this objection. The account for coals supplied at Las Palmas, to take only one instance, and the draft by the master in favour of the coal company, are both produced; and, in the absence of any specific attack, I think this must be treated as conclusive, at all events for the purpose of entitling the pursuers to have the vessel judicially sold. I shall accordingly grant a decree in terms of the fifth conclusion of the action, leaving to the pursuers to establish the specific amounts to which they are entitled to be ranked in the competition which will follow.—25th January 1908.

Cases.

These were two appeals from decisions of the Magistrates of Edinburgh. They were both heard and decided together.

Charles Jenner & Company's Case.

At a Court of the Magistrates of the City and Royal Burgh of Edinburgh, held at Edinburgh on 12th September 1907, to dispose of appeals against valuations made by the Burgh Assessor for the year ending Whitsunday 1908, under the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Acts, Charles Jenner & Company, silk mercers, &c., 47 Princes Street, Edinburgh, appealed against an entry in the Valuation Roll of the Burgh of Edinburgh, of house, shop, &c. at a rent of £8780. The appellants craved that the entry in name of yearly rent or value should be £6000 instead of £8780.

The case set forth :—

1. The appellants are owners and occupiers of a large block of buildings fronting Princes Street on the south, St David Street on the east, and Rose Street on the north. The buildings have a frontage to Princes Street of about 80 feet, to St David Street of 230 feet, and to Rose Street of 99 feet. The main portion of the building, viz. that fronting Princes Street and extending northwards along St David Street for about three-fourths of the distance to Rose Street, was erected in or about the year 1895. The premises forming the back portion were completed in 1905. The area covered by the buildings extends to 2324 square yards; the total floorage area of the buildings is 106,490 square feet; and the cubic contents 2,000,000 cubic feet.

Charles Jenner & Company v. Assessor for Edinburgh.

The North British and Mercantile Insurance Company v. Assessor for Edinburgh.

2. The main portion of the building consists of nine floors, including a basement and a mezzanine floor. The back portion consists of eight floors, including a basement floor. The appellants occupy the whole buildings in connection with their business of drapers, silk mercers, etc. The main floors are used as shops and saloons and the upper floors as workrooms and a boarding residence for the firm's employees.

3. The cost of erecting the buildings, exclusive of the cost of embellishments, was £70,000.

4. The main portion of the building was completed in 1896, and the total assessment at that time was £6450, being £6000 for the newly-erected portion and £450 for the old buildings on the site now occupied by the back portion. The valuation remained at that figure till 1904, when it was reduced to £6000 in respect that the old buildings were being removed and the present back portion was being erected. After this reconstruction was completed in 1905 the valuation was fixed by the Assessor and acquiesced in by the appellants at £7250 — £1250 being added for the then new buildings. The Assessor raised the valuation for the year ending Whitsunday 1908, because on a comparison with premises in Princes Street actually let he was of opinion that the valuation of £7250 was quite inadequate.

5. There are in Princes Street ninety shops and offices actually let and thirty-two shops and offices occupied by proprietors. The valuation of many of the latter has not been considered in recent years, and the rents of premises let in Princes Street have undergone considerable increase within the last few years. The Assessor is in course of scrutinising the assessable value of all the subjects occupied by proprietors with a view to bringing the whole premises in Princes Street to one level of valuation, but he has not yet overtaken the revisal of the whole of such premises.

The Assessor arrived at his valuation of £8780 by taking the floorage area of each floor of the appellants' premises and applying thereto varying rates per square foot. These rates were based upon an analysis of the rents actually paid for the premises in Princes Street referred to in the Assessor's evidence. The Assessor further took as a check upon the sum thus arrived at, the figure yielded by taking percentages upon the site value and the cost of the buildings, and he found that this figure exceeded the sum of £8780.

The appellants contended that the valuation should be arrived at by a comparison of the valuations as appearing in the Valuation Roll for the year to Whitsunday 1908 of the most comparable premises in Princes Street, whether such premises were actually let or occupied by the proprietors, and whether or not in the latter case the valuations had been recently scrutinised by the Assessor and adjusted or fixed.

The magistrates, having heard the evidence and the arguments for the parties and considered the whole circumstances, were of opinion—

1. That the appropriate method of arriving at the valuation of the appellants' premises for the purposes of the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Acts is by comparison with such other premises in Princes Street as most nearly resemble them in situation, character, and accommodation, provided such other premises are actually let, and that an important factor in instituting a comparison with such other premises is by means of ascertaining the rate per square foot of floorage space for each floor or part of a floor of such similar premises and applying these rates to the floorage areas of the present premises, subject to such variations as may be necessary to give effect to the specialities of the present case, and in particular the advantage of having a frontage to three streets and the disadvantages connected with the large number of floors.

2. That while, as an alternative to the method of ascertaining the value by comparison with other premises, it is sometimes expedient, where the owner has erected buildings for his own occupation and there are no similar let properties in the neighbourhood available for comparison, to enquire what interest or return an owner might reasonably expect upon his outlay if the building had been erected for letting to a tenant, and regard this as an equivalent of rent, it is not necessary or appropriate to adopt this alternative in the present case.

The Magistrates, taking the whole circumstances into account, and acting in accordance with the opinions above set forth, resolved to fix the rental in the Valuation Roll at £8000.

The appellants obtained a case for the opinion of the Valuation Judges.

The respective contentions of the parties were set forth in the case as follows:

The appellants contended that their premises not being let but being in their own occupation, the fair method of arriving at their annual value was by a comparison with the rental or assessed annual value of other similar premises in the immediate vicinity. The appellants' premises consisted of a front portion abutting on Princes Street, 784 square yards in area, a middle portion, 1018 square yards in area, and a back portion, 522 square yards in area, the front and middle portions having been erected in 1895, and the back portion in 1904. As regards the new back portion, this had been valued in 1905, immediately after its erection, at £1250, and had remained at this figure in 1906, but although no change of circumstances had taken place, the Assessor proposed to supersede this recent valuation, and value the back portion at £1514, 16s., an increase of £264, 16s. As regards the middle portion it was conceded that this portion fell to be entered at half the rate fixed for the front portion. The main controversy was as to the valuation of the front portion, and comparison with similar neighbouring premises showed that the Assessor had valued this portion at an excessive figure. The neighbouring premises which were most nearly comparable with the front portion of the appellants' premises were those of Messrs Cranston & Elliot Ltd., assessed at £3000; Messrs John Wight & Co., presently let at £1400; Messrs Henry Darling & Co., let at £875; and Messrs Cowan & Strachan, let at £850. All of these premises were situated in Princes Street, and were occupied in each case by a single firm from roof to basement, as was the case with the appellants' premises. If the front portion of the appellants' premises were valued at the same rate proportionally to area as the premises mentioned, the middle portion at half that rate, and the back portion at £1250, the valuation would not exceed £6000. If this result were tested by taking the rate per square foot of the floorage area, and per cubic foot of the cubical contents of the premises compared, and applying the same to the appellants' premises, a figure practically identical would be reached. While the appellants' premises had the advantage of a frontage to South St David Street, this was counterbalanced by the fact that the proportion of floorage area to frontage to Princes Street was very much larger in the case of the appellants' premises than in the case of any of the premises compared. A large amount of back floorage, proportionally to street frontage, rendered premises much less marketable. Moreover, in the particular case of Messrs Cranston & Elliot Ltd., the frontage to Princes Street exceeded the appellants' frontage by 13 feet.

The appellants further contended that the Assessor had erred in the method of comparison adopted by him. He had merely taken the average floorage rates of a number of other premises in Princes Street, and applied these rates to the corresponding floors in the appellants' premises. Apart from the objection that floorage rates by themselves afforded no satisfactory guidance, the average rates which the Assessor had taken were in no case derived from premises occupied by a single firm from roof to basement. On the contrary, his floorage rates for the street or shop floor were taken, with a single exception, from premises where the occupier occupied only that floor. As the street floor was by far the most valuable, and if let separately commanded a much higher rent proportionally than if let along with and as part of a whole tenement, the rates selected by the Assessor for comparison afforded no criterion for the valuation of the street floor of the appellants' premises, which were occupied as a unum quid from roof to basement.

While the method of taking a percentage on cost was not regarded by the Court as a sound system of valuation, the appellants' premises had been greatly over-valued by the Assessor on this basis also. The site had been independently valued within two years at £100,000, and the cost of the buildings, apart from embellishments, it was agreed, might be taken at £70,000 or thereby. At the rate of 3 per cent. on the site value and 4 per cent. on the structural cost, which were fair rates in the case of so large and unmarketable a concern, the figure of £5800 was reached.

The appellants' premises, after their completion in 1905, had been valued at £7250, which the appellants considered excessive, but against which they did not at the time appeal, and the proposed increase of £1530 on this very recent valuation was not justified by any change of circumstances whatever. If the valuation of Princes Street premises generally was to be revised, it was appropriate that the valuations of old standing should first be dealt with, and in any event it imposed an unfair burden on the appellants in competition with their trade rivals to single out their premises for increased valuation this year, in place of proceeding by way of a comprehensive and simultaneous scheme of re-valuation of all business premises in Princes Street.

The Assessor contended that the valuation arrived at by the Magistrates should not be interfered with. The Assessor had arrived at a figure appreciably higher on a basis which he maintained was fair, but he did not quarrel the valuation arrived at by the Magistrates.

The Assessor submitted that as many of the valuations in Princes Street had not been revised for many years, it was proper for him to undertake the revisal of these as early as possible.

The Assessor submited that the best criterion for assessing the value of the appellants' property in Princes Street was a comparison with the subjects actually let in the vicinity.

In Princes Street ninety of the premises were actually let, while thirty-two were in the occupation of proprietors. The Assessor, therefore, analysed each separate let subject and arrived at figures or rates applicable to each flat of the different tenements, which rates having been taken from many varied subjects gave a fair indication of the values applicable to each flat of all the tenements in the street. He was then, he considered, in a position to proceed by comparison to adjust the value of the appellants' subjects.

The Assessor, though unable to overtake the complete re-valuation of the whole street in this year, was able to revise a considerable number of the valuations of subjects lying between the east end of Princes Street and Hanover Street. In all, the Assessor had revised nine such valuations. After conference with the Assessor, Messrs Thomas Methven & Sons, 15 Princes Street; Andrew Elliot, 17 Princes Street; Sun Fire Office, 40 Princes Street; John Dickson, 63A Princes Street; Edinburgh Café Co., 70 Princes Street; and H. C. Baildon & Sons, 73 Princes Street, acquiesced in valuations practically on the basis proposed by the Assessor in this case. Messrs Romanes & Paterson, who appealed to the Magistrates, had acquiesced in their decision, which applied the Magistrates' decision in this case proportionately to their smaller premises, and were not to proceed further.

The Assessor contended that he had adopted the only method for valuing a large block of buildings such as that of the appellants, viz. by comparison and applying floorage rates taken from premises actually let. He had arrived at his valuation by taking rates from subjects actually let and in the immediate vicinity of the appellants' premises, whereas the appellants founded upon instances of valuations—as distinguished from lets—and of subjects which lay at a considerable distance from the premises in question.

The appellants' premises had been the subject of two previous separate valuations—one after the front portion was completed in 1895 and the other after the back portion was completed in 1905. When the last mentioned valuation was made, the sum arrived at was simply added to that of the former. The Assessor considered that in fairness he was bound to look at the premises as a whole, and the result was shewn by the table incorporated in his evidence giving the areas and the various rates applicable to each.

The Assessor contended that the appellants' premises could not in any case be considered as having any back portion, as the so-called "new portion" and "back portion" had very valuable frontage to St David Street. He did not admit that the mid-building should be charged at half rates, nor did he admit that the "back portion" should be taken as of a fixed value of £1250. This sum was apparently taken because of its being the valuation placed upon the last erected portion of the premises, and when this sum was fixed it was simply added to the former valuation of the older erection. The Assessor contended that the premises must be valued as a whole; and further, that the appellants could not assume the value of the back premises taken in connection with and as a part of an entire building to be £1250, unless they were able to shew that that sum represented the true value, and this they made no attempt to prove.

As an additional test of the valuation arrived at, as above pointed out, the Assessor applied the test of cost, and this worked out at £9500. In making this additional test the Assessor assumed the value of the area to be £150,000, and the building £70,000, exclusive of any consideration for embellishments. The appellants virtually admitted the latter sum to be correct, and the Assessor submitted that his valuation of the site was justified by the values spoken to in the proof as having been actually paid for sites in the vicinity, and other evidence.

Taking the figures assumed by him, the Assessor took 4 per cent. on the value of the site, . £6000 and 5 per cent. on the buildings, exclusive, as above-mentioned, ... 3500

Making . . £9500

He was thus satisfied that his method of valuation by comparison and application of rates of floorage was reasonable, and he accepted the lower figure in the table in fixing the valuation.

The Assessor further contended that the usual percentage rate applied in Scotland is 4 per cent. on land, and 5 per cent. on buildings. The percentages of 3 per cent. and 4 per cent. were not applicable to the present case.

The Assessor further contended that he could not be expected to revise the whole of such an extensive street as Princes Street in one year, and he did not admit that he was bound by any particular mode of procedure in dealing with subjects coming into his valuation, or that he ought to withhold any number of valuations from the Roll from year to year until he has completed a street. The logical issue of such a principle would require him to hold over the valuation until a district, or even the whole of the city, was revised and put on the same footing. He contended that so soon as he was satisfied that the valuation of any single subject in the city required to be altered he was bound to enter such new valuation in the Roll. He further contended that any arguments drawn from comparison with unrevised premises in Princes Street being obsolete, valuations fell to be disregarded.

The Assessor submitted that the valuation as fixed by the Magistrates was fair and reasonable in comparison with other subjects in the vicinity, and that the appellants had not proved that their determination was wrong in principle or unfairly applied.

The passage in the evidence of the Assessor referred to in the case was as follows:

I based my valuation on certain rates I have given, and applied them to the floorage area. These rates I justify by comparison with actual lets in Princes Street. The figure of 10s. which I give for the street floor in my valuation of Jenner's I justify by a comparison with the nine cases I gave. The case of Mackay & Chisholm brings out 9s. 10½d.; Goodson's, 10s. 2d.; Dow, 12s. 8d.; Duncan, 10s. 9d.; Lennie, 19s.; Stanley, 10s. 6d.; Crouch, 10s. 9d.; Milne, 10s. 8d.; Renton's, 11s. These are all for street floors. These are all in Princes Street, but they are not all back 50 feet. In each of the nine cases the premises are let. Roughly speaking, the rates I have taken apply to the floorage given in each of the nine cases of rent. With reference to the other rates I apply to Jenner's, if required I can by reference to one or other of these nine cases shew that in each case my rate is warranted, with the exception of the basement, which in my estimate of Jenner's is too low. Coming to the nine cases which are actually let, I have applied my rates in each one of the cases. In the case of Mackay & Chisholm I have applied my rates and got £905, 14s. 6d., and the rent is £905. Applying my system to the case of Goodson's I get in my rates at £1001, and the let price is £1000. In the case of Dow my rates give £501, whereas it is let at £500. In the case of Duncan my rates give £551, and it is let at £550. In the case of Lennie the figures come out exactly. In the case of Stanley my rates applied give £1232, and the rent is £1235. In the case of Crouch my rates are £374, actual let £375. In the case of Milne my rates give £302, and they let at £300. That leaves only the case of Renton. In the case of Renton my rates work out at £2237, whereas the let is £2210. My view is that the system I have taken as evidence is fair when applied to the premises let, as it shews exactly the same as the rent.

Counsel for the appellants argued that all premises of a similar nature ought to be taken into consideration in making a comparison, whether they were let or occupied by their owners, and cited M'Vitie v. Assessor for Edinburgh, 1898, 25 R. 601.

Counsel for the Assessor argued that the case of M'Vitie had no application, as there were in that case no similar premises let at all.

The Valuation Judges were of opinion that the determination of the Magistrates was wrong, and that the annual valuation should be reduced to £7250.

The North British and Mercantile Insurance Company's case.

At a Court of the Magistrates of the City and Royal Burgh of Edinburgh, held at Edinburgh on 12th September 1907, to dispose of appeals against valuations made by the Burgh Assessor for the year ending Whitsunday 1908, under the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Acts, the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company, incorporated by Royal Charter and special Acts of Parliament, appealed against an entry in the Valuation Roll of the Burgh for the year ending Whitsunday 1908, of their office at 64 Princes Street, at a rent of £5500.

The appellants craved that the entry in name of yearly rent or value should be £2000 instead of £5500.

The case set forth:

The following facts were admitted or held by the Magistrates to be proved, or within the knowledge of the Magistrates:—

1. The appellants are owners and occupiers of the premises forming No. 64 Princes Street, the building of which has been completed since the Valuation Roll for the year 1906–7 was made up. The building is rectangular in shape, having a frontage of 102 feet to Princes Street, and extending northwards 114 feet to Rose Street Lane. The area covered by the buildings is 1632 superficial yards in extent, and the gross floorage area of the building is 49,175 square feet. The building consists of three sections, viz.: (1) a front block facing Princes Street, containing a basement floor, a street floor, and three flats and an attic flat above; (2) a centre block containing a ground floor and basement under; and (3) a back block adjoining Rose Street Lane containing a basement floor and three storeys above. The front wall of the section facing Princes Street is separated from the street by a recess or area, and the ground floor of that section is raised 4 feet 6 inches above the level of the street.

2. The whole building is occupied by the appellants for the purposes of their business of a fire and life insurance company. The street and upper flats of the front section contain a board-room and accommodation for the officials and clerks of the company; the middle section is used as a public office, and the back block as offices, lunch-rooms, cloak-rooms, and lavatories. The basement floors consist of storage accommodation, safes, etc.

3. The value of the site upon which the buildings are erected is £82,000, and the cost of the buildings, excluding the cost of embellishments, is £48,000.

4. Prior to the erection of the present buildings, the site was covered by old buildings, consisting of four storeys owned by the appellants and occupied partly as shops let to tenants, and partly as offices used by the appellants for the purposes of their business. The shops occupied about one-half of the frontage to Princes Street on the ground floor. The whole buildings were then assessed at £3025, of which £1400 represented the rent paid for the shops.

There are in Princes Street ninety shops and offices actually let and thirty-two shops and offices in the occupation of proprietors. The valuations of many of the latter have not been considered in recent years, and the rents of premises let in Princes Street have undergone considerable increase within the last few years. The Assessor is in course of scrutinising the assessable value of the subjects occupied by proprietors with a view to bringing the whole of the premises in Princes Street to one level of valuation, but he has not yet overtaken the revisal of the whole premises, and in particular has reconsidered none of the premises in the section of Princes Street west of Hanover Street.

The Assessor arrived at his valuation of £5500 in the following manner. He took the floorage area of each floor of the appellants' premises and applied thereto varying rates per square foot. The rates were based upon an analysis of the rents actually paid for the premises in Princes Street, referred to in the Assessor's evidence, after allowing for the differences in construction, character, and purpose. This method gave a valuation of £5273. He then calculated the value on the basis of taking percentages upon the value of the site and the cost of the buildings, and this gave a valuation of £5680. The figure inserted in the Valuation Roll was arrived at by taking the average of these two sums.

The appellants maintained that the method of valuation by cost was not applicable, and that the true method was by comparing the building with others in the city of about the same size and used for a similar or somewhat similar purpose. They supported their figure of £2000 by a comparison by means of floorage rates of certain premises in George Street and St Andrew Square, occupied as offices of insurance companies, and with buildings in the section of Princes Street west of Hanover Street, occupied by the proprietors as club premises.

The Magistrates, having heard the evidence and the arguments for the parties and considered the whole circumstances, were of opinion—

1. That the appropriate method by which to arrive at a valuation of the premises in question, for the purposes of the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Acts, was by comparing them with other premises in Princes Street, and that an important factor in instituting a comparison of other premises in Princes Street with the present premises is by means of ascertaining the rate per square foot of floorage space for each floor, or part of a floor, of such other premises as are actually let, and applying such rates to the corresponding floorage areas of the appellants' premises, subject to such variations as may be necessary to give effect to the specialities of the present case, particularly the use made of the premises, the fact that the frontage to Princes Street is recessed and that the ground floor is raised above the level of the street, and the number of flats occupied by the appellants.

2. That in respect there are no very similar premises available for comparison with the building in question, the Magistrates are entitled to enquire what interest or return should reasonably be expected upon the value of the site and the outlay on the buildings, if the buildings had been erected for letting to a tenant, and regard the result, not as the rental to be inserted in the Valuation Roll, but merely as a check upon the result obtained by the comparison of floorage rates above specified. If the method now indicated were adopted, it would give a larger sum than the valuation appealed against.

The Magistrates, taking the whole circumstances into account, and acting in accordance with the opinions above set forth, resolved to fix the rental in the Valuation Roll at £5000.

The appellants obtained a case for the opinion of the Valuation Judges.

The respective contentions of the parties were set forth in the case as follows:

The appellants contended that the yearly value put upon their premises was excessive, and was arrived at upon an erroneous principle and by an improper method of valuation.

The Assessor proposed to value the said premises at £5500 yearly. This figure he reached by applying to the floorage area of the appellants' premises a rate per foot obtained from the rental, not of offices, but of shops in Princes Street—that is to say, by considering what rental the appellants' buildings would yield if converted into shops; and by arbitrarily dividing the difference between the figure so arrived at—£5273—and a sum equal to 4 per cent. on the estimated cost of the site and 5 per cent. on the estimated cost of the buildings—£5680. There was no principle on which this method of valuation could be justified. In the first place, it had been frequently decided that the cost of the subjects formed no good guide for determining the yearly rent which they would bring, and further, the rates selected by the assessor of 4 and 5 per cent. on site and buildings respectively was purely arbitrary and was excessive. In the second place, it was an erroneous method of valuation to take into account what the premises would yield, if turned to some other use from that to which they were presently applied. Both of these tests of yearly value were expressly disapproved in the case of the North British Railway Co. v. Assessor for Edinburgh, 1905, 7 Fraser 435. It was impossible, therefore, to reach any proper conclusion by arbitrarily splitting the difference between the results arrived at through these two erroneous methods of valuation. Further, it was notorious that premises in Princes Street, let as offices, would not yield the rental which they would obtain if let as shops, and instances might readily be found in the Valuation Roll showing that banks and offices in Princes Street were assessed at less than similar premises occupied as shops. The appellants did not expect, nor obtain, any advantage, as shops did, from passing traffic; their premises were designed only for offices, and by reason of the fact that the building was recessed from the street and that the first floor was built several feet above the street level, they could not conveniently be used for shops. Cook's tourist office, to which the Assessor referred, was really a shop and did reap an advantage from its prominence and accessibility to the passers-by. It therefore afforded no proper comparison.

But even if it were legitimate to take the rental of shops in Princes Street as the basis of comparison, the examples founded upon by the Assessor afforded no guide for the valuation of the appellants' premises. In most cases they consisted of shops occupying only a ground floor, which were universally highly rented as compared with shops containing several floors, and yielded rents which could not be obtained in the same proportion for premises like those of the appellants, which, from floor to roof, were in one occupancy. In some cases, again, they were shops of little depth from the street and afforded no ground of comparison, because the less the depth in proportion to the frontage the higher was the rent. Further, while in the case of shops extending to a greater depth than 50 feet from the street, the Assessor diminished the rate by one-half on the further back portions of the buildings, he made no such diminution in the case of the appellants' premises. Finally, all the rates put upon the different portions of the premises selected by the Assessor were purely arbitrary and were founded upon no ground of fact.

The appellants contended that the most reliable basis for the valuation of their subjects was to be found in the valuation of similar buildings used as one tenement for the same purposes. Such examples were to be found in the cases of the Standard Insurance office and the Scottish Equitable Insurance office. If the rate of valuation per foot of the floor area of the first of these offices were taken, the appellants' premises would be valued at £2088, and if the rate of the second were applied the result would be £2007. The offices referred to were respectively in George Street and St Andrew Square; but insurance offices obtained no advantage from being in Princes Street, and there was no ground for assuming that insurance companies would pay a higher rent for offices in the one street than in the others. In the case of the Life Association Insurance offices, which were in Princes Street, the rent at which they were let on the first floor is 1s. 4d. per foot, and of the shops on the ground floor 4s. 5d. per foot. Similarly the offices on the first floor of the Palace Hotel buildings fetched a rent of 1s. 5d. per foot. If these rates were applied to the appellants' premises the total rent would be under £2200.

No buildings in any way similar to those of the appellants were entirely occupied as offices in Princes Street. The nearest examples of similar blocks of buildings occupying similar sites were the New Club, the Conservative Club, and the University Club.

Lands Valuation Appeal Court.

Charles Jenner & Company v. Assessor for Edinburgh.

The North British and Mercantile Insurance Company v. Assessor for Edinburgh.

Taking the present valuation of these Clubs, the yearly value per foot of floor area worked out at 10·02d. per foot in the case of the New Club, 10·23d. per foot in the case of the Conservative Club, and 8·45d. per foot in the case of the University Club. If these rates were applied to the appellants' premises they would give valuations of £1932, £1972, and £1731 respectively.

The appellants accordingly contended that in accordance with these figures and the evidence adduced by them, their premises should not be entered in the Valuation Roll at more than £2000.

The Assessor contended that, in the absence of any buildings quite analogous in Princes Street, he had acted correctly in applying the principle of floorage space, checked by cost. This he submitted was a correct basis, and in so far as it bore hardly on the appellants, was amply corrected by the deduction made from his valuation by the Magistrates.

The Assessor submitted that, as many of the valuations in Princes Street had not been revised for many years, it was proper for him to undertake the revisal of these as early as possible.

The Assessor submitted that the best criterion for assessing the value of the appellants' property in Princes Street was a comparison with the subjects in the vicinity.

In Princes Street, ninety of the premises were actually let, while thirty-two were in the occupation of the proprietors. The Assessor therefore analysed each separate let subject, and arrived at figures or rates applicable to each flat of the different tenements, which rates having been taken from many varied subjects, gave a fair indication of the values applicable to each flat of all the tenements in the street. He was then, he considered, in a position to proceed by comparison to adjust the value of the appellants' subjects.

The Assessor, though unable to overtake the complete re-valuation of the whole street in this year, was able to revise a considerable number of the valuations of subjects lying between the east end of Princes Street and Hanover Street; in all, the Assessor had revised nine such valuations.

The application of the rates before mentioned to the appellants' premises, brought out a total of £5273, 11s. 9d. The Assessor proceeded to check the result on the "cost" principle. He accepted the figures supplied to him by the manager of the appellants' company, viz.:—

Say £82,000 at 4 per cent., . . and buildings £52,000—less allowance for embellishments £4000—£48,000 at 5 per cent., . .	£3,280	0	0

and in fixing the valuation of £5500 he split the difference between the result obtained by measurement and that obtained by cost, making practically £5500.

The Assessor referred to his evidence, in which he distinctly stated that his valuation was based on the "floorage" principle, and that he used the "cost" principle as a check. He did not value the appellants' premises at what they might bring if turned to some other use than that for which they were specially designed and intended, and he did not base his valuation on the "cost" principle, although he considered he was justified in using that principle as a check on the figures otherwise arrived at by him.

Under the former valuation, prior to the erection of the new building, the assessments stood at £3025. The additional value of the new building brought the valuation up to at least £5000.

The Assessor believed that a sum of about £52,000 was spent in demolishing the old buildings and erecting the new ones. He submitted that, this being so, the subjects fell to be entered as at least £5000.

The Assessor did not admit that premises in Princes Street let as those premises were did not yield the same return as shops. Such subjects as were let for offices yielded as high rents as similar subjects when otherwise occupied.

The analogy of insurance buildings elsewhere than in Princes Street had, the Assessor submitted, no bearing, and the valuation of clubs in Princes Street—whose values were as yet unrevised by him—were, he submitted, of no value at all.

The Assessor submitted that, in the absence of any building quite analogous, he acted correctly in going by floorage space, checked by cost. This he submitted was an accurate basis, and, in so far as it bore hardly on the appellants, if it did so at all, was amply corrected by the reduction made by the Magistrates.

The passage in the evidence of the Assessor referred to in the case was as follows:

In the case of Jenner's I took nine concrete cases of analogous premises in Princes Street, and these are available for reference in the present case. I have considered the North British and Mercantile flooring space. Taking first the basement floor, the cellars under the front pavement give 810 feet at 3d. per foot, £10, 2s. 6d. The general stores on the basement floor, 9983 feet, taken at 6d., give £249, 11s. 6d. These two rates are very ordinary rates, and are to be found in a large number of the nine cases alluded to. These are inferior properties. The rates are extremely low—6d. for general stores is very low. Coming to the most valuable part of the place, the street floor, front block in centre, 3537 feet at 7s. 6d., yields £1326, 7s. 6d. The centre portion, 5298 feet at 7s. 6d., gives £1986, 15s. It is rather difficult in the nine instances given in the previous case to find anything exactly analogous to that, so I have prepared a list of the cases I considered analogous. The 7s. 6d. is arrived at, or rather a less sum than 10s. is taken, because the street floor in this instance is up some steps, making it less convenient; on that account I make an allowance of 2s. 6d. Q. Are there any other cases in which you have adopted the same course?—A. There are some older shops in Princes Street where there are steps. In these cases the rental yields somewhat less than 10s. For instance, 41A Princes Street yields 7s. 6d. That is a shop where you have to ascend several steps. At 73 Princes Street, Baildon, you have to ascend five steps, 7s. 6d. is the rate. In Stevenson's, where there are three steps, the rate is 7s. 3d. I point to these as justifying the variation from the 10s. rate I here make.

The Valuation Judges were of opinion that the determination of the Magistrates was right.

Lord Low.—These cases have been extremely well argued, and as I have formed an opinion on both of them, in which I understand your Lordship agrees, I think it is best that we should dispose of them at once.

Taking in the first place the case of Jenner & Co., I agree with the statement of the Magistrates that the appropriate methods of valuation "is by comparison with such other premises in Princes Street as most nearly resemble them in situation, character and accommodation."

Now it happens that there are a number of premises in Princes Street which are as similar in character, situation, etc., as one is likely to find. I refer to those of Wight & Co., Cowan & Strachan, Henry Darling & Co., Renton & Co., and Cranston & Elliot. A comparison with these has made on my mind a strong impression that the amount at which the appellant's premises have stood in the Valuation Roll for some time, viz. £7250, is a fair yearly value for them in their present condition.

It is said that the main part of the building has stood at the same figure (namely, £6000) in the Roll for twelve years. Now that is true, but then in 1905 the valuation was reviewed by the Assessor and fixed at the above-mentioned sum of £7250.

Now I confess I can find no evidence of change of circumstances to warrant the increase which the Assessor proposes to put on the premises for the present year. But, on the other hand, no circumstances have been stated to warrant their being entered at a lower figure than formerly. I propose therefore that we hold that the determination of the Magistrates is wrong, and that the premises should be entered in the Roll as formerly at £7250.

Coming to the case of the North British and Mercantile office, the first observation which I desire to make is that it appears to me that the figure of £2000 suggested by the Insurance Company is altogether inadequate. It is difficult to find a basis for assessing the value of this subject, as there are no other premises in Princes Street, used as offices, at all comparable with it. I entirely agree with the Assessor that you cannot value premises in Princes Street at a value put on similar subjects in George Street or St Andrew Square. This much may be said—that insurance offices should be valued at a somewhat lower rate than shops, because the same rent would not be got for an office as for a shop.

The valuation made by the Assessor was £5500, and the Valuation Committee have reduced that figure to £5000. I confess that I should have been very well pleased if the Committee had fixed a smaller amount, because my impression is that £5000 is a full valuation. Still, this is one of those cases in which it is impossible to do more than make an approximate estimate of the value, and I think that it is impossible to say that the estimate made by the Committee is not reasonable. I am therefore of opinion that we would not be justified in interfering with their determination.

Lord Dundas.—I agree in regard to both the cases for the reasons which your Lordship has stated, and I have nothing to add.—21*st February* 1908.

Bankruptcy—Trust Deed for Creditors—Title to Sue—Action by Creditor Against Trustee for Illiquid Debt—Plea of Incompetence Sustained.

This was an action at the instance of William Oliver, builder, Leith, against Philip, Laing & Harley, Writers to the Signet, Edinburgh, and David Philip and Alexander Laing as individual partners of said firm; and against George Bird, Chartered Accountant, Edinburgh, as trustee for behoof of the creditors of Harry Herbert Harley, Writer to the Signet, Edinburgh, and presently residing in London, acting under trust disposition by the said Harry Herbert Harley, dated 16th July 1906; and also against the said Harry Herbert Harley for any interest he might have as an individual and as a partner of said firm. The action concluded for payment by the defenders jointly and severally of the sums of £417 and £540 as damages. The pursuer carried on building speculations in Edinburgh by purchasing pieces of ground on which he erected buildings and then created and sold feu-duties on these. In these transactions the said firm of Philip, Laing & Harley acted as the pursuer's agents, and the alleged damages consisted of the difference between the price at which certain feu-duties were actually sold by the said firm on the pursuer's behalf and what the pursuer averred was their real value. The said sales of feu-duties took place in 1899.

The said David Philip and Alexander Laing withdrew from said firm in 1900 and 1904 respectively. The said Harry Herbert Harley carried on the business as sole partner till 16th July 1906, when he granted the said trust disposition in favour of the said George Bird.

The defender George Bird pleaded, inter alia: —"(1) No title to sue. (2) The action is incompetent. (3) The pursuer's averments being irrelevant and insufficient to support the conclusions of the summons, the action ought to be dismissed."

The Lord Ordinary sustained the second and third pleas in law for the defender George Bird, and assoilzied said defender from the conclusions of the summons; and quoad ultra allowed a proof before answer.

Lord Dundas.—The pursuer, William Oliver, is a builder who, according to his statement, is in the way of carrying on building speculations in Edinburgh, by purchasing pieces of ground, erecting buildings, and creating and selling feu-duties on these. The action is one of damages against a now dissolved firm of law agents in Edinburgh, Messrs Philip, Laing & Harley, W.S., and the partners of that firm, as such partners and as individuals; and the damages represent the difference between the price (twenty-five years' purchase) at which certain feu-duties were sold on the pursuer's behalf, and what the pursuer alleges to have been their real value at the date of sale, viz. twenty-eight years' purchase. . . .

I shall deal first with the case as directed against Mr Bird, who, as already stated, is sued for payment jointly and severally along with the firm and its partners. The pursuer states that, from and after 1904, Mr Harley, "as sole partner, carried on the business under the name of Laing & Harley, W.S., until 1906, when he granted a trust deed for behoof of his creditors in favour of the defender George Bird, C.A., who is now in possession of the estate of the said Harry Herbert Harley for behoof of his creditors." There are no statements on record as to whether or not the pursuer has acceded to the trust, nor whether any dividend has been, or is likely to be, declared. Mr Bird's counsel informed me from the bar that no dividend has yet been declared, and that any dividend which may hereafter be declared must be a very small amount per £. However this may be, it seems to me very clear that Mr Bird is entitled to be assoilzied from this action. He has pleas directed against its competency and its relevancy. I cannot see any valid theory upon which the case can be maintained against him. Mr Bird certainly is not, and never was, a partner of the said firm; nor is he, in any true sense, the representative of a partner, viz. Mr Harley. He is not eadem persona, like an executor; on the contrary, he is trustee for Mr Harley's creditors (Bell, Comm., II. 383; Nicolson, 1872, 11 M. 179, per Lord Deas, at 185). The pursuer's pleas in law seem to be all directed against the firm and its partners, and to be of no avail against Mr Bird. Nor, again, can the pursuer, in my judgment, sue Mr Bird in this action, on the footing that he (the pursuer) is a creditor of Mr Harley. He has at best an illiquid claim of damages against Mr Harley. The action is not framed merely for constitution of this debt, but for payment by Mr Bird, jointly and severally with others, of the whole sums sued for. Mr Harley, as already stated, is only called for any interest he may have. The case of Ogilvie, 1887, 14 R. 399, does not seem to me to help the pursuer. There, a non-acceeding creditor was allowed to obtain decree against the trustee for a share of the debtor's estate in proportion to his debt; but what he asked and got was just payment of a dividend (which had been declared by the trustee) of so much per £ of his debt, which was a liquid debt, and was admitted by the trustee. In this case, if I were to grant the decree concluded for, it might, I apprehend, operate injustice, by giving the pursuer a preference over Mr Harley's other creditors. It is not, in my judgment, as the pursuer's counsel argued, a mere matter of pluris petitio. The summons, so far as directed against Mr Bird, is, I think, radically ill founded upon any theory of law. I shall therefore sustain his second and third pleas, and assoilzie him, with expenses. . . .—21*st January* 1908.

SLANDER — VICARIOUS SLANDER — MASTER AND SERVANT—LIBEL BY SERVANT OF A LIMITED COMPANY—VERBAL SLANDER UTTERED BY A COMPANY'S SERVANT — CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH ISSUES ALLOWED AGAINST COMPANY—PRIVILEGE.

This was an action of damages for verbal slander at the instance of Mrs Dora Alexander or Finburgh against Moss' Empires Limited.

The slanderous statements were alleged to have been uttered by the manager, the under-manager, and an attendant in the employment of the Company. The material averments in the case and the contentions of parties sufficiently appear from the judgment of the Lord Ordinary.

The pursuer proposed the following issues which were approved:—

"1. Whether, on or about 13th November 1907, in the Empire Theatre of Varieties, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow, owned and managed by the defenders, the defenders by their under-manager, in the presence and hearing of pursuer's husband, David Finburgh, residing at Maplewell House, New Walk, Leicester, Joseph Lipscher, 25 Rue de Orleans, Paris, and John Franklin, 75 Garmoyle Road, Liverpool, or one or more of them, falsely and calumniously stated of and concerning the pursuer that she was a bad character and must leave the theatre, or used words of like import and effect, to the loss, injury, and damage of the pursuer?

"2. Whether, on or about 13th November 1907, in the Empire Theatre of Varieties, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow, owned and managed by the defenders, the defenders by their under-manager and one of their attendants at said theatre, or one or other of them, in the presence and hearing of David Finburgh, residing at Maplewell House, New Walk, Leicester, Joseph Lipscher, 25 Rue de Orleans, Paris, or one or other of them, falsely and calumniously stated of and concerning the pursuer that she was a prostitute and had been put out of the theatre shortly before for being drunk and disorderly; whether, on hearing said statement, the defenders' manager said, 'That is quite enough; the woman must leave at once,' or words of like import and effect, and whether the defenders, by their said manager, thereby falsely and calumniously represented or intended to represent that the pursuer was a prostitute and unfit to be allowed to remain in a respectable theatre, to the loss, injury, and damage of the pursuer?

"Damages £1000."

Lord Mackenzie.—The question raised in this action is whether the defenders, a limited company, are liable for verbal slander, alleged to have been uttered in one of their theatres by the under-manager and an attendant, in the course of their service, and for the defender's benefit. The case therefore raises the point recently discussed in Nicklas v. The New Popular Café Co. Ltd., 25th January 1908, 15 S.L.T. 735. An issue was there refused, because I was of opinion that it could not be said, upon the averments, that the defenders' servant was acting within the scope of her authority in using the language complained of. In Eprile v. Caledonian Railway Co., 2nd July 1898, 6 S.L.T. 87, an issue was refused in similar circumstances by Lord Kincairney.

I am, however, of opinion that if on record a pursuer sets forth that verbal slander was uttered by the servant of a Company in such circumstances as to indicate that prima facie the uttering of the slander was an act of the Company, he is then entitled to an issue in the form proposed in the present case, viz.—whether the defenders by their servant uttered the slander complained of? It will then be for the jury to say whether the act complained of fell within the scope of the servant's employment, or whether it was one for which the defenders are not responsible.

This conclusion seems to me to follow from what has been decided in Scotland as regards written slander. It has been held, in Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, 1905, 7 F. 629, that the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Citizens Life Assurance Co. v. Brown, 1904, A.C. (P.C.) 423, applies in Scotland. According to that a servant may write a slander involving liability on his master, just as he may commit any other act on which an action for reparation against his master can be founded. The question in such a case, as is pointed out by the Lord President, is just whether the servant in doing what is complained of was acting within the scope of his employment or not. If this be the question, then I am unable to see, in point of principle, why if the servant is acting within the scope of his employment, the master should not be equally liable, whether the slander be spoken or written. It is true that up to the present no case has occurred in which an issue has been granted in such circumstances. In Nicklas I stated I would be slow to grant one, having fully in view what was said in Agnew v. British Legal Life Assurance Co. Ltd., 1906, 8 F. 422, that to open the door to liability for any slanderous language rashly used by anyone in the employment of another, or of a corporation, would be to open the door very wide indeed.

The safeguard against this, in my opinion, is to make it incumbent upon the pursuer to set forth on record facts from which prima facie it may be inferred that the verbal slander complained of is a company act. The question accordingly in the present case is whether this has been done. It is to be observed that the employer who is sought to be made liable is a Company, and not an individual. A Company can only act and speak through its servants.

I think the pursuer makes a strong case on her averments, which are these:—She is a married woman, who went with her husband and two friends to the defenders' theatre in Glasgow. A box was paid for, and the party had taken their seats, when first a page boy, and then one of the defenders' attendants in uniform, came and scrutinised them. Shortly afterwards the under-manager, accompanied by the same attendant, entered the box and said: "That woman is a bad character, and must leave the theatre." The pursuer's husband explained that she was his wife, when the under-manager replied that "he had heard that story before," and that the pursuer must leave at once. Her husband then went out of the box and insisted on the defenders' manager being summoned. When he came he questioned the under-manager and the attendant. They both stated that the pursuer was a notorious prostitute, and had been thrown out of the theatre two weeks before for being drunk and disorderly. On hearing this statement the manager said to the pursuer's husband, "That is quite enough; the woman must leave at once." The pursuer and her husband thereupon left the theatre. These are the pursuer's averments.

The pursuer then avers, in Cond. V., that the defenders are a limited company, and that the whole management and conduct of the theatre is entirely left to the manager, under-manager, and attendants, who are charged by the defenders with the whole conduct of the business; that the statements complained of were made by the defenders' manager, under-manager and attendant in the course of their service with the defenders and for the defenders' benefit, and were made and persisted in most recklessly, pertinaciously, and maliciously. I agree with the defenders' counsel that the averments in Cond. V. are not sufficient by themselves to entitle the pursuer to an issue. On a question of relevancy, however, it is permissible to look at the defenders' answers. In Ans. 3 they explain that by the bye-laws made by the magistrates of Glasgow for the maintenance of order in theatres in the city, which apply to the defenders' theatre, it is provided, inter alia, "that the licensed manager shall not, by himself or by his servants, knowingly permit or suffer men or women of bad fame, or dissolute boys or girls, to enter any theatre as spectators or in any other capacity." Then follows the defenders' explanation of what they say actually occurred, and they aver that "the defenders' servants acted throughout in the bona fide exercise of their duty under the said bye-law and with the utmost discretion; and no member of the public present in the theatre was in any way aware of the incident." They no doubt in Ans. 5 deny that any slander was uttered, and say that if their servants did slander the pursuer in doing so they acted outwith the scope of their employment.

In my opinion the record discloses a prima facie case that it was the defenders who, by their servants, slandered the pursuer, and that the issues should be allowed in the terms proposed.

At the discussion of the issues a motion was made by the pursuers' counsel that the case should be tried with a jury, upon the record without issues, as though two issues are required there is really only one wrong complained of. I think it better that the jury should have the issues. The defenders' counsel contended that if there was to be enquiry it should be by way of proof. The case, however, seems to me one for a jury.

It was further maintained that the record shewed the case was one of privilege, and that therefore malice should be inserted in the issue. The case of Buchanan v. Magistrates of Glasgow, 1905, 7 F. 1001, was founded on. That, however, was a different case from the present. I do not consider a case of privilege is disclosed on the record, and am therefore of opinion that malice should not go into the issue.

I shall accordingly approve of the issues proposed.—25*th February* 1908.

351. M'Gregor v. Sohn and Others.

Trust—Revocability—Unilateral Trust Deed Executed by a Woman Before Marriage for Behoof of the Spouses in Life-rent and the Issue in Fee Held to be Revocable—Husband and Wife.

The facts of this case and the authorities cited at the debate are given in the Lord Ordinary's Opinion.

Mr A. M. Hamilton, advocate, was appointed curator ad litem to Oscar Staehling Vincent Sohn.

Lord Mackenzie.—The competition in this multiplepoinding is between Mrs Mary M'Gregor or Sohn and her pupil son, Oscar Staehling Vincent Sohn, to whom a curator ad litem has been appointed. The question is whether Mrs Sohn can revoke a trust deed executed by her dated 3rd September 1904.

The history of this trust is that in November 1891 Mrs Sohn received as the settlement of an action of damages at her instance certain sums of money, out of which the sum of £289, 15s. was allowed by her to be invested in a hotel business which had been acquired by her father. From November 1891 she remained with her father down to the date of her marriage in August 1904, when she requested payment of this money from him. There was a difficulty in getting repayment. Mrs Sohn consulted a law agent, and the result was that the deed of trust in question was signed by her. Her husband was not a party to the deed, but homologated it on 2nd January 1905. The trustees got the money from her father in October 1904.

The trust deed proceeds on the narrative that Mrs Sohn was married, and that she was desirous of making certain provisions with reference to the sum of £289, 15s. then due to her by her father, and that for her own protection she desired to place the said sum in the hands of trustees. Then follows the conveyance to trustees for the following purposes, viz.:—(Second), for payment to her of £80 as soon as the trustees should have recovered that sum from her father; (third), that the trustees should retain the balance and pay over to her the free income therefrom during her life; (fourth), "On my decease my said trustees shall divide the free income from said sum in the clothing, maintaining, and educating the child or children of our marriage; and upon the youngest of said children attaining twenty-one years of age, the free proceeds of the said two hundred pounds shall be divided equally, share and share alike, amongst such children, the issue of any predeceasing child succeeding to the share which their deceasing parent would have taken by survivance." (Fifth), "In the event of there being no children of the marriage, then my said trustees shall give effect to any mortis causa deed which I may have executed; and failing any such mortis causa deed, the two hundred pounds shall be divided amongst my nearest relatives." Then follows a declaration that the said deed should be absolutely irrevocable, and should be strictly construed according to the law of Scotland, and that the provisions therein made in her own favour should be a strictly alimentary provision, and should not be assignable by her, or attachable by the diligence of her creditors in any manner of way.

On 12th June 1905 she, with consent of her husband, executed a deed of revocation of the trust. On 12th April 1906 a child was born of the marriage.

The argument for Mrs Sohn is that the deed of trust being in its nature revocable, and having been revoked, she is entitled to the whole fund in medio. I am of opinion that Mrs Sohn is entitled to succeed. I had the benefit of an excellent argument to the contrary from Mr A. M. Hamilton, who represents the pupil child, with a full citation of the authorities bearing on the question. After giving these cases due consideration, I am unable to come to any other conclusion than that the present is not distinguishable from the case of Watt v. Watson, 1897, 24 R. 330. The deeds in the two cases are practically identical. It was argued, however, that in the present there was the element of the husband's consent, which was wanting in the case of Watt. The consent, however, by the husband is to what his wife had done with her own property, and does not appear to me to import any of the elements of contract into the trust deed. Further, it was maintained that the case of Wilken's Trs., 1904, 6 F. 655, should be followed rather than that of Watt. The judgment in the latter case, however, proceeds expressly on the ground that it is distinguishable from Watt. The deed in Wilken was held to be bilateral—an agreement not merely executed in contemplation of marriage, but one which the parties agreed should be made and executed before the marriage was solemnised. It was accordingly held to be a case where the doctrine of Menzies v. Murray, 1875, 2 R. 507, should be applied. In Watt it was held that the trust deed was revocable by the wife, with consent of her husband, because it was unilateral and executed without reference to any contract of marriage, and because there were no beneficiaries in existence other than the spouses. The opinion of Lord Trayner seems directly applicable to the present case. It was contended that Lord M'Laren indicated the view that the principle applied in Menzies v. Murray could not be justified on the ground of contract alone, but it must be pointed out that in the same passage the learned judge also expressed the opinion that this criticism would not furnish a valid reason for extending the rule to cases to which it had not been applied; and referred to the fact that it is clear from the opinions of the majority of the judges in the case of Mackenzie v. Mackenzie's Trs., 1878, 5 R. 1027, that they considered the decision in Menzies v. Murray inapplicable to the case of a voluntary trust.

Outer House. Lord Mackenzie. M'Gregor v. Sohn and Others.

I have considered the other cases cited, especially those of Low v. Low's Trs., 1877, 5 R. 185; Peddie's Trs. 1891, 18 R. 491; and Barras v. Scottish Widows' Fund Society, 1900, 2 F. 1094. I do not think that any of these materially aid the argument for the child.

I am of opinion that the trust deed is revocable because it is unilateral, is not a contract, and was not executed with reference to a contract of marriage, and because there was at the date of the revocation no child in existence. In these circumstances the decision in Watt's case is directly applicable.

As regards the declaration that the trust deed is irrevocable, reference was made to some of the opinions in the case of Lyon v. Lyon's Trs., 1901, 3 F. 653. The question, however, is just whether the deed is sua natura revocable or not. If it is, then, though there be a clause declaring it to be irrevocable, this clause may be revoked along with the rest of the deed.

The result of my opinion is that the claim for Mrs Sohn will be sustained, the expenses of all parties being paid out of the fund.—1st February 1908.

The petitioner averred that she was married to the respondent on 11th April 1898 in New York; that there were two children of the marriage, James and Alice; that on 8th June 2nd Div. Ziegler v. Hamilton.

1905 the marriage was dissolved by decree of the Courts of Indiana, U.S.A., at the instance of the petitioner, on the ground of the respondent's cruelty; that on 11th September 1905 the petitioner was married to the said Edward Ziegler, and now resided with him in New York; that the respondent being advised that the American divorce was ineffectual, obtained decree of divorce on the ground of adultery in the Court of Session on 20th July 1907; and that by the decree of 18th July 1905 the Courts of Indiana gave the custody of the said James Hamilton to the respondent.

The petitioner further averred:

4. Immediately after the date of said decree the respondent, who has never displayed any great affection for either of his children, handed over the boy to the care of the petitioner's mother, Mrs Peirce, along with a written mandate, dated 18th July 1905. The boy remained in charge of Mrs Peirce in America and in England until 15th June 1906, since when he has been in charge of the respondent's people in Glasgow, where he is at school at the Glasgow Academy, and at Lochgoilhead or other places during the holidays

5. The petitioner, who has always been devoted to her children, who have returned her affection, desires to have access to her son, but the respondent refuses to allow her any access at all. The petitioner is willing to come to this country for the purpose, and to see her son, at such times and places, and under such conditions, as may seem suitable to your Lordships.

6. Since an early period of their married life the respondent neglected both the petitioner and his children. Between the date of the marriage in April 1898 and the American divorce of June 1905, he spent less than two years and two months with them. Although constantly appealed to, he refused or neglected to provide them with sufficient means of maintenance, the larger part of that being borne by the petitioner's mother, Mrs Peirce. Although remonstrated with, he left the petitioner shortly before the birth of his first child, the boy, on 15th November 1900 (when the petitioner was dangerously ill), and did not return until July 1902. He left his wife and child again a few months before the birth of the second child. The respondent has at no time shewed proper affection for either of the children, and his treatment both of the petitioner and the boy has been harsh and cruel. The petitioner, on the other hand, has always been a kind and loving mother, as well as a devoted one.

The respondent lodged answers, in which he averred:

Ans. 2. . . . The respondent was not guilty of cruel and inhuman treatment of the petitioner. Explained that on 1st January 1904 and 28th March 1904 the petitioner, who, as the respondent learned long afterwards, had been living in adultery with Edward Ziegler, wrote to the respondent entreating him to consent to a divorce in order that she might marry Edward Ziegler, and on 12th April 1904 she wrote him another letter repeating the same request and adding "Incompatibility is a sufficient excuse and certainly a true one, and one that would not have to be investigated very closely." The respondent, realising that his wife had ceased to care for him and would no longer be happy with him, agreed that she should obtain divorce on the grounds suggested by her. He was quite unaware of the actual grounds put forward at the proof, and only learned at a very much later date what was said and done in said proceedings. . . .

Ans. 4. Denied. The respondent has always had the greatest affection for his son and has bestowed great attention upon him. The respondent's business at the time mentioned kept him in Bussorah in Turkish Arabia for a considerable part of the year, and he was compelled in the interests of his business, which was his only means of livelihood, to go there on the occasion mentioned by the petitioner, when he temporarily handed over the custody of the boy to the petitioner's mother, Mrs Peirce, who begged the respondent to let her have charge of the boy during his absence. Upon his return he took him back under his own care and sent him to school at the Glasgow Academy.

Ans. 5. Admitted that the respondent refuses to allow the petitioner access to his son. Quoad ultra, denied. After the birth of the girl, the petitioner was utterly indifferent to the boy's welfare. She persistently neglected him and frequently maltreated him, and on more than one occasion she threatened to take the life of both of her children. Since the American divorce proceedings, two and a half years ago, she has never made any enquiry regarding him. The respondent believes and avers that the petitioner is not in any way interested in her son, but that the petition has been presented at the instigation of, and on behalf of, her mother, Mrs Peirce, who is keenly desirous to have the custody of the boy. Mrs Peirce has for a considerable time endeavoured to induce the respondent to allow her to have the custody of the boy, but the respondent refused her request. To aid her in this desire she has induced the petitioner to raise this action. . . .

Ans. 6. Denied. The statement that the respondent neglected the petitioner or the children is without foundation. The petitioner is well aware that during the period of absence specified, the respondent's business kept him in Bussorah, and that she refused to accompany him there. When he left America, shortly before the birth of his son, it was in response to a cablegram to return to Bussorah to attend to his business.

Ans. 8. It is not in the interests of the child James Hamilton that he should ever see his mother again, and he is only now beginning to forget the evil impression left on his young mind by his mother's manner of life with Ziegler in New York. In the action of divorce at the instance of the respondent against the petitioner, the Lord Ordinary (Lord Guthrie) found that the petitioner had been living for some time in adultery with Edward Ziegler, with whom she is at present residing in America.

The petitioner lodged a minute, in which she stated:

Reply 5. Admitted that Mrs Peirce, who is devoted to the boy, has for a considerable time endeavoured to induce the respondent to allow her to have some custody of the boy. Further admitted that the petitioner is not at present in this country. Quoad ultra, the averments in answer are denied. The petitioner is willing and intends to come to this country as soon as her presence is required in course of the proceedings. The petitioner has never been anything but kind to her two children. On 19th June 1905 she wrote a letter to her mother, which is produced and referred to, in which she begs to see her boy. This letter was opened by the respondent and kept by him from Mrs Peirce until February 1906. In August 1906 the petitioner came to London in the hope of seeing her son, but was unable to do so. In April 1907 Mrs Peirce offered, on condition of being allowed a limited custody of the boy, to maintain, clothe, and educate him, and to make an inter vivos settlement in trust for his behoof of a sum sufficient to yield £150 to £200 per annum, the income to be paid to Mrs Peirce for her life, and the fee to be held for behoof of the boy.

Reply 6. . . . The respondent's cruelty to the boy began soon after he joined the family in New York in 1902. On one occasion he struck the boy a severe blow on the head with a beer bottle "to make him keep quiet." In the spring of 1903, in New York he administered a brutually severe whipping to the boy for a childish fault, at a time when he knew the child was slowly recovering from an attack of diphtheria and was very weak. In January 1906 he boxed the child's ears in a brutal fashion in the public dining-room of the Hotel St Lorenz in New York. When leaving New York for London with Mrs Peirce and the boy at the end of January 1906, the respondent refused to purchase any warm clothing for the boy on the voyage, with the result that Mrs Peirce had to buy it. Later, while visiting Mrs Peirce and the boy at Hastings, the respondent took the boy to a swimming pool and kept him in the water for about an hour and a half and boasted of the fact, although the child was then ailing, and under the care of a doctor. The result was a severe attack of inflammation of the bladder. These are some instances only of the respondent's systematic cruelty and indifference.

Argued for Petitioner: The petitioner was asking, not for custody but for access. The fact that the petitioner had been divorced was not conclusive against her (Bowman v. Graham, 1883, 10 R. 1234; Symington v. Symington, 1875, 2 R.(H.L.) 41). This was especially the case since the passing of the Guardianship of Infants Act, because the wishes of the mother fell to be taken into account (Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. cap. 27), sect. 5; Mackellar v. Mackellar, 1898, 25 R. 883; Sleigh v. Sleigh, 1893, 30 S.L.R. 272, per Lord M'Laren). The leading consideration was the interest of the child (Guardianship of Infants Act, sect. 5; Stevenson v. Stevenson, 1894, 21 R. (H.L.) 96). Prima facie it was not in his interest that he should be wholly separated from his mother, and there were no allegations against the petitioner's character and conduct apart from adultery, which took place several years ago. It was present character and present conduct which were most important (A. C. v. B. C., 1902, 5 F. 108). Handley v. Handley ([1891], P. 124) was distinguishable, having been decided on a construction of the English Divorce Act. The petitioner was willing to come to Scotland for the purpose of seeing the child, and it was immaterial that she was ordinarily resident in America (Allan v. Allan's Trs., 1869, 41 S.J. 617). There was no foundation for the statement that the petition was presented in the interests of the boy's grandmother.

Argued for Respondent: When a wife was divorced for adultery, the Court would not grant access against the will of the husband (Bowman v. Graham, cit.; Handley v. Handley, cit.; Bent v. Bent, 1861, 30 L.J., P. 175; Clout v. Clout, 1861, 30 L.J., P. 176). There was nothing to take the present case out of the ordinary rule. It was not in the interest of the child that he should see his mother. That was the view taken at the time of the divorce by the respondent's mother (in whose interests the present application was really brought). Sect. 5 of the Guardianship of Infants Act did not apply to the case of a wife who had been guilty of adultery. The section which truly applied was sect. 7. The cases of Allan v. Allan's Trs., cit.; Sleigh v. Sleigh, cit.; Stevenson v. Stevenson, cit., were distinguishable. In none of them had the wife been guilty of adultery.

The Court refused the prayer of the petition.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—My Lords, in this case the one thing that is perfectly clear is that the interest of the child is the main question for the Court to consider. The next circumstance of importance is that the parents of this child have already agreed as to its custody; what the mother now asks is that she should be allowed access. Now I quite admit that in the ordinary case access is a thing which would not be denied a mother—that is to say, where she has been innocent of any conjugal transgression. But the law is the same as I understand it, both in England and in Scotland, where the mother has not been innocent in her conjugal relations. In Scotland the law is settled by the case of Bowman, 1883, 10 R. 1234 (which had reference to a case of access alone), that where the wife had been divorced for adultery the matter of access to the children ought in general to be left in the husband's hands. The law is the same in England, as is established by the case of Handley [1891], P. 124; and it is important to notice that that was after the passing of the Guardianship of Infants Act 1886. A strong Court there held practically to the same effect as the Court here did in Bowman's case, that there was no sufficient ground for interfering with the arrangements made for a child by the husband in the case of an erring mother, even when only access was asked, and that was after taking into account the passing of the Guardianship of Infants Act, which was referred to in the argument. Now, here we have indications in the shape of letters that at the time when these proceedings first had their origin in America, the grandmother of this boy was strongly of opinion that it was not in his interest that his mother (who was her own daughter) should have access to him. I do not say that that is by any means conclusive, though I must say that the evidence,

Ziegler v. Hamilton.
Lord Stormonth-Darling.

so far as it goes, is very clear that, whoever was fond of the boy, the grandmother certainly was, and therefore any expression of opinion that came from her was deserving of the highest consideration.

It is true that if she is to have such access, and she admits it in her petition, it will be necessary for her to come over from America to this country, for it is only here that she asks or could obtain access to him. From the nature of the situation, however, it follows that access by a mother resident in America and coming over to this country for the purpose of seeing her child, would almost necessarily take the form of a temporary custody. The child is at present residing in Glasgow in the house of his paternal grandmother, and is attending the Glasgow Academy. What future arrangements shall be made for his education it lies with his father to make, and he has indicated that he may ultimately send him to an English public school, but that is of course entirely in the future. The child is at present only seven years old. I am ready to decide this case upon the footing simply that it is not for the interest of the child at present that the mother's petition for access should be granted, and that she has averred no circumstances, she being the guilty spouse, to warrant us in interfering with the husband's arrangements and with the clear rule of the Scots law.

Lord Low.—My Lords, I am of the same opinion. When, on the 8th June 1905, the decree of divorce was pronounced by the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana (which appears to have been really an arranged divorce) the order of the Court was that the husband, the present respondent, should have the custody of the son of the marriage, and the petitioner the custody of the daughter of the marriage, and neither party seeks now to alter that order. The petitioner, however, now says that she has great affection for her son, and that it is a great grief to her never to see him, and she comes to this Court to be allowed access to him in this country. Now a good deal has happened since the proceedings in the American Court. In 1907 the respondent brought in this Court an action of divorce on the ground of adultery against the petitioner, and it was proved that about the same time as the proceedings were going on in America the petitioner was living in adultery with a Mr Ziegler, and the learned judge who tried the case found that there was no evidence that the present respondent was aware that that was going on. The petitioner subsequently married Mr Ziegler, and now she is living with him in America.

I think that the natural desire of a mother to see her child is by no means to be left out of consideration in a case of this sort; and the fact that she has been divorced for adultery is not in itself a sufficient reason for refusing access. But the main consideration is the welfare of the child, and in this case I have come to the conclusion that there would be serious risk that it would be contrary to the welfare of the son that access should be granted. I do not for a moment suggest that the petitioner would intentionally, or even consciously, say or do anything which might have a demoralising effect upon the boy, although I doubt very much if he would, in any case, actually benefit by intercourse with her. What I chiefly fear, however, is the effect which she might have on his relations with his father. The upbringing, education, and settlement in life of the boy, is a duty which the father has to perform, and it is of the utmost importance that he should have the respect and confidence of his son. I greatly fear that the petitioner's influence would, almost inevitably, be in an opposite direction, because it is evident that she has very bitter, perhaps vindictive, feelings against the respondent; and her history, and what may be gleaned of her character from the correspondence, suggest that she would not be likely to exercise a wise self-control. These considerations, especially in view of the law laid down in the cases of Bowman and Handley, satisfy me that the petition should be refused.

Lord Ardwall.—I agree with what has been said by your Lordships. I think there is nothing in these proceedings to shew that it is for the welfare of the child that the relations between him and his mother, which several years ago were broken off with her full consent, should now be resumed. On the contrary, I think that it is better that he should see and know as little as possible of her in the circumstances. In the next place, with regard to the law of the matter, it is quite settled that a father is entitled to the custody of his child; it is for him to direct what shall be done with the child, and his wishes are paramount unless it can be shewn that they are unreasonable, or that there is some good and just cause for running counter to them.

The only doubt I have in this case has been raised by the conduct of the father as shewn in his letters; they seem to me to shew that he has treated most unfairly the grandmother of this child, who has behaved in a most proper and ladylike manner throughout, and who has a strong affection for the child; but this is not sufficient to affect our judgment, as the father being responsible for the education and upbringing of the child, must just take his own course.

The Lord Justice-Clerk.—If I thought that the decision of your Lordships was to be taken as meaning that a decision at a particular time on a question such as this was final, and could never be reviewed or modified by the Court at a later date, I should have great difficulty in concurring in what is proposed to be done. The question whether a parent is to be suffered to have access to a child is one which, although decided to-day, may be varied or altered at a later date, if ground can be shewn for it. What may be unfavourable to the interests of the child at one time may not be so at a later date. Therefore the judgment your Lordships propose is upon the present state of matters, and as your Lordships all hold that the present petition must be refused, I do not dissent from that judgment. If cause can be shewn at any later date that what is now done should be recalled or modified, the Court will be bound to consider the application. That being so, I am not placed in the position of holding that a mother can never, whatever the change of circumstances, be allowed to see her child during childhood, which would be a thing I could not consent to.—27th February 1908.

353. Greenock Harbour Trustees v. Carmichael

Judicial Factor — Greenock Harbour Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. cap. 170), sects. 69 and 70—Judicial Factor Appointed under sects. 69 and 70, on Petition of Holders of Debentures on Which Interest was in Arrears — Powers of Factor—Held that Factor not Entitled to Vary Rates Fixed by Harbour Trustees.

This was an action at the instance of the trustees of the Port and Harbour of Greenock, against Andrew Carmichael, shipowner, Greenock, as judicial factor appointed by interlocutor of the Sheriff-Substitute of Renfrew and Bute at Greenock, on 5th August 1905, to receive the whole or a competent part of the rates and duties and other revenues of the Greenock Harbour Trust until all the arrears of interest or of principal, as the case might be, due to the holders of Greenock Harbour "B" Debenture Stock, together with all costs, be fully paid. The action concluded for declarator that the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, had no power to raise or reduce, or in any way vary the rates and duties fixed by the pursuers for goods shipped or unshipped at any of the works of the pursuers, and in particular, but without prejudice to the foregoing generality, that the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, had no power to raise the rate for sugar shipped into or unshipped from vessels (foreign) at the works of the pursuers from 10d. per ton, being the rate fixed by the pursuers, to 1s. 3d. per ton; and further, that the notice issued by the defender, of which he gave intimation to the pursuers on 29th November 1907, and which notice was in the following terms:—"Greenock Harbour Acts 1866 to 1895. Notice is hereby given that on and after 1st January 1908 there will be levied, demanded, and taken for sugar shipped into or unshipped from vessels foreign, 1s. 3d. per ton, as provided in Schedule A of the Greenock Harbour Act 1880. Andrew Carmichael, judicial factor," was ultra vires of the defender as judicial factor foresaid, and illegal, and ought not to receive effect, and that the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, was not entitled to levy, demand, or take rates, duties, or charges in terms of said notice; and for interdict against the defender from varying any of the rates and duties fixed by the pursuers.

The pursuers were the trustees of the Port and Harbours of Greenock, incorporated under the Greenock Port and Harbours Act 1866, and the Greenock Harbour Act 1888, and as such trustees were vested with the management and control of the said port and harbours, under and in virtue of the Greenock Harbour Acts 1866 to 1895.

The pursuers averred:—

Cond. 2. By section 77 of the said Act of 1866 it is, inter alia, provided as follows:—"From and after this Act coming into operation it shall be lawful for the Trustees to levy, demand, and take for all goods mentioned in the Schedule (C) hereunto annexed, which shall be shipped or unshipped at any of the works of the trustees and for the use of the works and conveniences in the said Schedule mentioned, any sum not exceeding the several rates and duties specified in the said Schedule. . . ." By the said Schedule (C) the maximum rate authorised for sugar shipped and unshipped from vessels (foreign) is fixed at 1s. 3d. per ton. It is also provided by the said Schedule, under the heading of "Miscellaneous Rules and Regulations," that "the Trustees may modify all or any of the rates under the above Schedule C."

Cond. 3. By sect. 34 of the Greenock Harbour Act 1880, sect. 77 of the Act of 1866, quoted above, and Schedule (C) to that Act annexed, excepting that portion of said Schedule (C) headed "Miscellaneous Rates and Regulations," are repealed, and it is thereby provided that "it shall be lawful for the Trustees, in lieu of the rates and duties specified in the said Schedule, so far as hereby repealed, to levy, demand, and take for all goods mentioned in the Schedule (A) hereunto annexed, which shall be shipped or unshipped at any of the works of the Trustees and for the use of the works and conveniences mentioned in the unrepealed portion of the said Schedule (C) to the Act of 1866 annexed, any sum not exceeding the several rates and duties specified in said Schedule (A) and in the said unrepealed portion of the said Schedule (C) respectively. . . ." By the said Schedule (A) the maximum rate authorised for sugar shipped into or unshipped from vessels (foreign) is fixed at 1s. 3d. per ton.

Outer House. Lord Dundas. — Greenock Harbour Trustees v. Carmichael

Cond. 4. By sect. 5 of the said Greenock Port and Harbours Act, 1866, the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847, so far as not altered by the said Act of 1866, is thereby incorporated therewith to the extent of the limits of the Port and Harbours of Greenock, with the exception of certain clauses with which the present case is not concerned. By sect. 30 of the said Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847, thus incorporated with the said Act of 1866, it is provided as follows:—"The undertakers may from time to time vary the rates or any of them respectively, in such manner as they think expedient, by reducing or raising the same, provided that the rates do not in any case exceed the amount authorised by the special Act to be taken, and provided also that the rates be at all times charged equally to all persons in respect of the same description of vessel and the same description of goods."

Cond. 5. In the exercise of the statutory powers thus conferred upon them, the pursuers have from time to time fixed the rates exigible in respect of goods shipped and unshipped at the harbour of Greenock within the maximum limits prescribed by the said schedules. In particular, the pursuers fixed the rate exigible for sugar shipped and unshipped from vessels (foreign) at 10d. per ton, and that is the rate at present in force.

Cond. 6. By the Greenock Harbour Act 1888, the finances of the Greenock Harbour Trust were re-arranged. By sect. 4 of that Act the trustees were empowered to create and issue in lieu of the existing harbour securities, (1) A Debenture Stock to such an amount as would produce £450,000, and (2) B Debenture Stock to an amount not exceeding £1,350,000. By sect. 5 of the said Act of 1888 the rate of interest on the said A Debenture Stock was fixed at 3½ per cent. per annum, and that stock and the interest thereon were declared to be the first charge on the undertaking of the trustees. By sect. 6 of the said Act of 1888 the rate of interest on the said B Debenture Stock was fixed at 4 per cent. per annum, and that stock and the interest thereon were declared to be the second charge on the undertaking of the trustees. Under the powers conferred by the said Act of 1888, debenture stock of the said two classes has been issued in lieu of the previously existing harbour securities, and the present capital indebtedness of the pursuers to the public consists of A Debenture Stock to the amount of £398,245, and B Debenture Stock to the amount of £1,102,688.

Cond. 7. By sect. 22 of the said Act of 1888 it was provided as follows:—"In the event of the trustees failing at any time to make payment of the interest due at the expiry of any half year, it shall be lawful for any holder of A Debenture Stock, and after the expiration of a period of seven years from the passing of this Act, for any holder of B Debenture Stock, to apply to the Sheriff for the appointment of a judicial factor in manner provided by sect. 70 of the Act of 1880." The above-quoted section of the Act of 1888 was repealed by the Greenock Harbour Act 1895, which by sect. 10 enacted the following provision in lieu thereof:—"In the event of the trustees failing at any time to make payment of the interest due at the expiry of any half year, it shall be lawful for any holder of A Debenture Stock, and after the expiration of a period of ten years from the passing of this Act, for any holder of B Debenture Stock, to apply to the Sheriff for the appointment of a judicial factor in manner provided by sect. 70 of the Greenock Harbour Act 1880."

Cond. 8. By sect. 69 of the said Greenock Harbour Act of 1880, it was provided as follows:—"The mortgagees of the trustees may enforce payment of arrears of interest or principal or principal and interest due on their mortgages by the appointment of a judicial factor. In order to authorise the appointment of a judicial factor in respect of arrears of principal the amount owing to the mortgagees by whom the application for a judicial factor shall be made shall not be less than £5000 in the whole." By sect. 70 of the said Act of 1880 it was provided as follows:—"Every application for a judicial factor under the provisions of this Act shall be made to the Sheriff, and on any such application the Sheriff may by order in writing, after hearing the parties, appoint some person to receive the whole or a competent part of the rates and duties and other revenues of the trust until all the arrears of interest or of principal, as the case may be, then due on the outstanding mortgages, together with all costs, including the charges of receiving the said rates and duties and other revenues, be fully paid. Upon such appointment being made all such rates and duties and other revenues shall be paid to and received by the person so appointed, and the money so received shall be so much money received by or to the use of the mortgagees, and so soon as the full amount of any interest or principal in arrear and costs has been so received, the power of such judicial factor shall cease; provided always that such judicial factor shall distribute among all the mortgagees to whom interest or principal shall be in arrear the rates and duties and other moneys which shall come into his hands, having respect in such distribution to the priorities, if any, of such mortgagees.

Cond. 9. The interest payable by the trustees to the holders of the said B Debenture Stock having fallen into arrear, certain of the holders of that stock on 7th July 1905, being ten years after the passing of the said Act of 1895, presented a petition in the Sheriff Court of Renfrew and Bute, at Greenock, craving the Court "to appoint such person as the Court shall see fit to be judicial factor upon the whole undertaking of the trustees of the Port and Harbours of Greenock, and upon their property, estate, and effects, and upon the rates and revenues accruing therefrom, with the usual powers, and, in particular, with all the powers conferred on the trustees of the Port and Harbours of Greenock by the Greenock Harbour Acts 1866 to 1895, he always finding caution before extract; and further, and without prejudice to the foregoing generality, to ordain the said trustees to hand over to such judicial factor the whole property, estate, and effects belonging to said Trust, and all funds now in bank or in hand; or otherwise to appoint such person as to the Court shall seem fit as judicial factor to receive the whole or a competent part of the rates and duties and other revenues of the said Trust, until all arrears of interest and principal and costs due to the petitioners and the other holders of Greenock Harbour B Debenture Stock, together with all costs, including the charges of receiving the said rates and duties and other revenue, be fully paid."

Cond. 10. Parties having been heard on the said petition before the Sheriff-Substitute (Neish) at Greenock, he, on 5th August 1905, issued the following interlocutor:—"Greenock, 5th August 1905.—The Sheriff-Substitute having heard counsel and agents for the parties, and considered the petition, answers, and productions, appoints Mr Andrew Carmichael, shipowner, Geeenock, as judicial factor, he finding caution before extract in common form, to receive the whole or a competent part of the rates and duties and other revenues of the Greenock Harbour Trust until all the arrears of interest or of principal, as the case may be, due to the petitioners and other holders of Greenock Harbour B Debenture Stock, together with all costs, including the charges of receiving the said rates and duties and other revenues, be fully paid, and decerns."

Cond. 11. The defender duly accepted office as judicial factor in terms of the above quoted interlocutor, and, having found caution, entered upon the duties of his office.

Cond. 12. On 9th October 1907 the defender addressed a letter to the pursuers' general manager suggesting that the rate on foreign sugar should be raised to 1s. 3d. per ton. This suggestion was brought before a meeting of the pursuers on 5th November 1907, when it was negatived by eleven votes to six. Thereafter, on 29th November 1907, the defender addressed a letter to the pursuers' general manager inclosing for the information of the pursuers a copy of the following notice :—

"Greenock Harbour Acts, 1866 to 1895.

"Notice is hereby given that on and after 1st January 1908 there will be levied, demanded, and taken for sugar shipped into or unshipped from vessels foreign, 1s. 3d. per ton, as provided in Schedule A of the Greenock Harbour Act, 1880.

"Andw. Carmichael.,
"Judicial Factor."

The defender also inserted in the "Greenock Telegraph" and "Glasgow Herald" a public notice in the same terms, and sent copies of the notice to shipowners, sugar-refiners, and others interested.

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia :—

"1. The defender having no power under the terms of his appointment as judicial factor foresaid, or of the statutes thereanent, to increase, reduce, or in any way vary at his own hand the rates and duties leviable on goods shipped and unshipped at the port and harbours of Greenock, the pursuers are entitled to decree of declarator as concluded for."

The Lord Ordinary issued the following interlocutor :—

"Finds, declares and decerns that the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, has no power at his own hand to raise or reduce, or in any way vary the rates and duties fixed by the pursuers for goods shipped or unshipped at any of the works of the pursuers, and in particular, but without prejudice to the foregoing generality, that the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, has no power at his own hand to raise the rate for sugar shipped into or unshipped from vessels (foreign) at the works of the pursuers from 10d. per ton, being the rates fixed by the pursuers, to 1s. 3d. per ton: And further, that the notice issued by the defender, of which he gave intimation to the pursuers on 29th November 1907, and which notice is in the following terms :—'Greenock Harbour Acts 1886 to 1905.—Notice is hereby given that on and after 1st January 1908 there will be levied, demanded, and taken for sugar shipped into or unshipped from vessels foreign, 1s. 3d. per ton, as provided in Schedule "A" of the Greenock Harbour Act 1880, Andrew Carmichael, judicial factor,'—is ultra vires of the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, is illegal, and ought not to receive effect, and that the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, is not entitled to levy, demand or take rates, duties, or charges in terms of said notice: In respect that the conclusion for interdict is not now insisted in, dismisses the same, and decerns: Finds no expenses due to or by either party."

Lord Dundas.—This action is directed by the Trustees of the Port and Harbours of Greenock against Mr Andrew Carmichael, Shipowner, Greenock, "judicial factor, appointed by interlocutor of the Sheriff-Substitute of Renfrew and Bute at Greenock, of date 5th August 1905, to receive the whole or a competent part of the rates and duties and other revenues of the Greenock Harbour Trust, until all the arrears of interest, or of principal and interest, as the case may be, due to the holders of Greenock Harbour B Debenture Stock, together with all costs, including the charges of receiving the said rates and duties and other revenues, be fully paid." Declarator is asked that the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, has no power to raise or reduce or in any way vary the rates and duties fixed by the pursuers for goods shipped into or unshipped from vessels (foreign) at the works of the pursuers; and in particular, that the defender has no power, as judicial factor foresaid, to raise the rate for sugar shipped into or unshipped from vessels (foreign) at the works of the pursuers from 10d. per ton, being the rate fixed by the pursuers, to 1s. 3d. per ton; and further, that a notice recently issued by the defender, notifying that the said sugar-rate was, on and after 1st January 1908, to be raised to 1s. 3d. per ton, is ultra vires of the defender, as judicial factor foresaid, and is illegal, and ought not to receive effect. The summons also contains a conclusion for interdict; but the pursuers' counsel stated that they would be content if decree were pronounced in terms of the declaratory conclusions.

The issues thus raised are interesting; and they are also of great importance, for it is obvious that the effect of the decision will not be confined to the particular rate in regard to which the conflict has arisen. The whole antecedent history, legislative and otherwise, which preceded and led up to the dispute, is clearly set forth in the pleadings of the parties; and a thorough understanding of these matters is essential to the decision of the case. It would, however, serve no good purpose that I should here repeat the record ad longum; and I have found it impossible, after attempting to do so, materially to abridge or curtail the history of the case as it is there set out. I propose, therefore, to start my own narrative at the point where, on 7th July 1905, a petition by certain holders of B Debenture Stock of the Greenock Harbour Trust was presented to the Sheriff-Substitute at Greenock, craving for the appointment of a judicial factor. The Sheriff-Substitute, by interlocutor dated 5th August, appointed the defender to be judicial factor, in terms which are accurately recited in the summons, where the defender is designed in language which I quoted at the outset. It is not surprising that these debenture-holders should have presented their petition upon the earliest possible day competent to them under the statutes, for the existing financial situation was, from their point of view, an exceedingly grave one. It appears that, in point of fact, though interest has always been paid on the A Debenture Stock, the full rate of interest has not in any year been paid on the B Stock; that last year only 1½ per cent. was paid on the latter; and that, as at 11th November 1907, there were arrears of interest on the B Stock amounting to £490,397. It is further stated that there is, apart from arrears, an annual deficiency of more than £20,000 in the revenue required to pay the interest to the stockholders of the Trust. Nor is it, in these circumstances, surprising that the defender, after his appointment, should look eagerly about him for the best means of alleviating the situation. On 9th October 1907, the defender addressed a letter to the pursuers' general manager suggesting that the said rate on foreign sugar should be raised to the maximum rate, which is 1s. 3d. per ton. The suggestion was brought before a meeting of the pursuers on 5th November, when it was negatived by eleven votes to six. On 29th November the defender wrote to the pursuers' general manager, enclosing for their information a copy of the notice which is printed in the summons, and in Article 12 of the Condescendence. The present action was raised on 18th December.

OUTER HOUSE. Lord Dundas.

Greenock Harbour Trustees v. Carmichael

At the discussion in the Procedure Roll the pursuers' counsel maintained that the defender has no right or power, express or implied, to raise or vary this particular rate, or any other of the harbour rates. They urged that we are here dealing with a great public undertaking, incapable of earning profit, and worked for the benefit of the public, to the statutory trustees of which, and to no one else, Parliament has committed the entire management and control of the concern, including expressly power "to vary the rates . . . in such manner as they think expedient"; that the constitution of the trust has been gradually broadened by a series of legislative enactments so far as to fairly represent all the public interests associated with the undertaking; and that there is no warrant for permitting the defender, representing as he does one private and limited interest only, to supersede the trustees to any extent in their management of the concern, or to interfere with their discretion as to raising or lowering rates. They further argued that, whatever may have been the nature and extent of the security held by creditors of the trust under the earlier statutes, holders of debenture stock under the Act of 1888 are merely perpetual annuitants, with no right at all to look to the security of the rates, except in so far as actually imposed by the trustees from time to time.

To a considerable part of this argument the defender's counsel took no exception; and they especially disclaimed any intention or desire on his part to oust the pursuers from their management. They conceded also that, under normal circumstances, it would be for the trustees, and for them only, to regulate the harbour rates; but they contended that the circumstances here are obviously abnormal, because it had been found necessary to appoint a judicial factor. There is, they urged, no room for doubt as to the object of such an appointment; it is "to enforce payment of arrears"; and, in order to this end, "the whole or a competent part" (i.e. a part sufficient for the purpose) "of the rates, duties, and other revenues of the trust" are to be "paid to and received by" the factor; and when the end and object have been attained, and the arrears, etc., have been fully paid up (and only then), his "power" (an effective power successfully wielded) "shall cease." The defender's counsel strenuously maintained that, if the pursuers' arguments were sound, the factor's appointment could be no better than a farce; because, being appointed at a crisis when the financial position is, from the debenture-holders' point of view, a very bad one, he is (ex hypothesi) to have no power to alleviate it by raising rates; on the contrary, the sole discretion as to maintaining or even lowering the rates is (if the pursuers are right) left with the trustees, whose interests are adverse to those of the stockholders; and that the result must simply be that an already embarrassed situation would be burdened with the additional cost of a totally useless factory. This, it was urged, could scarcely have been the intention of Parliament; and the Court should, in construing the language of the statutes, endeavour to avoid such a result, especially where the opposite construction does no violence whatever to the words used. The defender's counsel contended that when Parliament provides, as the means of enforcing a specified purpose, the appointment of a judicial factor, the latter is by plain implication vested (even if such vesting is not expressed in so many words) with such powers, means, and privileges as are necessary for the execution of the duty or the attainment of the object which he was appointed to execute or to effect. In support of this last proposition, I was referred to text writers on the construction of statutes—Maxwell, 4th ed., 1905, pp. 534, 536; and Hardcastle, 4th ed. by Craies, p. 108 and p. 229. I think the proposition is sound enough; and it seems to be based upon the doctrine of the Roman law (Dig. 2. 1. 2), "Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur, sine quibus jurisdictio explicari non potuit."

The defender's counsel further argued that the words "the whole or a competent part of the rates," etc., are not limited to the rates actually levied by the trustees at any given time; that the statute does not say so; and that the words, fairly construed, must include the whole rates (up to the maxima) which the trustees are by their acts authorised to "levy, demand, and take." The holders of debenture stock, although their position since 1888 was that of perpetual annuitants, are, it was argued, entitled to look to the security of the whole rates authorised by the statute, because their stocks were declared to be respectively "the first" and "the second charge on the undertaking."

I was much impressed at the discussion by the arguments put forward for the defender, which I have endeavoured to summarise; and by the broad common sense which appeared to underlie them. If it could be demonstrated that to deny the judicial factor power to raise rates would be to reduce his office to a nonentity, and his functions to mere formalities, one would, I think, be constrained to the conclusion that Parliament, in prescribing the appointment of a factor for the particular object specified, intended to confer, and must be held to have conferred upon him, the power which, on the assumption postulated, would be essential to the explication of his jurisdiction. But I am not convinced that this assumption, which lies at the root of the defender's argument, is well founded; and if it fails, I do not think I could construe the statutes as giving the factor implied authority at his own hand to raise or vary this, or any other rate, or to issue such a notice as that quoted in the summons. Now, it seems to me that, apart from so raising rates, there is a good deal that the factor could do towards furthering the object of his appointment. This must, of course, depend upon what the scope of his powers and duties truly is. I was not able to extract from learned counsel upon either side any precise view upon this (to my mind) crucial matter. I have come to the conclusion, upon a careful study of the statutes, that the right of the judicial factor is to receive, if necessary, the whole (i.e. gross) revenues of the undertaking, and apply them in his discretion towards the extinction of the arrears of interest on the stock. To what extent he may consider it prudent or advisable to exercise his right is another matter; but, if the view which I have indicated is sound, it can hardly be said that the power of the factor, though he may not be able to raise rates at his own hand, is necessarily an unreal or ineffectual one. A case to which I was referred at the discussion (Cotton v. Beattie, 1888, 17 R. 262), though it does not touch upon the factor's power to raise or vary rates, seems to me to support the view which I have just stated. It related to a judicial factor appointed under sects. 56 and 57 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act 1845 (8 Vict. cap. 17), the language of which does not appear to differ in any material respect from that under construction in the present case. The Lord President (Inglis) stated in general terms (p. 268) that "the duty of the factor so appointed is to procure payment to himself as factor of so much of the tolls and other sums coming into the hands of the company as will enable him to pay the balance of interest due to the mortgagee. . . . ." Lord M'Laren went pretty fully into the matter, and expressed the opinion (at p. 271) that the factor,—though his duties are those not of a manager but of a "receiver,"—"is entitled to go directly to the cashier or officers of the company who levy the tolls and to receive from them these tolls or other sums of money, and that he is not obliged to go to the directors and take from them what they may please to give him. If he had to go to the directors, the mortgagee might not be in a better position than he was before the application, because they would just say after the appointment as they had done before, that they were without funds, that all their funds were carried away as fast as they were earned by the necessary outgoings of the company. But, being a judicial factor on the estate, he has direct access to to the funds of the company, and it is for the purpose of his having such access that the appointment is made, to enable the mortgagee to enter into possession of the revenues of the company to such extent as shall enable him to pay himself through the factor the interest of his debt." A little further on, Lord M'Laren explains how, in his view, the relations between the judicial factor and the managing body would work out from a practical point of view, and concluded that "the judicial factor would decide for himself what portion of the tolls or earnings he would draw, and what he would choose to leave for the purpose of enabling the business to be carried on." Of course, the concern under consideration in Cotton's case was only a tramway company, and not (as here) a great public undertaking. But the opinions expressed had regard to the construction and effect of statutory language substantially identical with that which I am now endeavouring to construe; and to that extent at least they seem to me to be in point.

I ought, at this stage, for the sake of completeness, to note the other cases, Scottish and English, to which I was referred, with such brief comments on them as are necessary. Haldane's case (1881, 8 R. 669) was one where a judicial factor had been appointed on the undertaking of a railway company under sect. 4 of the Railway Companies (Scotland) Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. cap. 126). The Lord President (Inglis) in the course of his opinion pointed out that a judicial factor so appointed is really a manager invested with the charge and management of the undertaking; and dealt, but only incidentally and by way of contrast, with the position of a judicial factor appointed under sects. 56 and 57 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act 1845. The Edinburgh Northern Tramways Co. (1888, 15 R. 641) was concerned with the appointment of Mr Cotton as judicial factor on the tramway undertaking already referred to, under the sections of the Act of 1845. The Lord President (Inglis) contrasted his position with that of Mr Haldane in the preceding case, and said "he is what is called in England a receiver, and, so far as I understand, he was appointed to receive a portion of the income of the company sufficient to pay the overdue interest upon the petitioner's mortgages. That is the whole object and aim of the appointment." I have already dealt with Cotton's case (1889, 17 R. 262), which was the sequel of the case just referred to, and seems to me to be much the most useful of the decisions, Scottish or English, of which I am aware. Coming now to the English cases, I think they require to be approached with considerable caution and reserve by a Scots lawyer. The name "judicial factor" is unknown in England. They have there "managers" and "receivers." I gather that the latter word is capable of a great variety of significations and applications. I understand that the English Court of Chancery originally had, and since 1873 the High Court of Justice has possessed, power to appoint a receiver wherever the circumstances appeared to the Court to make it expedient to do so. One may refer to Kerr's Law and Practice as to Receivers (5th ed., 1905), as illustrative of the different duties and functions which a receiver may in England be appointed to exercise. I have not, I confess, been able to derive much assistance from the authorities which were cited to me. These were Gardner, 1867, L.R. 2 Chan. 201—the well-known case which immediately preceded, and indeed was the cause of the railway legislation of that year; Marshall, 1895, 2 Chan. 36—a tramway case, where a receiver was appointed at the instance of debenture-holders, but the appointment of a manager was refused; in re Manchester and Milford Railway Co., 1880, 14 Chan. Div. 645—a case under the English Railway Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. cap. 127), where the import of the words "the appointment of a receiver or, if necessary, of a manager," were discussed and explained by the Court of Appeal; Attree, 1878, 9 Chan. Div. 337, referred to only for some observations by James, L.J. (at pp. 348–350), on the functions of a receiver; and Ames v. Trustees of the Birkenhead Docks, 1855, 20 Beav. 332, for similar observations by Sir J. Romilly, M.R.

I have considered the case before me to the best of my ability, and with the aid of the opinions expressed in Cotton v. Beattie. As already indicated, I do not think it can be affirmed that power to raise rates is essential to the judicial factor, in order to any effectual exercise of his office. It is not for me to consider whether or not it would have been better that Parliament should have conferred such a power upon him. If such a power is not essential to him in order to give his office any real significance, it seems to me that the defender's argument loses much of its apparent weight; for, although the possession of a power to raise rates would doubtless enhance the factor's powers, that is not per se a warrant for construing the statutes as impliedly conferring it upon him. I cannot assume that the trustees will act obstinately or unreasonably in their management, or decline absolutely to co-operate with the judicial factor in endeavouring to further the legitimate interests of all concerned. On the other hand, I apprehend that no prudent and reasonable factor would, in the interests of his constituents, seek to reduce the working expenses of the harbour below the minimum at which the docks (his only possible source of revenue) can be efficiently carried on. But down to that limit he can, if the views I have expressed are correct, exercise a vigilant and effective control over expenditure; as indeed I gather from his pleadings he has to some extent already done. It seems to me that much must depend upon the extent to which the judicial factor and the trustees, as practical men of business, are prepared to set themselves to co-operate in doing the best for all concerned,—the factor having, of course, due regard to the legitimate interests of the stock-holders, and the trustees to those of the harbour. I do not prejudge the question whether, under any circumstances, the Court, on competent application by a factor in the defender's position, and on being satisfied that those charged by Parliament with the management of the undertaking were acting unreasonably in refusing to raise a rate or rates, might not find a remedy by granting the factor special power to do so. All that I now decide is that in my opinion the judicial factor was not entitled, at his own hand, to raise the rate, or to issue the notice of which the pursuers now complain. Decree of declarator must therefore be pronounced; but I think the words "at his own hand," which occur in the pursuers' first plea in law, though not in the summons, should be inserted at appropriate places in the interlocutor, in view of possible eventualities in the future. — 20th February 1908.

I. Right in Security—Heritable Security—Extinction—Confusio—Creditor in Bond and Disposition in Security Obtaining Ex Facie Absolute Disposition of Security Subjects — Back-Letter by Creditor Acknowledging That Disposition Truly Granted in Security of Advances—Back-Letter Not Recorded — Question With Heritable Creditor Whose Security Subsequent in Date to Original Security, but Prior in Date to Absolute Disposition — Held Bond and Disposition in Security Not Extinguished Confusione in a Question With Second Heritable Creditor.

II. Ground-Annual—Extinction—Confusio—Opinion (per Lord Guthrie) That a Ground-Annual May Be Extinguished Confusione.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Guthrie.

On 14th March 1903 Robert Riddagh, builder, Airdrie, granted a bond and disposition in security for the sum of £1070 in favour of John King, 5 Burnbank Road, Hamilton, and of Mrs Helen Robb or King, his wife, over the subjects 42 to 58 Bell Street, Airdrie. The bond was recorded on 17th March 1903.

At the date of recording, the security subjects were burdened by (1) five contracts of ground-annual amounting in cumulo to £27, 10s. per annum; and (2) two bonds and dispositions in security, each for the sum of £350. James Aitken, writer, Glasgow was the creditor in the ground-annuals and in the bonds and dispositions in security.

By disposition dated 8th and recorded 9th May 1903, Robert Riddagh disponed the security subjects to James Aitken. The disposition was ex facie absolute, but on 30th May 1903 James Aitken granted a back-letter whereby he acknowledged that he held the subjects in security of advances made or to be made by him to Robert Riddagh. On 9th May 1903 James Aitken was, as shewn by the records (1) holder of the five ground-annuals; (2) holder of the two bonds for £350; and (3) owner of the security subjects.

The said bonds and dispositions in security were subsequently assigned by James Aitken to George Readman, advocate, Edinburgh, and thereafter by George Readman to the Rev. William Johnston, minister of Uphall, and his wife Mrs Eliza Arbuckle or Johnston. The ground-annuals were assigned by James Aitken to the said George Readman, and were subsequently acquired by the trustee in James Aitken's sequestration.

On 1st March 1907 the said John King and Mrs Helen Robb or King brought the present action (1) against the Rev. William Johnston and Mrs Johnston for declarator that the bonds and dispositions for £350 were extinguished as at 9th May 1903, and (2) against the trustee in James Aitken's sequestration for declarator that the ground-annuals were extinguished as at 9th May 1903.

On 30th December 1907 the Lord Ordinary (Guthrie) assoilzied the defenders the Rev. William Johnston and Mrs Johnston from the conclusions of the summons, and found that the ground-annuals were not extinguished confusione in the person of James Aitken.

He issued the following opinion:—

Lord Guthrie.—The pursuers are heritable creditors for £1070 over certain subjects in Ardrie. If these subjects are burdened by the two bonds and the ground-annuals mentioned in the summons, the pursuers' bonds, looking to the value of the subjects, are believed to be valueless. The pursuers seek declarator that the defenders' bonds and ground-annuals were extinguished confusione.

The pursuers' bond for £1070 is dated 17th March 1903. At that date Robert Riddagh was proprietor of the subjects, and the bond was granted by him.

Prior to 17th March 1903 the bonds for £350 were granted by Riddagh in favour of James Aitken. Subsequently to 17th March 1903—namely, on 9th May 1903—Aitken acquired the subjects over which both sets of bonds were placed in security, by an ex facie absolute disposition, under back-letters. The pursuers say that the £350 bonds were extinguished confusione in Aitken's person on 9th May 1903. These bonds were assigned between 1904 and 1906 to Mr George Readman, who assigned them to the defenders Johnston's trustees.

The ground-annuals mentioned in the summons were created for Aitken by Riddagh in 1901 and 1902. The pursuers say that they were also extinguished confusione in Aitken's person when he acquired the subjects, although only in security, on 9th May 1903 These ground-annuals are held by the defender, Aitken's trustee. . . .

The defenders deny confusion, because: 1, Aitken did not acquire the subjects on 9th May 1903 as absolute proprietor, but as a trustee for Riddagh; 2, so far as the ground-annuals are concerned, because ground-annuals cannot, like bonds, be extinguished confusione; and 3, because it must be presumed that Aitken's intention, when he got the conveyance of 9th May 1903, was to keep alive both the bonds for £350 and the ground-annuals.

1. The pursuers admit that if, as in a question with them, the back-letters must be recognised, then their case fails. To operate confusion, one and the same person must become both debtor and creditor. But if the back-letters receive effect, while Aitken, at the date of the conveyance, was absolute creditor under the bonds, he did not become absolute debtor under the bonds in respect of the conveyance, but only trustee for the debtor. That this was in fact his position is admitted. If so, it does not matter whether the back-letters were recorded or not. The pursuers' rights were fixed on 17th March 1903. At that date the bonds for £350 each and the ground-annuals existed as prior rights, coming before the pursuers' security. . . . It must be held to have been their own fault if the pursuers did not know about the bonds which were recorded, and about the ground-annuals which were mentioned in their bond. The pursuers' security might have been improved at any time by Aitken becoming absolute proprietor of the subjects. But he never did become absolute proprietor, but, by a transaction with which the pursuers had nothing to do, he came into the position of a heritable creditor, with an ex facie absolute disposition, qualified by back-letters. I therefore sustain the defenders' contention.

2. The defenders say that so far as the ground-annuals are concerned there could be no confusion, because confusio does not operate to extinguish ground-annuals. On this matter, in the case of Murray v. MacEwan, 1890, 18 R. 287, opposite opinions were expressed by Lord Rutherfurd Clark, who thought that confusio might operate extinction of a ground-annual, which is "nothing more than an obligation for payment of an annuity secured over the heritable estate," and by Lord Kinnear and Lord Trayner, who thought that ground-annuals, being ex facie irredeemable rights in land, completed by infeftment, cannot be extinguished confusione. I take the same view as that expressed by Lord Rutherfurd Clark. In a question of extinction, it is significant that, in ground-annuals as distinguished from feu-duties, the real security is destroyed by the negative prescription if the ground-annual is omitted from the title for forty years.

The Pursuers reclaimed and argued: Where a heritable creditor acquired the ownership of the security subjects, the security was extinguished confusione. Now, the disponee under an ex facie absolute disposition was feudal owner of the subjects disponed. The back-letter not being recorded, could not affect the feudal title (Scottish Heritable Security Co. Ltd. v. Allan Campbell & Co. Ltd., 1876, 3 R. 333; Union Bank of Scotland Ltd. v. National Bank of Scotland Ltd., 1886, 14 R. (H.L.) 1, per Lord Watson; Lord Blantyre v. Dunn, 1858, 20 D. 1188, per Lord Mackenzie, Ordinary, at p. 1193); ex facie of the records, therefore, Aitken was on 9th May 1903 both creditor in the bonds and owner of the security subjects. The pursuers were entitled to rely on the records. In questions of heritable right the strict feudal rules must be applied, and intention was immaterial (Bald v. Buchannan, 1787, 2 Ross L.C. (Land Rights) 210). Accordingly, the bonds in question were extinguished confusione as at 9th May 1903. Mackenzie v. Gordon, 1839, M'L. and Rob App. 117, aff. 16 S. 311, was distinguishable. There the parties pleading confusio were the representatives of the party in whose person confusio was alleged to have taken place. Further, they were held to have known the whole facts. That was enough to bar them from founding on the records (Petrie v. Forsyth, 1874, 2 R. 214; Stodart v. Dalzell, 1876, 4 R. 236). Counsel also referred to Hogg v. Brack, 1832, 11 S. 198.

Argued for the Defenders the Rev. William and Mrs Johnston: In order that confusio might take place it was necessary that the same person should be absolute debtor and absolute creator (Bell, Prin., sect. 580). Here Aitken was not absolute creditor because the back-letter prevented him from being absolute owner of the subjects (Bell, Lect., 3rd edition, p. 1173). It was immaterial that the back letter had not been recorded. Further, it was necessary that both properties should be held by the same person in the same character (Lawrie v. Donald, 1830, 9 S. 147). In the present case Aitken under the disposition was a quasi trustee. Confusio did not operate where the party in whom it was alleged to have taken place had an interest to keep up the debt (Fleming v. Imrie, 1868, 6 M. 363). Counsel also referred to Murray v. Parlane's Tr., 1890, 18 R. 287.

The Court adhered.

Lord Low.—The question which we have to determine in this case is whether the two bonds and dispositions in security granted by Riddagh in Aitken's favour have been extinguished confusione? It appears that Riddagh, who is a builder, acquired certain ground which had been divided into six lots for building purposes. Aitken lent him two sums of £350 each, and in security of each loan he disponed to Aitken one lot of ground. Subsequently Aitken made further advances to Riddagh, in security of which Riddagh granted to him an ex facie absolute disposition of the whole ground, which was qualified by a back-letter from Aitken, acknowledging that the disposition was in security only. The disposition was duly registered, but the back-letter remained unrecorded.

It is not disputed that if the disposition had been in fact as well as in form absolute, the rights of security which Aitken had in the two lots would have been extinguished. But in fact the disposition was only in security, and if Riddagh had paid his debt Aitken would have been bound to re-convey the ground to him. If that had been done, it is plain that Riddagh would have got back the two plots under burden of Aitken's securities. Now if the securities were not extinguished in a question with Riddagh, why should they be so in a question with the pursuers, who derived their right from Riddagh, prior to the date of the ex facie absolute disposition to Aitken? The pursuers say that they were entitled to rely upon the records, and that as nothing appeared upon the register except the absolute disposition, it must be assumed that the property of the ground had been conveyed to Aitken. That would have been a good argument if the pursuers had acquired their title from Aitken after the registration of the absolute disposition in his favour, or even, it may be, if they had done something, or refrained from doing something, in reliance upon the register. But no considerations of that kind are present. The position of the pursuers simply is that prior to the date of the absolute disposition, they obtained a bond and disposition in security for £1070 from Riddagh, postponed to the two bonds in favour of Aitken.

In these circumstances it appears to me that no question arises involving the faith of the records. The question is really one of fact, namely, whether Aitken did or did not acquire an absolute right to the ground. For the reasons which I have given I think that it is clear that he did not do so, and accordingly the pursuers' case fails.

I am therefore of opinion that we must adhere to the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor.

Lord Ardwall.—I am of opinion that the course proposed by Lord Low is the right one, and should be followed. I think the case a clear one, and I am somewhat surprised that this plea of confusio was ever put forward. It is, however, the only question that has been argued. It is said that the two bonds for £350 have been extinguished confusione, with the result that the pursuers' bond for £1070 is now a first security over the subjects in question. Now at the time when the pursuers obtained this bond, the state of the record was that in front of the bond which they were getting there stood these two bonds for £350 each on the record, and they therefore took their bond as a security postponed to the debts represented by these two other bonds. They say that they are now entitled to stand in the position of first bondholders, because, owing to a subsequent transaction with which admittedly they had nothing to do and to which they were in no way parties, these two bonds have been extinguished confusione. It appears to me to be settled law that confusio only takes place in a case where the full and absolute right of the creditor and the full and absolute right of the debtor merge in one and the same person, and in no other circumstances.

Now what was the case here? We have not the bonds before us, but it has not been alleged that the personal obligations in the bonds have ever been discharged; and therefore Riddagh remained the debtor to Aitken in these sums throughout, and it is vain to say that Aitken ever became the debtor for them. This is sufficient, I think, to dispose of the plea of confusio so far as the mere debt is concerned, because, as I understand the pursuers' case, they nowhere allege that Riddagh did not remain throughout the debtor in these sums to James Aitken.

But a plea which is not in so many words stated on the record was argued upon the reclaiming note to the effect that the security title under the two bonds in which Aitken was vested at the time when the pursuers' bond was granted became merged in and extinguished by the absolute title to the subjects which he subsequently obtained from Riddagh, with the result of leaving the pursuers' bond the first security on the subjects. Now I do not think that it has been decided that if "A" holds a recorded bond and disposition in security for a certain sum over a property, and "B" subsequently obtains another bond and disposition in security over the same property, and thereafter "A" obtains an absolute disposition of the said property, the result necessarily is that A's security for his debt is postponed to B's security, or, to express it otherwise, is extinguished, in consequence of "A" having acquired the property in fee. But this general question was not argued, the defenders being content to rest their case on the safer ground that Aitken was never truly, as matter of fact or law, absolute proprietor of the subjects in question, because although he held them under an ex facie absolute disposition granted by Riddagh, that disposition was qualified by a back-letter. I am of opinion that this argument is well founded.

Aitken was really holding as a quasi trustee for behoof of Riddagh, under the obligation, if the debts in respect of which he had obtained the absolute disposition were paid off, to re-convey the property to Riddagh, or if the property were sold under the bonds, to account for the reversion of the price. And it was Riddagh who still remained the true proprietor of these subjects, because it was he who had the radical right thereto, and who had the interest in the reversion. That being so, it appears to me that confusio cannot be held to have taken place, because Aitken was never truly the absolute proprietor of the subjects over which the bonds were granted but only an encumbrancer. But it was argued very strenuously by Mr MacRobert that it did not matter what the nature of the transaction was, so long as on the face of the records it appeared that these two bonds had been extinguished in the person of James Aitken by the disposition in his favour. Upon that point I have only to say this, that in my opinion this is not a question depending merely on the records—it is the true state of the facts that has to be looked to. The case of Mackenzie, 1838, 16 Shaw 311, referred to in the debate, seems to be almost a direct authority for this proposition, that notwithstanding that it may appear on the face of the records that the characters of creditor in a heritable bond and proprietor of the subjects over which the bond was granted have become united in the same person, yet if it be the fact that the person is not truly absolute proprietor of the subjects but holds them on some lesser title, confusio will not take place. None of the cases quoted for the pursuers seem to me to be 2nd Div. authorities to the contrary. I accordingly think that the Lord Ordinary's judgment ought to be affirmed.

This was an action of damages for slander contained in an article in a newspaper of which the defenders were the proprietors. The case was tried before the Lord President and a jury on 23rd December 1907, when the jury returned a verdict for the pursuer and assessed the damages at £250.

The defenders applied for a new trial, on the ground that the damages awarded were excessive.

The following authorities were referred to in argument, viz.: Casey v. United Collieries Ltd., 1907, S.C. 690; Praed v. Graham [1889], 24 Q.B.D. 53; Hunter & Co. v. Stubbs Ltd., 1903, 5 F. 920; Johnston v. Dilke, 1875, 2 R. 836; Ritchie v. Barton, 1883, 10 R. 813.

The Lord President referred to Watt v. Watt, 1905, A.C. 115, in reference to the powers of the Court.

Before judgment was pronounced, counsel for both parties, in answer to the Lord President, agreed to leave themselves entirely in the hands of the Court as regards a reduction of damages and the amount to be awarded.

The Court reduced the amount of damages to £125; found the pursuer entitled to the expenses of the action other than those connected with the application for a new trial; and, quoad ultra, found no expenses due to or by either party.

The Lord President.—The finding of the Court is that the verdict be reduced to £125, which will carry the expenses of the action with the exception of those connected with the motion for a new trial, as to which no expenses will be found due to or by either party. I think it right, for the guidance of the Bar and of the profession in general, to say a few words more, for this is the first case since the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Watt v. Watt [1905], A.C. 115, in which we have had an opportunity of stating the opinion of the Court in this matter. After the judgment in that case, it is no longer possible to follow the old practice by which, in cases where the Court thought that the amount of the damages found due by the jury was excessive, but that the verdict was otherwise justified, the Court were in the habit, without consulting the defender, of giving the pursuer the alternative of accepting the amount which they thought reasonable, or of facing a new trial. The case of Watt seems to have laid down that the consent of the pursuer only is not enough, and that a verdict for a new amount can be pronounced by the Court only with the consent of both parties. Accordingly, in the present case we should not have done as we have done to-day had we not previously obtained the consent of both parties.

I may add that, speaking as the judge who presided at the trial, it is my opinion that, had a new trial been granted, the pursuer would again have secured a verdict; for although I do not think that any malus animus was proved on the part of the writer of the article, still I think that the article associated the pursuer with a somewhat doubtful transaction with which he had nothing to do, and that this had been taken advantage of to injure the pursuer in his profession. At the same time the damages found due by the jury were excessive—more than double the whole earnings of the pursuer for the year. Looking to the fact that his character has been completely cleared, we think that the sum which we have awarded is sufficient compensation.

Lord M'Laren.—I am of the same opinion. The judgment of the House of Lords in the case of Watt [1905], A.C. 115, is of course subject to the observation that it was pronounced in a case in England, where the conditions and rules relating to jury practice have been largely innovated by statute, while we have kept to the practice as it existed in the time of George III., when juries in civil cases were introduced into this country. But in this case I cannot think that the differences between English and Scottish practice can prevent a decision of the House of Lords being binding on us in the Courts of Scotland. There may be cases where the defender might have good reason for refusing to consent to the assessment of damages by the Court. It might be that the verdict of the jury, in addition to being excessive in the amount of the damages awarded, was also unreasonable in the view taken of the evidence, though not so unreasonable as to warrant its being set aside as contrary to the evidence. In such a case the defender might be justified in saying, "The verdict is so absurd that I prefer to have a new trial." I may say that, if the point were open, my individual opinion would be in agreement with the judgment in the case of Watt.

Lord Kinnear.—I entirely agree with your Lordship. I am satisfied that the judgment of the House of Lords is binding upon us, because it proceeds upon principles which apply as much in this country as in England. I cannot doubt, after your Lordship's explanations, that the defenders in this case have exercised a wise discretion in agreeing to leave the assessment of damages to the Court, but I quite agree that we could not have compelled them to do so.—27th February 1908.

Geddes, 1874, 1 R. 1198, Approved—Jack v. Begg, 1875, 3 R. 35, Distinguished. 1st Div. Wilson v. Pottinger.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Guthrie.

This was an action at the instance of one proprietor against a neighbouring proprietor for declarator that the defender had illegally encroached on his property, in building on a gable separating their properties beyond the line of the gable, and to have the defender decerned to remove his building so far as it encroached on the pursuer's property.

The pursuer and defender were proprietors respectively of two adjoining house properties which were separated by a gable belonging to the pursuer. This gable was 9½ inches in thickness for a distance of 20 feet or thereby back from the front of the property, and 14 inches thick for the remaining distance, and it was two storeys in height. The defender, who proposed to erect a four-storeyed tenement on his property, asked and obtained permission from the pursuer to build upon the gable. On application to the Dean of Guild Court for a lining, that Court insisted on the gable being 14 inches in thickness, and plans approved by the Dean of Guild Court shewing the position of the tenement were signed by the pursuer.

The defender, in erecting his tenement, increased the thickness of the gable above the first storey by the insertion of an iron beam in the front of the tenement and other beams parallel thereto, all projecting over the gable, on the ends of which he rested a cross-beam, and on that beam and the gable built the remaining portion of the gable of his tenement. The effect was that the defender's gable for a distance of 20 feet or thereby projected to the extent of 4½ inches over the pursuer's property.

There were several questions of fact as to which it is unnecessary to enter in detail. These included questions whether the original plans had been altered; whether the altered plans, if they were altered, correctly shewed the position of the gable as it was in fact erected; and the state of the pursuer's knowledge when he signed certain of these plans. The Lord President held that the original plans had in fact been altered, but that the plans which were signed by the pursuer shewed the encroachment of the gable.

The Lord Ordinary granted decree for removal of the encroachment within three months.

Wilson v. Pottinger.

Lord Guthrie.—The pursuer and defender are owners of adjoining buildings in Main Street, Newhaven. The pursuer built his house and shop of two storeys, with bakehouse and oven behind, in 1903, and the defender erected his four-storey premises in 1906. Both sites had been previously occupied by old buildings, jointly occupied on the lower floor, but divided by a wooden partition 9 inches thick. The pursuer's house lies to the east of the defender's.

When the defender built in 1906, he used the pursuer's west gable as his east gable to its full height, namely, two storeys. At an interview on 26th June 1906, and by letter of that date, quoted in Cond. 5, it was arranged that the defender should obtain the further height required by him on the east, by building on the top of the pursuer's west gable, compensation to be made as therein specified. Disregarding a stair, which, not being bonded into the wall, is not part of it, the breadth of the pursuer's east gable, for a distance of at least 20 feet back from the street, is 9½ inches. The defender proposed to heighten that part of the gable by building on it to the same breadth, but the Dean of Guild Court in Leith insisted, through the Burgh Surveyor, that the additional height should be 14 inches broad. Instead of the defender making the necessary projection of 4½ inches (being the difference between 9½ inches and 14 inches) on his own side of the gable, he, unfortunately, resolved to build so that, while the additional height was flush on his own side with the gable, as built by the pursuer, it projected on the pursuer's side 4½ inches—to that extent overlapping the pursuer's property. There were practical reasons in favour of this course, and the pursuer would have had no interest to refuse his consent had the matter been explained to him and his consent asked, on a proper offer of compensation. But, as I hold on the evidence, the defender, without obtaining the pursuer's consent, proceeded to build his 14-inch extension, so as to project 4½ inches beyond the original gable, and over the pursuer's property. The pursuer objected, but the defender completed his operations in October 1906.

The pursuer now asks removal of the building erected by the defender on the top of the pursuer's east gable to the extent, namely, 4½ inches, to which that building extends beyond the thickness of the pursuer's original gable, and over the pursuer's property. He, however, intimated at the proof, through his counsel, that he does not propose to enforce the decree, but desires only to obtain compensation.

The dispute is a lamentable one. The defender began the trouble by resolving to thicken the heightened part of the gable on the pursuer's side, instead of on his own, and by proceeding to begin the encroachment without obtaining the pursuer's consent; and he put himself still further in the wrong by refusing to desist, when remonstrated with by the pursuer. On the other hand, when the dispute arose, while the defender's agents accurately described it in correspondence as "a trifling affair," the pursuer and his agents, with great lack of perspective, failed to recognise how little interest the pursuer had to object to the defender's operations. Instead of endangering the stability of the pursuer's building, these operations probably made the pursuer's building more secure than if the increased breadth of the gable had been on the defender's own side, and although they involved occupation, for a breadth of 4½ inches and a length of 20 feet, of air space belonging to the pursuer, this air space would require to have been occupied whenever the pursuer's building was heightened, in which event the defender's encroachment would have been available as a mutual gable for the pursuer's heightened building. The pursuer also erred in assuming that the defender was not willing to pay for the full damage to the pursuer caused by the defender's whole operations, including the admitted encroachment of 4½ inches. As it now turns out, the decree of removing which I am asked to pronounce is only to be used as a preliminary to obtaining compensation, which the defender has all along been willing to pay. In short, the whole dispute between the parties could have been settled by arbitration in four hours instead of four days, and at an expense of as many pence as the case will cost the parties pounds. If arbitration failed before the case came into Court, the parties should have agreed to a judicial reference, or at all events to a judicial remit for a report.

But I must decide the questions brought before me on their legal merits, protesting at the same time that if it were competent, I should dismiss the summons, without costs to either party, on the principle de minimis non curat prætor.

The condescendence and defences raise three questions:—First, was there in fact an encroachment of 4½ inches? Second, if so, was this authorised by the pursuer? and Third, if not authorised, is the pursuer entitled to a decree of removing?

As explained at the proof, although the defences do not make it clear, the defender admits that the pursuer's 9½-inch gable, so far as heightened by him and thickened to 14 inches, projects, to the extent of 4½ inches, over the pursuer's property. But he disputed the pursuer's right to decree, in terms of his second declaratory conclusion, because he maintains that the encroachment was not unwarrantable or illegal.

The defender claims the pursuer's authority for his operations, first, from what passed in conversation between them on 26th June 1906; second, on the terms of the letter of that date quoted in Condescendence 5; and third, on the contents of the plans, No. 39 of process, approved by the pursuer's docquet. As to the conversation alleged by the defender, his account is directly contradicted by the pursuer. As to the letter, an arrangement for heightening a gable may, so far as consistent with safety, authorise building beyond the area of the gable, but only on the builder's own side. As to the plans, it is not proved that the alterations shewing the thickened gable were on the plans when shewn to the pursuer. But, even if they were, these alterations are not so drawn as to give reasonable notice of intended overlapping to a man like the pursuer, and the front elevation is inconsistent both with the "1, 2 and 3 flat plan," and with the roof plan.

The question of the appropriate remedy remains. Although reluctant to give decree of removal, I do not think the pursuer has done anything to bar himself from the remedy claimed. As I read the oral evidence and the correspondence, it is not proved that he ever consented to the defender's operations, or that he failed timeously to object to them, or that he led the defender to think that he would be content with compensation and would waive his legal right to removal. Thus I do not find the element of bar or acquiescence which, in one form or another, was involved in the series of cases commented on by Lord Watson in Magistrates of Kirkcaldy v. Graham, 1882, 9 R. (H.L.) 91. To refuse the pursuer the remedy of removal would be, in Lord Watson's words, "to give the wrongdoer compulsory powers to acquire part of his neighbour's property, which, in spite of remonstrance, he had illegally appropriated. . . . "

The defender reclaimed.

No argument was submitted by either side as to the competency of the remedy craved, beyond the defender's contention that the maxim de minimis non curat prætor applied.

The Court recalled the interlocutor reclaimed against and dismissed the action.

The Lord President.—This case arose out of the heightening of a small tenement in Newhaven. In order to heighten that tenement the person who is the defender in this case had of course to submit plans to the Dean of Guild Court. He proposed to make use of the gable which was between his property and that of his next-door neighbour on the east; but he seems to have been aware that, to say the least of it, there was great doubt, indeed I would be more correct to put it more strongly, and to say he knew, that the gable in question was not a mutual gable, and accordingly he approached his next-door proprietor for permission to build upon the gable. He was going to carry his own house to a height considerably greater than that of his next-door neighbour's, which only extended to two storeys; and the parties approached each other, and their negotiations were expressed in the following letter which was addressed by the defender in this case to the pursuer on 26th June 1906: "Dear Sir,—With regard to the gable between your house and my ground that I am to build upon, I am prepared to pay you whatever you're entitled to. The amount can be agreed on between you and myself, or any other party that we may appoint, on your approving of my plans.—Yours faithfully." It is not disputed by the pursuer that to that letter, whatever it means, he agreed. There is a controversy between the parties as to whether any plans had been shewn before that letter was written or not. I do not know that it matters. It is quite clear that at the time that letter was written the plans were before the Dean of Guild Court in their original condition; and to explain what that was, I must give your Lordships a short description of them and of the gable wall in question. The gable wall in question was a 14-inch wall for a number of feet measuring from the back of the tenement towards the front, but towards the front of the tenement the wall narrowed down from 14 inches thick to 9½ inches. Now, it is undoubtedly the case that the defender's original idea was to utilise this gable wall as a medium wall to the ground storey, and also as a support to the tall gable on to which he was going to build a tenement. He undoubtedly meant originally merely to carry the gable up, that is to say that where it was 14 inches it would be 14 inches, and where it was 9½ inches it would be 9½. After he had got this consent the case proceeded before the Dean of Guild Court, who, acting upon what seems to be a general rule, insisted that, as the tenement in question was to be a four-storeyed tenement, the 9½-inch portion of the wall would not do, and that a 14-inch wall would be necessary all along. The defender inserted brackets at each end of the 9½-inch wall, on which he placed an iron beam running parallel with the top of the wall, and then he carried the gable up for the additional thickness which was necessary, making it a 14-inch wall right up to the top. Now in doing so this iron beam makes an overhang of 4½ inches, which is over the pursuer's property; and the action is raised to have it declared that these 4½ inches belonged to him, and to have the defender ordained to that extent to take away the wall of his building. The Lord Ordinary has taken a view of the import of the letter which has prevented him from arriving at the conclusion which he has plainly indicated he wished to do. He says: "As to the letter, an arrangement for heightening a gable may, so far as consistent with safety, authorise building beyond the area of the gable, but only on the builder's own side." I do not think that is the proper view to take of the letter. Its construction is plain and simple. Looking to the whole surrounding circumstances, it seems to me perfectly clear that the meaning of the consent to the building on the gable was to a building on the gable of which the Dean of Guild Court should finally provide the authorised plans. Then, there is no doubt the plans were altered, and I think it was clearly proved that the signature of the pursuer, which was adhibited to those plans, was adhibited after the alterations had been made. I agree that it may very well be that the pursuer, being a man unskilled in plans, did not, if I may use the cant expression, wake up to the fact that the alterations had been made, and that these 4½ overhanging inches were upon his property; but I do not think he can take any benefit from that. If he chooses to put his signature to a plan authorised by the Dean of Guild Court, I think he takes his chance as to what this plan precisely shewed. In other words, I do not, as the Lord Ordinary has done, first of all conclude that the agreement was for a gable wall of 9½ inches, and then that there was a new arrangement for a gable wall of 14 inches. I look upon the agreement as for such gable as the Dean of Guild authorises, and then I find that what the Dean of Guild authorised was fairly brought to the pursuer's notice by the production of the plans. It is quite true that these plans are not strictly accurate, especially they are inaccurate in two particulars. In the first place, being evidently desirous of economising space, they make one plan do for the first, second and third floors, and the one plan does not shew the condition of each floor and its flooring level; and in the second place, it is equally clear that the elevation is not accurately altered as it ought to have been, so as to make a corresponding alteration in the thickening of the wall. But although this minute criticism can be substantiated, at the same time I have no hesitation in saying that any man who understood a plan could see that it was meant to carry up a 14-inch wall which should overhang this space. I do not know that the pursuer understood that. He had no technical training, and plans are things that require a little training and some understanding; but if he chooses to sign a plan he takes the risk of misunderstanding it. It seems to me that that ends the case. But I wish to say that, even if I were not of that opinion, the pursuer could not succeed. When you come to such a small question as the overlapping of a boundary wall by 4½ inches, I think the jurisdiction of the Court is as has been illustrated in the leading case of Sanderson v. Geddes, 1874, 1 R. 1198. I do not find that Lord Watson throws the slightest doubt on Sanderson v. Geddes in his judgment in Graham v. Magistrates of Kirkcaldy. On the contrary, what Lord Watson did not like was Jack v. Begg, 1875, 3 R. 35, and the issue in Jack v. Begg was very different from that in Sanderson v. Geddes; and Sanderson v. Geddes was entirely different from the case of Graham v. Magistrates of Kirkcaldy, 1882, 9 R. (H.L.) 91. But the Lord Ordinary, in quoting Lord Watson's dictum, confuses Sanderson v. Geddes, in which there was no transference of property at all, with Jack v. Begg, where there was, and ordains the defender to take down what has been put up. I think this is one of those cases (if I could project my mind a century or so after this, or if there is an earthquake, and the buildings are demolished) in which the boundary will remain as before. This operation does not alter the boundary, and it is out of the question for the pursuer to insist that the building should be taken down. The only possible remedy was by making application for interdict, when the building was being erected, and it is no answer to that to say that the pursuer's agent was ill. Accordingly, even if I had not come to the conclusion at which I have arrived, I should have thought the remedy was not an appropriate one. I propose that we should recal the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and dismiss the action. I think probably that is a preferable course to assoilzieing the defender. I do not wish this action to be held as fixing anything as to the rights of parties in the gable. I therefore propose that we dismiss the action, and find the defender entitled to expenses.

Lord M'Laren.—As I agree with your Lordship, I have little to add. The agreement was one which entitled the defender to build upon the pursuer's gable, that is, to derive support for his upper storeys from the pursuer's gable; and it is evident that the parties were not in a position to determine at the time of the agreement what would be the precise value of the support that was to be given or the damage that might be done, because that was left to be determined by arbitration. These are expressed conditions. There was another thing which both parties, I must assume, knew, that all building plans are subject to the control of the Dean of Guild Court, and therefore the contract must have been affected by the implied condition that the building was to be in such form as the Dean of Guild Court should order. These conditions, expressed or implied, seem to me to cover the whole ground, and to leave nothing to be pointed out, explained, or proved, supposing a proof were competent. Then, on the other branch of the case, I think there is sufficient authority in the region of decision to shew that we have to a certain extent at least adopted the principle of the Roman law, that a person who builds in good faith on another's property is not necessarily to be compelled to take down his building. If the value of the building greatly exceeds that of the ground he occupies, the case can be explicated by paying compensation, whatever may be the agreement. I should be sorry if any doubt were thrown upon the doctrine that where there is an inconsiderable encroachment upon neighbour's land by buildings which are substantially, and for all practical purposes, upon the builder's own land, the law of the land will not compel him to take it down. If the law were altered in this particular case, it would be one in which the application would be perhaps in the highest degree inequitable. To take down the gable would practically amount to the demolition of the whole house, by withdrawing from the other parts of the building the security which the gable affords, and altering the distribution of the weights and pressures of the house. It might make the house a complete wreck, and all this for 4½ inches. I most heartily endorse all that your Lordship has said upon that part of the case. I agree that the action should be dismissed.

Lord Kinnear.—I entirely agree upon this ground, that when the owner of house property within a burgh agrees to allow his neighbour to build upon the gable wall, there is a plain implication that the building is to be erected according to the conditions that may be imposed by the Dean of Guild Court. The thing cannot be done otherwise, as both parties must be supposed to have known, and therefore the pursuer, if he allows it to be done at all, allows it to be done in that way. I think the case does not rest there, because he was asked to allow the gable to be built upon according to the plans which were passing through the Dean of Guild Court, and he therefore knew they would be subject to supervision, and might be altered to satisfy the conditions which the Court might impose. On that ground I think he has failed entirely to shew that there has been any unlawful encroachment on his property. If there had been, I agree further, for the reason your Lordship has given, that the remedy would have been altogether inappropriate, and his claim would have been for compensation for any prejudice he might suffer. I wish to add that I think it must be admitted that some proof was necessary, because the letter which the defender wrote does not bind the pursuer, unless he assented to it, and it was necessary to shew that there was an agreement upon which the one party consented that the other should act.—7th February 1908.

I. Process—Decree—Decree for Expenses in Name of Agent-Disburser — Suspension on Ground that No Motion had Been Made for Such Decree—Suspension Refused.

II. Process—Competent and Omitted—Decree for Expenses in Name of Agent-Disburser — Suspension, on Ground that Person in Whose Name Decree Given was Not Agent-Disburser and Not a Qualified Law Agent, Refused.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Mackenzie.

The suspender reclaimed against the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary repelling the reasons of suspension.

Argued for Suspender: (1) The Sheriff had no jurisdiction to give decree in the terms in which it was given. It was not in conformity with the motion, notice of which was given to the suspender, and which was therefore the only competent motion. (2) The plea of competent and omitted was not a competent plea in regard to Sheriff Court procedure (Ersk., IV. 3, 7; Act 1672, cap. 16, sect. 19). James could not maintain the decree, as he was not the agent for the party, and he had disbursed nothing. Disbursement was necessary (Rennie & Playfair v. Aitken, 8th June 1811, F.C.; Bell's Com., II. pp. 35, 37, n. 3. The Act of Sederunt, 10th July 1839, sect. 109, did not import any special privilege in the Sheriff Court. The word "procurator" there was used in the sense of "law agent." As to the point that James had not paid the tax payable by a law agent, counsel referred to the Stamp Act 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. cap. 39), sect. 47.

Argued for Respondent: (1) The suspender had to pay the expenses to some one, and he had shewn no prejudice to him by the decree pronounced. He knew of the decree to be moved for, because he put in a caveat. (2) The plea of competent and omitted was valid (Ewing v. Wallace, 1832, 6 W. and S. 222). The suspender should have appealed the Sheriff-Substitute's interlocutor to the Sheriff. As to the Stamp Act, in a question of this kind stamp duty was not exigible (Grierson's Law of Stamp Duties, p. 82, note to sects. 43, 44). If that was wrong he ought to have an opportunity of paying it now and having the matter put right. It would never do to reduce a decree in a long litigation on such grounds as were put forward here.

The Court adhered.

The Lord President.—This is a case where a gentleman, being in possession of a decree, proceeds to make it good by charging, and this is a suspension of the charge on that decree. Now I need scarcely say that a decree cannot be opened up unless there is something clearly wrong about it. What is said to be wrong with this decree is this. It is a decree which was issued for a sum of expenses in the name of an agent-disburser. The party against whom the decree is sought to be enforced says that the decree is truly a mistake, because no motion was ever properly made in the case to allow the decree to go out in the name of the agent-disburser; and then he says it is bad for two other reasons: firstly, that the gentleman who holds it was not, in fact, the agent-disburser; and secondly, that he could not enforce it because he had not paid certain stamp duties which he ought to have paid in order to have a licence to practise as an agent. I do not say that it would be impossible to suspend a decree upon averments that it had never been moved for, and that no decree had ever been in truth pronounced. If you could suppose a case where it could be clearly proved that the judge had never really pronounced any decree at all, and that the so-called decree was what might be called a figment of the clerk's imagination, and not authorised by any pronouncement of the judge, I think in such a case the decree could be suspended. But certainly, if ever there is a case where the maxim omnia præsumuntur rite et solemniter acta esse should apply, the proceedings of a court of law supply such a case, and it would require, to my mind, the most clear evidence to allow your Lordships to set aside a decree on such grounds. I do not propose to go through the evidence in detail, but I say without any hesitation that so far from it being clear that the motion for expenses was not made, there is, on the contrary, a great deal of evidence to the opposite effect. The complainer may be in good faith in saying that he did not hear the motion made, but that does not shew that a motion was not made; and at any rate I think it is quite enough for the purposes of this case to hold, as the Lord Ordinary has held after proof, that the complainer has failed to prove his case. So much for the first objection. As regards the other two points, it seems to me that the objection comes too late.

1st Div.

Rennie v. James.

The Lord President.

I agree with the Lord Ordinary that the case of Ewing v. Wallace, 1832, 6 W. and S. 222, really covers both points here. It directly covers the point about the gentleman not having paid his proper dues. I think it covers the other point pari ratione. It was quite apparent when this decree was pronounced that the person who was asking for it as agent-disburser was the procurator who had conducted the case, as he was the only person who had been in court. Well, we are told, and I will assume truly, that that procurator, although he conducted the case, really only conducted it as the hand of another agent who was not a licensed procurator, and we are told that the actual disbursements came out of the pocket of this other gentleman, and not out of that of the procurator. That is as it may be; but I am quite sure that if the objection was to be taken that the man who was conducting the case was not the agent-disburser, that is an objection which ought to have been taken at once, and it is far too late to take it afterwards by way of suspension. On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that the Lord Ordinary has decided the matter rightly, and that we should adhere to his judgment.

358. Alexander Mather & Son v. John Wilson & Co. Ltd. and Another.

Diligence—Arrestment—Furthcoming—Arrestment of Sum of Damages for Personal Injury Awarded by Jury to Common Debtor From Arrestee—Arrestee Insured, and Action Defended by Insurance Company in Arrestee's Name — Motion for Rule Granted—Prior to Hearing on Rule, Action Settled by Payment by Insurance Office of Modified Sum to Pursuer in Action of Damages—Held, in Action of Furthcoming by Arresting Creditor, That Arrestment Did Not Attach Sum Paid by Insurance Company.

This was an action of furthcoming in which Alexander Mather & Son, who had used arrestments in the hands of John Wilson & Co. Ltd., sued the said John Wilson & Co. Ltd. as arrestees, and John Anderson, the common debtor, for repetition of a sum alleged to have been paid to the said John Anderson in breach of the arrestments.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the Lord Ordinary's Opinion.

The Lord Ordinary assoilzied the compearing defenders, John Wilson & Co., with expenses.

Lord Dundas.—This is an action of furthcoming. The "principal debtor" is John Anderson, a contractor in Leith. The pursuers, Mather & Sons, engineers in Edinburgh, are creditors of Anderson, in virtue of a decree of this Court granted in their favour against him for a sum of money and expenses. The arrestees are John Wilson & Co. Ltd., flour merchants in Leith. The main facts are as follows: On 14th December 1906 Anderson raised an action in this Court against Wilson & Co. for damages for personal injuries. At and prior to this action, and to the accident out of which it arose, Wilson & Co. were insured against third party liability with the Employers' Mutual Insurance Association of Scotland Ltd. The policy is No. 15 of process. By one of the conditions forming part thereof it was provided: "2. The employer shall not, except at his own expense, pay or settle any claim or admit any liability . . . . but the Association may settle any claim as and when they may consider expedient; and if any proceedings be taken to enforce the claim, the Association shall have the absolute control and conduct thereof in name and on behalf of the employer to such extent as the Association may think proper. . . ." The conduct of the defence to the action Anderson v. John Wilson & Co. Ltd. was accordingly left to the Insurance Company. On 27th March 1907 the jury returned a verdict for the pursuer, with £300 of damages. On the following day, the present pursuers, Mather & Son, used arrestments (No. 6 of process) in the hands of Wilson & Co. upon the dependence of their own action against Anderson already referred to, bearing to arrest £150 sterling, more or less, due and addebted by the arrestees to Anderson. On 17th July 1907 the defenders in the action Anderson v. Wilson & Co. obtained a rule on the pursuer to shew cause why a new trial should not be granted. On 19th September 1907 the Insurance Company came to an arrangement with Anderson, the terms of which bear to be set forth in a discharge (No 14 of process) of that date, granted by him in favour of Wilson & Co. The discharge narrates the procedure in Anderson v. Wilson & Co., "and that in order to put an end to the said litigation, it has been agreed between me and the Insurance Company (with whom the said John Wilson & Co. Ltd. are insured against claims for damages at common law by third parties), but under reservation of the defenders' whole pleas and without prejudice in any way thereto, and particularly without admitting any liability for the injuries sustained by me, or for the claim made by me against the said John Wilson & Co. Ltd., that a sum of seventy-five pounds (£75) should be paid to me by the said Insurance Association in satisfaction of all claims for damages at my instance, of whatever kind or nature, against the said Wilson & Co. Ltd." Upon the above narrative, and in consideration of the payment to him by the Insurance Company of the said sum of £75, Anderson exonered and discharged Wilson & Co. of all claims for damages or reparation, and of all the conclusions of his action against them, and further agreed that the verdict returned by the jury should be discharged, and that decree of absolvitor should be pronounced in favour of the defenders Wilson & Co. in the said action, no expenses being found due to or by either party. On 24th October 1907 a joint minute was accordingly lodged in the said action (No. 17 of process), by which Anderson's counsel agreed that the verdict should be set aside, and absolvitor be pronounced, and counsel for both parties craved the Court to assoilzie the defenders, and to find neither party liable in expenses; and the Court interponed authority to the said minute. The present action of furthcoming was raised on 4th November 1907, the parties being as stated at the outset of this opinion.

At the debate in the Procedure Roll the pursuers' counsel restricted their demand to one for payment of the said sum of £75, which they maintained had been duly attached by their arrestment in the hands of Wilson & Co. Upon record they aver (Cond. 2) that "the alleged payment was truly made by the Insurance Company to the arrestees under and in virtue of the liability under the said policy of insurance, and by the arrestees to the principal debtor in full of the conclusions of the action at his instance against them. The form of the transaction . . . . does not affect the rights of the pursuers." I do not think that the averment just quoted is a correct representation of what happened. The salient features of the situation are (1) that there was at no time a decree against Wilson & Co. in Anderson's favour; on the contrary, the only decree ever pronounced was one of absolvitor; (2) that Wilson & Co. all along denied liability to pay Anderson anything; and (3) that they never in fact made any payment to him. Even if the payment of the £75 to Anderson had been actually made by Wilson & Co., coupled with an absolute repudiation of his claim for damages, and simply to avoid trouble and expense, I should have been disposed to hold that the arrestment attached nothing. The arrestment of a mere illiquid claim attaches nothing, I apprehend, unless a decree follows, or the debt be admitted by the debtor. But I need not decide this point, for the facts of the case do not raise it. The £75 was, in fact, paid to Anderson, not by Wilson & Co., but by the Insurance Company. The pursuers contend that the Company made the payments as agents for Wilson & Co., but I can see no ground in fact or law to warrant such a suggestion. It seems clear enough that the Insurance Company paid the money, not in respect of any admitted liability to Anderson by themselves or by Wilson & Co., which indeed they expressly repudiated; but simply to buy off the trouble and cost of a second jury trial, in which, even if successful, they would probably have failed to recover expenses from Anderson. The pursuers say this was "a collusive device." I see no ground for any suggestion of collusion, which I suppose means fraud, if it means anything at all. The Insurance Company seem to me to have acted within their rights, and in a prudent and sensible manner. I fail to see how the pursuers' arrestment in the hands of Wilson & Co. (they used none in the hands of the Insurance Company) could attach this sum of £75 which the Company chose to pay out of their own funds and in order to avoid the expenses of a second jury trial, of which they might have become liable to relieve Wilson & Co. I think the Insurance Company are really here in no different position from that of an independent third party possessing a legitimate interest to obtain, by purchase if necessary, the discontinuance of an action pending between two other persons. It seems plain enough that Anderson might, if he had chosen to do so, have abandoned his action, in which case there would have been nothing to arrest. I do not think the result was materially different when he consented to absolvitor and discharged Wilson & Co. in consideration of money paid him by a third party. The payment and the discharge seem to me to necessarily extinguish the possibility of any liability by Wilson & Co. to Anderson which could be the subject of arrestment in the hands of the former.—19*th February* 1908.

I. Prescription — Triennial — Act 1579, cap. 83 — Aliment — Bastard — Claim Against Mother—Mora.

II. Process—Title to Sue—Husband and Wife—Wife an Executrix—Consent of Husband — Held That Wife as Executrix Entitled to Prosecute Claim Without Husband's Consent

III. Prescription — Triennial — Claim For Aliment—Writ—Creditor and Debtor —Writ of Debtor Not Addressed to Creditor — Prescription Elided by Writ — Extent of Claim — Proof — Parole Proof Allowed.

The pursuer in this action, who was a married woman residing with her husband, sued as executrix-dative of the late Alexander Strachan, journeyman bootmaker, Montrose. The defender, who resided in Dundee, was the administratrix of the estate of the deceased Mrs Jane Harricks or Osborne, Brighton. On 11th May 1860, Mrs Osborne, who was then a factory girl in Montrose, gave birth to an illegitimate female child. Immediately after its birth she arranged with the said Alexander Strachan to receive said child into his family and maintain and aliment it along with his own children. The pursuer now claimed the sum of £153, with interest from 1st June 1872, as the amount due to the late Alexander Strachan for the maintenance of said child for twelve years at £13 per annum, less the sum of £3 paid to account.

The pursuer averred that no rate of aliment or terms of payment were arranged; and that on or about 1st June 1860 Strachan received the child into his household and maintained her until she attained the age of twelve years. That between 1860 and 1866 Mrs Osborne was repeatedly requested to pay aliment, but that she only paid some small sums amounting to £3. That at said latter date she was living in London, and that no more was heard of her for thirty years, when in 1897 she disclosed to her friends and relatives that she was living in Brighton and was the wife of a literary man there. About the same time she wrote a letter to her illegitimate daughter dated 22nd July 1897, as follows:—

28 Great College Street,
Kemp Town, Brighton,
July 22nd, 1897.

My dear daughter,—I have only just had your address from my brother-in-law, Charley Scott, and hasten to write to you. You must have been greatly astonished to hear that I was living and well, but I hope Charley Scott broke it to you quietly, so as not to cause you any pain more than would have been caused by surprise. You may believe that during our long separation I shed many a tear at having to leave you, but I was solaced by the thought that neither my sister Margaret Scott or Mr and Mrs Strachan would fail to take care of you, when I had neither the way nor means of doing so. Though I have been the wife of a man that has loved and cared for me for nearly twenty-three years, he was not fortunate in business, and could never get his head above water, so I was unable to do anything for you, and that being so, considered it useless to write to my sister about you until now, when, thanks to my good husband having saved a few pounds since his retirement from business, offered to take me to Scotland to see my sister and you. At this kindly offer I jumped for joy, and having found out Charley Scott's address through the postmaster at Dundee, wrote to him, with the result of happily finding that you and my sister are alive and well. It is my intention to soon go to see my sister, with whom I thought you were living, and when I get to Dundee I will at once go press you once more in my arms, and see Mr and Mrs Strachan, whom I hope before being taken from this life I shall be in some measure able to repay for all their kindness to you, and with my best regards to them and love to yourself.—I am, your affectionate mother,

Jenny Osborne.

Thereafter Mrs Osborne visited Montrose, and on her return to Brighton took her daughter, known as Catherine Harricks, to reside with her.

The pursuers further averred that the Strachans were at the time of Mrs Osborne's reappearance in bad health and poor; that Mr Strachan was very weak mentally and physically and did not take legal proceedings to make good their claim, but that they continually expected it would be paid, and frequently referred to it in conversation as being due and unpaid, and relied on Mrs Osborne carrying out her intention to repay them.

The defender averred, inter alia, that all claims competent to the Strachans against Mrs Osborne were settled by her on the occasion of her visit to Montrose in 1897.

She pleaded, inter alia:

"1. The action is incompetent.

"2. No title to sue.

. . . . . .

"4. The present claim being prescribed, the pursuer's averments can only be proved by the writ or oath of the defender."

On 13th July 1907 the Lord Ordinary repelled the first and second pleas in law for the defender, and sustained her fourth plea in law. Found that the pursuer's claim could only be proved by the writ of the deceased Mrs Osborne, or by the writ or oath of the defender, and appointed the pursuer to lodge any writ or writs on which she intended to found by 15th October next.

Lord Salvesen.—This is an action for repayment of disbursements made in connection with the aliment and maintenance of an illegitimate child. The action is at the instance of the executrix-dative of the person who made the disbursements against the executrix of the child's mother. The child herself is now a woman of 47, and she attained minority in 1872, at which date the account for aliment and maintenance ends. Part of it has therefore undergone the long prescription if the aliment falls to be calculated from year to year. The remainder has also obviously prescribed if the triennial prescription is applicable. And this was the main question that was argued.

It will be observed that this is not the case of the mother of an illegitimate child who has maintained it suing the father for a contribution towards its aliment. Here the mother is said to have arranged with Alexander Strachan, whose executrix the pursuer is, to take the child on the footing that she would pay for its aliment, although no rate of aliment was fixed. It is therefore really an action for board and lodging supplied to the child, for whose aliment the mother was liable at her request. It is difficult to see any good reason why such an account should not undergo the triennial prescription as being ejusdem generis of the debts enumerated in the statute. Apart from this, the matter seems to me to be finally settled by the case of Ligertwood v. Brown, 1872, 10 M. 832, which was a unanimous judgment of the First Division, and in which all the prior authorities were considered. That case is, in my opinion, indistinguishable from the present.

The pursuer, however, urged that the circumstances here were such as to elide the triennial prescription; and reference was made to the cases of Chisholm, 1886, 13 R. 773, and Butchart, 1839, 1 D. 1128. The former case no doubt decides that the triennial prescription is inapplicable where the pursuer's failure to sue timeously is due to the conduct of the defender; and it was contended that this principle applied here, because the mother of the illegitimate child is said to have disappeared from 1866 until 1897, so that Mr Strachan was unable to take any proceedings against her. The averments do not go the length of suggesting that the lady was purposely concealing herself from diligence, nor is it said that the Strachans made any enquiries to ascertain her whereabouts. I greatly doubt whether the fact that a debtor changes his address, even if it be for the purpose of evading diligence, would be a sufficient ground for holding the triennial prescription to be elided, although there is a suggestion to this effect in the rubric of the case of Butchart. I do not, however, require to decide this point, because on the pursuer's own averments it appears that the child's mother reappeared in 1897, and then made promises of remunerating the Strachans. Neither such promises nor the fact that the creditor is old and in bad health afford, in my judgment, a ground for eliding prescription. There are few cases in which the claim is so long delayed as the present in which the creditor has not some reason for not enforcing his claim. But the statute, where it applies, is absolute; and I am clearly of opinion that there are no averments in this case which are relevant to elide its application.

The defender further pleaded that the pursuer, being a married woman, is not entitled to sue this action without her husband's consent. In this case the plea is probably of very little moment, as no doubt the husband would readily sist himself as a consenting party. Apart from this, I do not think the plea well founded. The pursuer was duly appointed executrix of the late Alexander Strachan by the Sheriff of Forfar, on an application presented by her with the consent of her husband; and this appointment makes it her duty to ingather the debts due to the executry without regard to her husband's wishes in the matter. No case has been cited which gives the least countenance to the view that a married woman may not administer an executry estate without every act of administration being concurred in by her husband. In the analogous case of a married woman being appointed trustee under a deed of settlement, the House of Lords held, in the case of Watson v. Darling, 1825, 1 W. and S. 188, that she was entitled to act and vote as a trustee, which implied that she might vote against her husband, who was also a trustee. The doubt expressed in the subsequent case of Laird, 1833, 12 S. 54, does not apply here, for the husband had not consented to his wife acting as a trustee, she having been appointed to the office before her marriage.

I shall therefore repel the first two pleas in law for the defender, but sustain the fourth plea, and in terms thereof find that the pursuer's claim is prescribed, and that the averments can only be proved by the writ of the deceased Mrs Osborne or by the writ or oath of the defender. —13*th July* 1907.

Thereafter the case was of new sent to the Procedure Roll, and the question raised was whether the said letter of 22nd July 1897, written by Mrs Osborne to her daughter, was sufficient to elide prescription so as to enable the pursuer to lead supplementary evidence prout de jure as to the extent of her claim.

The Opinion of the Lord Ordinary sufficiently further reports the case.

The following interlocutor was pronounced:

"The Lord Ordinary having considered the cause, finds that the writ No. 11 of process imports a sufficient acknowledgment of a debt due by the late Mrs Osborne in respect of the aliment of Catherine Harricks to elide the triennial prescription: Allows parties a proof habili modo of their averments on record, and appoints the proof to proceed on a day to be afterwards fixed."

Lord Salvesen.—In this case I have already

Outer House. Lord Salvesen.

held that the triennial prescription applies to the pursuer's claim. The question now is whether this prescription is elided by a letter written by the alleged debtor on 22nd July 1897 to the effect of enabling the pursuer to lead supplementary evidence prout de jure of the extent of her claim.

The letter in question is dated 22nd July 1897, and is addressed by Mrs Osborne to the daughter whose aliment is the subject of the action. Twenty-five years had elapsed since this daughter had ceased to be a burden on anyone, and the letter affords prima facie evidence of the truth of the pursuer's statement that Mrs Osborne had disappeared during the whole of that period and for some years prior. The writer says: "You may believe that during our long separation I shed many a tear at having to leave you, but I was solaced by the thought that neither my sister Margaret Scott or Mr and Mrs Strachan would fail to take care of you when I had neither the way nor means of doing so. Though I have been the wife of a man that has loved me and cared for me for nearly twenty-three years, he was not fortunate in business, and could never get his head above water, so I was unable to do anything for you, and that being so, considered it useless to write to my sister about you until now." The writer then mentions that she was going to Scotland; and proceeds as follows: "It is my intention to go to see my sister with whom I thought you were living, and when I get to Dundee I will at once go press you once more in my arms, and see Mr and Mrs Strachan, whom I hope, before being taken from this life, I shall be in some measure able to repay for all their kindness to you." I think these passages plainly imply that Mrs Osborne had left the care of her illegitimate child to her sister and Mr and Mrs Strachan at a time when she was unable to pay for its maintenance, and that she hoped now to repay the latter in some measure for all their kindness to her child. The constitution and subsistence of the debt is thus, I think, sufficiently admitted to elide the plea of prescription. It was argued that the letter was consistent with there being only a moral obligation arising from the Strachans' kindness to the child, and did not infer the existence of any legal ground of debt. I think this would have been so if the last sentence which I have quoted had stood alone; but the kindness of Mr and Mrs Strachan plainly refers to their having taken care of the child when the mother had not the means of doing so. Now, if a stranger aliments an illegitimate child at the request of the mother, there arises, in my opinion, a legal obligation on the part of the mother to pay a reasonable sum for its aliment; and the presumption of payment which arises from the claim not having been sued for within three years after it became due is negatived by the terms of the letter. I was referred, on behalf of the defender, to the case of Mitchells v. Moultrys, 1882, 10 R. 378, where the triennial prescription was held not to have been elided by the writ produced. The ground of the decision was that the writ contained no reference to any account or debt at all, although its terms were consistent with its having been written by a person called on to pay a debt in answer to a letter which was not produced. Each case depends on its own circumstances; but the circumstances here have, in my opinion, a sufficiently close resemblance to those which occurred in the cases cited for the pursuer (Smith v. Falkner, 1831, 9 S. 474; Stevenson, 1849, 11 D. 1086; Macandrew, 1851, 13 D. 1111; Fiske v. Walpole, 1860, 22 D. 1488; and Fife, 1860, 23 D. 30) to warrant me in holding the writ produced as sufficient to elide prescription.

The extent of the pursuer's claim is, of course, not established by the letter in question; but it is now well settled by the cases I have referred to, that where a letter contains an admission of an unsettled claim, proof is admissible to establish its extent. In this case the facts should be easy of ascertainment notwithstanding the long period that has elapsed; and there is no hardship to the defender, for she is probably now the only person alive who must have been fully aware of all the circumstances.

The defender further argued that the letter, not being addressed to the alleged creditor, could not be founded upon as the writ of the deceased debtor. No authority was adduced in support of this proposition except the case of Dunn's Trs. v. Hardy, 1896, 23 R. 621. That was a case in which it was attempted to establish a loan of money to a truster by an entry in a state of the trust funds of the alleged loan as amongst his outstanding debts; but the ground of decision was that the writ in which the entry occurred was not delivered to the creditor as an acknowledgment by the trustees that the debt was due; and that such an acknowledgment, if delivered, would not have been binding on the trust estate. The case is therefore not an authority for the proposition referred to; and in no other case do I find that when the writ is admittedly the genuine writ of the debtor it requires to be addressed to the creditor or his agent, in order that it may be founded upon. The statute itself contains no such qualification—all that it demands is that the creditor shall prove his claim "be the writ or be aith of his partie."

I shall accordingly pronounce an interlocutor in terms of the above opinion; and I will only add that I think the amount of the claim might very well be made the subject of amicable adjustment.—19*th February* 1908.

This was an action in which the pursuer claimed aliment for her illegitimate child, of which she alleged that the defender was father. The defender denied paternity of the child. The case is sufficiently reported in the Sheriff's Notes. The Sheriff-Substitute (Davidson) assoilzied the defender.

Note.—I consider this a very narrow case. The evidence shews that the pursuer and defender became acquainted at Arbuckle's marriage in March 1905; that they left the house in which the wedding festivities were held about 3 or 4 the next morning; that they walked about together till after 7, when the pursuer went home; that thereafter they met with some frequency at Arbuckle's house and elsewhere, generally by appointment; that they took walks together, and that some correspondence passed between them; that the last occasion on which they met and walked together was on 3rd June 1905, after a picnic; and that on 12th March 1906 the pursuer's child was born. She charged the defender with the paternity in the end of June 1905; she has never charged anybody else, and he has always unequivocally denied it. There is absolutely no evidence (apart from the pursuer's own) of any sort of familiarity, or even affectionate address, between the parties. The earlier of the two letters from the pursuer which the defender produces no doubt points to considerable intimacy; but it must be observed that that letter was written after the meetings between the parties had ceased, and that it is not evidence against the defender. The second letter certainly does not read as if it embodied a false charge; but it too is not evidence against the defender. My conclusion is that though there is strong reason for suspicion in the case set forth by the pursuer, it lacks that element afforded by evidence of familiar relations existing between the parties which is essential to turn suspicion into proof.

This interlocutor was recalled by the Sheriff Principal (Guthrie), who delivered the following opinion:

The case is narrow and has, as too frequently happens, been starved in proof. But I am constrained to differ from the learned Sheriff-Substitute. The defender denies too much, and his own friends, the Arbuckles, tell us that appointments were made and meetings took place between the parties during several months in 1905. I also think that the defender's possession of pursuer's letter of 12th June, written about a week after a meeting in Arbuckle's, from which he saw her home at a late hour, is not an insignificant fact. It does not go very far by itself, and would count for nothing if the defender's suggestion, that the pursuer was hunting him down, were supported. But that is a mere suggestion, and though no doubt the pursuer was rather forward and affectionate, the defender does not seem to have shunned her till danger appeared. But when I consider that there were a number of meetings, and such a letter, I cannot but conclude that, though no familiarities are proved, yet there was a courtship going on with more than sufficient opportunity for copulation. There is thus such corroboration of the pursuer's evidence as has in the cases been held sufficient, and her testimony is not, I think, open to the remark above made on that of the defender.

1st Div. — Poor Helen Dawson v. M'Kenzie.

The Defender appealed and argued: The pursuer had failed to prove her case, as her evidence was not corroborated. No corroboration could be derived from evidence of the defender which shewed that he was not speaking the truth (M'Bayne v. Davidson, 1860, 22 D. 738; M'Kinven v. M'Millan, 1892, 19 R. 369; Young v. Nicol, 1893, 20 R. 768; Macpherson v. Largue, 1896, 23 R. 785; Harvey v. Brownlie, 1908, 15 S.L.T. 740). Even if such evidence might amount to corroboration, the defender here had not made false statements, his evidence, as far as it went, agreeing with that of the pursuer in all respects other than that regarding the paternity of the child.

Argued for the Respondent: There was sufficient corroboration here in the denial by the pursuer upon record of meetings which were undoubtedly proved, and in the letters produced.

The Court recalled the Sheriff's interlocutor and assoilzied the defender.

The Lord President.—In a case like this I am afraid that the Court will always be left with the feeling that possibly it may not have arrived at the real truth. Yet, none the less, in the consideration of such delicate circumstances it is absolutely necessary for the security of people in general that the Court should not be moved by sympathy or by moral inferences to depart from the rules already laid down, by which evidence must be judged. I do not think it necessary to say more as to the rules which prevail in regard to such cases as this than has been said already. The modern doctrine—and the modern doctrine owed its introduction to the alteration of the old law, under which the parties were not competent witnesses — the modern doctrine was first laid down in the case of M'Bayne, 22 D. 738, and perhaps the best expression of it was that given in a more recent decision by the Lord Justice-Clerk and Lord Trayner, in the case of Macpherson, 23 R. 785, with which I entirely concur. The outcome of it is this, that there must be something more than the pursuer's own statement, and that that something must amount to corroboration. Now the mistake which the learned Sheriff has made here is in taking the mere proof of opportunity as amounting to corroboration. Mere opportunity alone does not amount to corroboration; but two things may be said about it. One is that the opportunity may be of such a character as to bring in the element of suspicion. That is, that the circumstances and locality of the opportunity may be such as in themselves to amount to corroboration. The other is that the opportunity may have a complexion put upon it by statements made by the defender which are proved to be false. It is not that a false statement made by the defender proves that the pursuer's statements are true, but it may give to a proved opportunity a different complexion from what it would have borne had no such false statement been made. I am really only repeating in other words what was said by the Lord Justice-Clerk in the case of Macpherson. He there said: "No corroboration can be derived from evidence of the defender which shews he is not speaking the truth. If his evidence is not to be believed, it must be taken out of the case altogether, and the case must be treated as if he had not been examined." He then refers to the facts in the case before him, and continues: "But if these facts were capable of leading to a certain inference, and if the defender made no answer when that inference was suggested, it is then that that absence of explanation by the defender's evidence would come to be of importance; and in the same way his denial of these facts, which are held to be proved, is significant, as it gives a complexion to them which they might not otherwise bear if explained." Accordingly, if I had found, or could have found, from the evidence here that the defender had denied things—possibly innocent in themselves—which were affirmed by other witnesses, that might have afforded the amount of corroboration necessary to establish the pursuer's case. That would have brought it within the same class of facts that were present in the case of M'Bayne, 22 D. 738, when the thing that turned the scale was that the defender denied ever having seen the pursuer before the occasion when she stopped him in the street and charged him with being the father of her child, while it was held to be established that he had twice met her before, though in circumstances which could not in themselves give rise to suspicion. Those facts seem to me to be an illustration of the minimum that will suffice as corroboration, and it does not appear to me that that minimum is afforded by the facts of the present case.

There is also this, that there appears to be something here which might have been brought out at the proof, but which has not been brought out. There are certain letters, the second of which seems to me to have a strong ring of truth about it. But these are not evidence against the defender, though they might have been made available as evidence had they been put to the defender in his cross-examination. That, however, as I say, has not been done.

On the whole matter, therefore, I think that the pursuer has not made out her case, and that the only course open to us is to recal the interlocutor of the Sheriff and restore the judgment of the Sheriff-Substitute.

Lord M'Laren.—I concur in your Lordship's opinion, and it is hardly necessary to add anything. It is a very common state of the evidence in such cases as this that the pursuer's case depends only upon her own evidence with a certain amount of corroboration as to opportunities, and then the question of fact arises whether these opportunities were such as to raise legal grounds of suspicion, or were merely of the nature of innocent meetings between man and woman. I think that in this class of cases the law laid down by the Lord Justice-Clerk in the case of Macpherson comes to be of importance, because I agree with his Lordship that it is not sufficient corroboration if you merely displace the evidence of the defender and shew that he has made false statements. There must be corroboration of the pursuer's evidence; yet when the effect of the defender's false evidence — i.e. his denial of circumstances which are otherwise proved—is to shew that there is something of which he is ashamed, or something the admission of which he conceived would throw suspicion upon himself, this will put a different complexion on what the Court might otherwise be disposed to regard as innocent intimacy between the parties.

Here there is nothing that is calculated to throw doubt on the truth of the defender's statements. Although there is no evidence tending to shew to what other person the paternity of the pursuer's child should be attributed, yet I think the pursuer has not established her case against the defender, and the Sheriff-Substitute's judgment is right.

Lord Kinnear.—I am of the same opinion. I think the learned Sheriff proceeds on a combination of two grounds, both of which are grounds of inference of fact and not of legal opinion, namely: first, that there was opportunity; and, second, that the defender denies too much.

Now I think only the first of these two grounds can reasonably be accepted as made out, for when the defender's evidence is compared with the evidence against him, one cannot find that he denies anything which has been really proved, and therefore I think we reach the question whether the bare statement of the pursuer herself, coupled with evidence of opportunity in the sense that both were together in circumstances in which connection was not impossible, is sufficient to prove the pursuer's case. It is not proved that they were alone together in such circumstances as to give rise to suspicion or reproach; and there is no evidence of opportunity in any other sense than that it was not physically or morally impossible that connection might have taken place, and the result therefore is that there is no evidence on which the Court can proceed other than the pursuer's own statement, which of course is not enough.—22*nd February* 1908.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Guthrie.

(Reported ante, Vol. XIV. p. 822.)

In this action the pursuers sought (1) that the defender should be ordained to produce certain accounts in order that the sum payable as subscription by the defender as a member of the pursuers' Corporation in terms of their Articles of Association might be ascertained, and (2) decree for the sum so ascertained. The Lord Ordinary (Lord Ardwall) repelled the defences on the grounds above reported, and decerned in terms of the first conclusion of the summons.

The Lord Ordinary having refused leave to reclaim, the defender, under protest, produced accounts in terms of the said interlocutor, after consideration of which the Lord Ordinary (Lord Guthrie) decerned against the defender for the sum of £51, 12s. 6d.

The argument of counsel was the same as that submitted in the Outer House, and appears sufficiently from the previous report.

The Court adhered.

The Lord President.—In this case I agree with the Lord Ordinary, and really have nothing to add to what his Lordship says. It seems to me that, first of all, looking at the constituting documents of the Association, it is impossible to find that this is a trades union. Secondly, as regards the other question of liability, it seems to me that the only objections to receiving the defender as a member of the Association were objections which were pleadable by the Company and by no one else; he cannot take advantage of them on his own behalf. In other words, I think this class of question has been decided again and again in liquidation cases; and if the matter had been tested by the Company being wound up, there is no doubt whatsoever in my mind that this gentleman would have been put upon the list as a contributor. That really ends the matter, because whether there would or would not have been a question as to whether he could get out of the Company by the simple act of resignation, that question is not raised in this proceeding, as the sum for which he is sued is a sum entirely due before the date of his resignation. I am for adhering.

Lord M'Laren.—I concur.

Lord Kinnear.—I am of the same opinion. I think the defender is liable upon his own agreement with the Company for the sum sued for, whether he is technically a member or not.—27*th February* 1908.

II. EXPENSES — COMPANY — LIQUIDATION — OBSERVATIONS PER THE LORD PRESIDENT AS TO EXCESSIVE EXPENSES INCURRED IN LIQUIDATIONS, AND INTENDED PRACTICE OF COURT WITH REGARD TO SUCH EXPENSES.

This was a note in the liquidation of the West Regent Investment Co. Ltd. The Company passed a resolution for voluntary winding up and appointed Mr John Meikle, an accountant, formerly auditor to the Company, to be liquidator. Wishart, a creditor, first presented a petition for the compulsory winding up of the Company, and for appointment of Mr Joseph Patrick, C.A., as liquidator, or alternatively for the continuation of the voluntary winding up under the supervision of the Court with Mr Patrick as liquidator. The petitioner subsequently presented this note, in which he asked for the continuation of the voluntary winding up, under the supervision of the Court, with Messrs Meikle and Patrick as joint liquidators.

The Court made a supervision order, removed the present liquidator, and appointed Mr John M. Macleod, C.A., Glasgow, as liquidator, and allowed the petitioner the expenses of the original petition.

The Lord President.—I will take this opportunity of intimating for the information of counsel that we are going to alter the practice of granting expenses to petitioners in such cases as a matter of course, and to leave that to the Lord Ordinary to whom the liquidation is remitted, and who has a knowledge of the facts. In this case it is all very well to say that two liquidators are required, but I see no reason why there should be two horses in this one-horse concern. This is a Company of which we are told the capital is £5000, and the total capital subscribed £42, 4s. The Company passed a resolution for voluntary winding up and the appointing of a liquidator, and then there was a creditor's petition. The parties seem to have come together and agreed that the liquidation should be continued under the supervision of the Court, and that a liquidator nominated by the creditors should be conjoined with the liquidator appointed by the Company. It has been brought under the notice of the Court that in a great many liquidations there is really almost a scandalous amount spent in expenses, and the Court are resolved to do what they can to prevent this abuse. It seems to me that the proposition made here is an abuse on the face of it, and although in ordinary cases the wishes of the creditors will be consulted as to who should be appointed as liquidator, it seems that the arrangement here is so objectionable that the only course for your Lordships to take, and the one I propose, is to pronounce a supervision order, remove the present liquidator, and appoint an entirely new liquidator who is not proposed by any of the parties.

BILL OF EXCHANGE—PROOF—PAROLE—COMPETENCY—BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT 1882 (45 & 46 VICT. CAP. 61), SECT. 100.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Dundas.

This was an action for payment of sums due under three bills of exchange drawn by the pursuers on and accepted by the defenders.

The circumstances in which the action was raised were described in the Lord Ordinary's Opinion as follows:—

"The pursuers, van and waggon makers at Selby in Yorkshire, sue the defenders, who carry on business as carriage builders, etc., at Hamilton, for payment of various sums of money contained in bills drawn by the pursuers upon and accepted by the defenders, which the pursuers say are overdue. The case is the sequel of a former action which the pursuers raised against the defenders on 28th January 1907 for payment of a sum of money as the balance due in respect of goods supplied to the defenders in connection with certain double-decked motor omnibuses. A few days before the diet appointed for proof in that action, the managing directors of the parties respectively met and arranged terms of settlement, and a written agreement entitled 'Heads of Settlement' was subscribed by them, which is produced in this action. It provided, inter alia, that the defenders should 'pay' to the pursuers 'the sum of £2250 in the following manner:—By £250 cash forthwith. £500 bill at one month. £500 bill at three months. £500 bill at four months. £500 bill at five months'; that each of the bills should be guaranteed personally by the managing director and two other directors of the defenders' Company; and that 'on payment of the £250 cash, three of the bodies are to be delivered; the remainder of the bodies undelivered are to be delivered, if required, to Scott, Stirling & Co.

Ltd., when the first bill for £500 is met.' In accordance with these 'Heads of Settlement,' the pursuers received from the defenders their cheque for £250, and four bills of £500 each at one, three, four, and five months' date respectively; and the case was taken out of Court by joint minute. The first bill was duly honoured by the defenders; the second to the extent of £100 only; and the sums now sued for are the £400 balance of that bill and the sums of £500 contained in each of the third and fourth bills (which were dishonoured when presented), all which sums the defenders decline to pay. The defenders explain that the account sued on in the former action included the price of certain omnibuses and other goods which had not been delivered by the pursuers to the defenders, and which the pursuers alleged, and the defenders denied, the latter were bound to accept and pay for. The defenders say they were willing to purchase said goods as they required them in the ordinary course of business. Their account of what passed at the meeting when the 'Heads of Settlement' were drawn up and signed is that 'it was agreed that the defenders should take delivery of said goods as they require them, and that they should grant the bills now sued on. It was further agreed that the bills should be renewed at maturity in the event of the defenders not having taken delivery of goods to the amount of the cash paid by the defenders, and of the bills which had fallen due,' and the defenders say that the whole goods of which they have taken delivery are covered by the sums of £250, £500, and £100 already paid by them to the pursuers; and that the latter, being bound to renew the bills in terms of the agreement above set forth, are not entitled to decree for the sum sued for. The defenders moved for a proof of their averments."

The "Heads of Agreement" were as follows:—

Heads of Settlement, Stagg & Robson Ltd. v. Scott, Stirling & Co. Ltd., dated 16th May 1907.

This action in the Scotch Courts is to be withdrawn on the following terms, which are to be drawn up by the parties' Scotch solicitors respectively in accordance with Scotch law:—

Scott, Stirling & Co. Ltd. to pay to Stagg & Robson Ltd. the sum of £2250 in the following manner:—

By £250 cash forthwith.
£500 bill at one month.
£500 bill at three months.
£500 bill at four months.
£500 bill at five months.

Scott, Stirling & Co. Ltd. to pay the usual bank rate discount, and each of the bills are to be guaranteed personally, jointly, and severally by James Scott of Burnbank, Carluke, N.B., John Stirling of Twickenham, and Laurence Miles of Twickenham.

On payment of the £250 cash, three of the bodies are to be delivered; the remainder of the bodies undelivered are to be delivered, if required, to Scott, Stirling & Co. Ltd., when the first bill for £500 is met. The bodies to be finished in accordance with Scott, Stirling & Co. Ltd.'s order and specification in first-class style, subject to ordinary storage depreciation.

1st Div.

Stagg & Robson Ltd. v. Scott, Stirling & Co. Ltd.

The costs of the above action are to be borne by each party paying its own.

The Lord Ordinary allowed parties a proof before answer of their respective averments.

Lord Dundas [after narrating the facts as above quoted].—The defenders claimed that they are entitled to prove by parole evidence the verbal terms of agreement which they allege, in virtue of sect. 100 of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61). That section provides that "in any judicial proceedings in Scotland any fact relating to a bill of exchange . . . . which is relevant to any question of liability thereon, may be proved by parole evidence." Now this action is a "judicial proceeding in Scotland," and the facts which the defenders allege appear prima facie to be quite relevant to the question of their liability under the bills mentioned in the summons. I may refer to two recent decisions as illustrating the wide scope and effect which sect. 100 has been held to possess. The first of these (Drybrough & Co. Ltd., 1903, 5 F. 665) has features strongly resembling the present case. The defender there was allowed parole proof of an alleged verbal agreement to the effect that the bill on which he was being sued would be renewed from time to time by the pursuers, subject to certain conditions which the defender said he had fulfilled. This decision was approved and followed in Viani & Co., 1904, 6 F. 989, where the defender was allowed a proof that the pursuer (indorsee and holder of the bill) had verbally agreed that if the bill was in his hands at maturity he would not call upon the defender (the acceptor) to retire it. At the discussion in the Procedure Roll I heard a forcible argument by the pursuers' counsel to the effect that, while he fully accepted the authority of the decisions, the proof sought by the defenders should not be allowed: because the language of the written "Heads of Settlement" is unambiguous, and absolutely inconsistent with the terms of agreement which the defenders allege to have been verbally adjected; that the defenders' averments, therefore, were, in face of the written agreement, palpably irrelevant; and that nothing in the Bills of Exchange Act warranted an attempt to contradict by parole proof the written agreement of parties as evidenced, not by the bills themselves, but by the "Heads of Settlement." I do not think these contentions are sound. I do not consider that the language of the "Heads of Settlement" is such as necessarily to exclude or negative the defenders' statement of the agreement as a whole. It certainly seems singular, if the latter is true, that no allusion to renewal is made either in the "heads" themselves or in the separate guarantee which was granted in pursuance thereof. But the idea of renewal is not expressly negatived; and the fourth paragraph of the "Heads of Settlement" seems to square in some measure with the defenders' averment about taking delivery of the goods only as they required them. It is also to be observed that the written agreement does not provide that the pursuers are to receive certain payments at stipulated times, and that bills are to be granted for these; but only that the defender shall "pay" the pursuers "in the following manner," viz. by a payment in cash (which was duly made), and granting four bills at such and such dates (which were duly granted). It seems, therefore, that the pursuers' action must rest, not on the "Heads of Settlement," but on the bills themselves; and it is in fact so laid. Upon the whole matter I think I must allow a proof before answer, the defenders to lead.

Stagg & Robson Ltd. v. Scott, Stirling & Co. Ltd.

The pursuers reclaimed.

The following authorities were cited in argument, viz.: Drybrough & Co. Ltd. v. Roy, 1903, 5 F. 665; Viani & Co. v. Gunn & Co., 1904, 6 F. 989; Gibson's Trs. v. Galloway, 1893, 23 R. 414; National Bank of Australasia v. Turnbull & Co., 1891, 18 R. 629.

The Court recalled the interlocutor reclaimed against, and pronounced decree as concluded for.

The Lord President.—In this case the Lord Ordinary has allowed a proof, and it is against that interlocutor that the reclaiming note has been taken. The pursuers had raised an action against the defenders for goods supplied, and that action was settled upon terms which were embodied in a written document, regularly signed before witnesses, and called "Heads of Settlement." These heads of settlement settled that the action in the Scottish Courts was "to be withdrawn on the following terms," and then it was provided that Scott, Stirling & Co. were to pay Stagg & Robson Ltd., the pursuers, the sum of £2250 in the following manner: £250 in cash, £500 by bill at one month, and three other bills for a like sum of £500 at three, four, and five months respectively. Then there was a further stipulation that the bills were to be guaranteed personally, jointly and severally, by three persons mentioned, and after that there were certain stipulations as to the time within which the goods were to be delivered. Now the bills as they became due were not all honoured. The first was paid, but the second only partly and the others not at all, and the present action is raised to recover the amount. The Lord Ordinary has allowed a proof of an averment which really comes to this, that there was a verbal agreement at the same time that these bills should be renewed when they fell due, and he has felt himself bound to do that because of the one hundredth section of the Bills of Exchange Act, which provides that "in any judicial proceedings in Scotland any fact relating to a bill of exchange, which is relevant to any question of liability thereon, may be proved by parole evidence." I am bound to say that I do not think that that provision of the statute has any application to the matter in hand. It does not mean that there is a sort of magic in the word "bill," and that the moment you allege anything with regard to a bill you at once upset the whole law of evidence. The meaning of the provision, I think, was clear enough to allow you to prove by parole what the rules of law might not allow to be proved by parole, namely, the true relations to each other of the parties upon the bill; that is to say, that the indebtedness which, prima facie on the bill, is upon the acceptor, might be shewn to be not really upon the acceptor; or, in other words, that the true position of the names on the bill might be proved. But I do not think that that section has anything to do with the general rule of law, which is that you cannot alter a written agreement by parole evidence. The result, I think, would be almost fantastic, because the provision in the agreement that these bills were to be guaranteed by certain persons would be practically swept out of existence. They would only, of course, be bound to guarantee the particular bills which are there mentioned, and if these bills were renewed and represented by other bills, then the guarantee would fly off. I am therefore of opinion that there is no relevant defence to the action, and that decree should be pronounced in terms of the conclusions of the summons.

Lord M'Laren.—I think it is settled that the time-honoured defence that a bill was merely a matter of form and was not intended to impose liability on anyone, is not admissible under the Bills of Exchange Act any more than it was at common law. In one of the first cases that came before this Court under the Bills of Exchange Act (The National Bank of Australasia v. Turnbull & Co., 1891, 18 R. 629), we found that there was no relevant allegation of any contract of which the bills formed a term, but only a general statement that the acceptor was not intended to be liable, and it was held that the Legislature could not have intended that the question whether a bill was an obligatory document or not was to be tried upon parole evidence. In the present case the allegation is not very different. It is in substance that there was an express or implied obligation to renew the bills when they fell due. Now, my opinion is that wherever it can be shewn that a bill is one ingredient of a contract, then you are entitled to prove the contract, and it may be that under some condition of the contract the bill is not enforcible. Again, as a bill is in form a unilateral document although it is always stated to be for value received, any question relative to the consideration of the bill may under the statute be proved by parole evidence, and we have examples in our practice at common law of allowing a proof on a question of no value, although that is not invariably done, and in fact is only done in exceptional cases. But what makes it clear in the present case that the defence is impossible is this, that the drawer of the bill stipulated that he should have the personal guarantee, jointly and severally, of the directors of the company for payment of the bill, and there is no stipulation that that guarantee should be renewed or made applicable to any substituted bill that might afterwards be granted. Now, can anything be more absurd than to suppose that while stipulating for a personal guarantee for the payment of these bills, it was at the same time agreed that the bills should be renewed and that the guarantee should then cease to be binding? It is evident here that the guarantee would be altogether futile if this defence could be received, and if proof were admissible to shew that the bills were renewable. I therefore agree with your Lordship.

Lord Kinnear.—I am of the same opinion. The old rule of our law, which has been displaced by the 100th section of the Bills of Exchange Act, created a presumption of onerosity so strong that, although it might be contradicted, it was not allowed to be disproved except by the writ of the party seeking to enforce liability on the bill, or else by a reference to his deposition on oath. That rule was supposed to be supported by favour to trade, but in comparatively recent cases it was seen that it might operate very unjustly, and yet the rule was so well settled that the Court could not disregard it. Now, I apprehend that the main purpose of the section in question was to remedy that injustice, but I think it is extremely probable that the language of the clause went somewhat beyond what was required to remedy the particular mischief to which I have referred, and it may be that it would allow parole evidence being admitted with reference to other questions of liability than those which depend on mere presumption of onerosity. However that may be, I am certainly of opinion that it can only apply to cases where the alleged liability is rested exclusively upon a bill, and not upon a bill as the mere method of carrying into effect a written contract. Now, in the present case the bills were granted for the purpose of working out a contract which is expressed in writing, and the terms upon which the bills were to be drawn and accepted are not therefore to be gathered from the mere terms of the bill itself, but from the agreement which was carried into execution by their being accepted. I think it is contrary to perfectly well-settled rules of evidence to allow the terms of that agreement to be altered or enlarged by parole evidence, and I therefore agree with your Lordships that there is no relevant case to be sent to proof.—28*th February* 1908.

I. Process—Proof or Jury Trial—Reparation for Personal Injury—Issues Refused and Proof Ordered—Doubtful Relevancy—Contributory Negligence of Child or of Parent—Question of Expert Evidence — Construction of Statutory Regulations.

II. Process—Pleading—Alternative Averments Inconsistent With Each Other —Information Available to Pursuer —Opinion by Lord Ordinary That Pursuer Must Found on One or Other, Not Both.

This was an action by a father on behalf of his pupil son against a tramway company for reparation for personal injuries. The pursuer's son, who was four years and eight months old, was run over by a cable tramway car and severely injured. The facts of the case and the allegation of fault against the defenders are contained in the following averments for the pursuer:—

Cond. 2. About four o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, 16th November 1907, the pursuer's said son, who was four years and eight months old at the time of the accident described below, left his father's house to buy nuts at the shop of William Lumsden, grocer, 1 Inverleith Terrace, which is in the immediate vicinity. Eildon Street, where the pursuer resides, is on the east side, while Inverleith Terrace is on the west side of Inverleith Row, and about 150 yards south of Eildon Street. One of the defenders' lines of tramway runs along Inverleith Row, to and from the terminus at Goldenacre. The pursuer's said son duly made his purchase, and proceeded to return home along the west or Inverleith Terrace side of Inverleith Row. When he had reached a point about 20 to 25 yards northwards of Inverleith Terrace, he left the pavement, and was in the act of walking across Inverleith Row to reach his father's house in Eildon Street, when, without any warning, he was suddenly knocked down and run over by one of the defenders' cable cars, No. 127, which came up from the south and was running towards Goldenacre.

Cond 3. . . . . The said car, No. 127, forms one of a series of eight running on the same route. . . . Said cars are provided with a stair at each end, by which passengers ascend to the top of the car. Said stair is built on a dangerous and obsolete system. It starts from the left front of the platform, and in gradually rising to the level of the top of the car it passes obliquely in front of the driver of the car in such a manner as to completely obscure his vision to the front and left front of the direction in which the car is travelling. . . . Or otherwise, if it was at all possible for the driver to see what was in front or to his left front, he negligently and culpably failed to keep a proper lookout when the car was travelling. Had the car been constructed (as it ought to have been) so as to allow the driver a clear and unobstructed view of the road to his front and left front, and had he kept a proper lookout so as to avoid foot passengers and traffic, the accident to the pursuer's son would not have happened. . . . . The said accident was thus due either to the faulty and dangerous construction of said car, in that it prevented the driver from having a proper view of the road in front and on the left front in the direction in which the car was travelling, or to the culpable failure of the driver to keep a good lookout and warn foot-passengers crossing the street of the approach of his car. . . .

The pursuer also founded upon a Board of Trade regulation to the effect that "every car shall be so constructed as to enable the driver to command the fullest possible view of the road. . . ."

The defenders maintained, firstly, that the action was irrelevant; secondly, that the pursuer was not entitled to present his case in an alternative form, but must stand by his averment on construction, because it negatived the averment of want of lookout by the driver, and there was no averment of reckless speed (M'Sourley v. Magistrates of Paisley, 1902, 10 S.L.T. 86); thirdly, that the case was more suitable for proof before a judge than jury trial, because of (1) the doubtful relevancy of the case; this could only be a relevant case if a child is entitled to greater consideration than an adult in crossing a road; the pursuer's case as stated would constitute contributory negligence against an adult (Barclay v. M'Alpine & Sons, 1904, 12 S.L.T. 45; Cooke v. Leith Dock Commissioners, 1905, 13 S.L.T. 536; Hastie v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, 1907, S.C. 1102; Vallery v. M'Alpine & Sons, 1905, 12 S.L.T. 828; Jack v. The Rivet, Bolt and Nut Co. Ltd., 1904, 6 F. 572; Crawford v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, 1906, 14 S.L.T. 383). (2) The attack upon the construction of the cars depended upon the interpretation of the Board of Trade Regulations (M'Lean v. Johnstone, 1906, 8 F. 836; Kerr v. Screw Collier Co. Ltd., 1907, 15 S.L.T. 444), and was a question of expert evidence more suitable for a judge than a jury.

The pursuer maintained that he was entitled to the verdict of a jury unless very special cause was shewn (M'Intosh v. Commissioners of Lochgelly, 1897, 25 R. 32; Jamieson v. Hartil, 1898, 25 R. 551; Grieve v. Turbine Steamers Ltd., 1903, 11 S.L.T. 379; Smith v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, 1891, 28 S.L.R. 637; Glass v. Leitch and Others, 1902, 5 F. 14), and submitted that no such case was made out here: it was a plain issue of fact.

The Lord Ordinary held that the case was one for proof, not jury trial; he expressed the opinion in his note that the pursuer was not entitled to present his case in an alternative form, and issued the following interlocutor:—

The Lord Ordinary having heard counsel on the proposed issue for the pursuer, No. 10 of process, and considered the question as to the mode of proof to be allowed in this case: Finds that the cause is more suitable to be disposed of by way of proof before his Lordship than by a jury: Therefore disallows the issue; repels the defenders' first plea in law; allows to the parties a proof of their averments on record.

Lord Guthrie.—The pursuer's case is alternative. Either the car which knocked down and ran over his pupil son was so badly constructed that the driver could not have seen the child, so as to avoid knocking him down and running him over, or, if these averments are unfounded, then the accident was due to the driver's failure to keep a proper lookout. I do not think the pursuer is entitled so to state his case. The faulty condition of the car was of a permanent nature; and the identical car, according to him, is still running unaltered, as well as seven others of the same construction. His experts must know whether it is the fact, as alleged by him, that the stair of the car is so constructed "as to completely obscure his (the driver's) vision to the front and left front of the direction in which the car is travelling" (page 5 foot), and that "the driver did not and could not see the boy or know that he was there till the car was upon him" (page 6, middle). If permission to examine and test the car was refused, the pursuer could have got an order. The right to state alternative cases must be subject to some limitation. Obviously a pursuer would not be entitled to say, in the case of an existing and unaltered carriage, that it had no brake, or, if it had a brake, it was not applied. For the same reason, namely, that the alternatives are mutually inconsistent, I hold the pursuer to his primary averment of bad construction of the car, completely obscuring the driver's vision to his front and left front, so that he did not and could not see the boy, or know that he was there, till the car was upon him. If that averment is well founded, the accident could not have any connection with want of proper lookout on the driver's part, and the case made on record against the defenders, as being responsible for the driver's want of lookout, is irrelevant, on the pursuer's averments.

In the absence of any specialty, the result would be to send the case to jury trial, on the question of the faulty construction of the car. But the defenders maintain that, on the pursuer's averments, properly construed, it is clear that the proximate cause of the accident was, first, the action of the parents in allowing so young a child to go about unattended; and second, the action of the child in stepping in front of a moving car. They found on the averment in Cond. 2 to the effect that the child, going unattended, after walking some distance along the pavement on the west side of Inverleith Row, left the pavement and was "in the act of walking across Inverleith Row" when he was knocked down by a car, travelling northwards, but not at excessive speed, on the westmost pair of rails. As stated in Cond. 2, the averments, so far as any explanation is given of the conduct of the child, resemble the facts as they came out in the case of Fraser v. Edinburgh Tramways Company, 1882, 10 R. 264. But the pursuer explains that the child did not walk straight across but was going in a slanting direction, the result being that the car was coming up behind him, so that he could not see the car, nor could he hear it, through the strong north wind and the noiseless running of the car produced by the greasiness of the rails. The pursuer, who declined to amend, thus seems to me to table a case of such doubtful relevancy that although, with his counsel's explanation, I am not prepared to throw it out, I think it ought to be sent to proof and not to jury trial. The reason for sending the case to proof is strengthened by these circumstances: first, the delicate nature of all questions of contributory negligence in the case of children; second, the effect of the Board of Trade Regulations relied on by the pursuer, if they go beyond a mere statement of the defenders' common law liability; and third, because the question of the proper construction of cars, depending as it does on expert evidence, is better fitted for trial before a judge than for jury trial. —6*th March* 1908.

Objections to Auditor's Report.

The Court having found the appellant entitled to the expenses of the stated case, an account was duly lodged and taxed. The Auditor fixed the amount due at £5, 0s. 8d. The respondents lodged objections, and maintained that the Court having in London and Edinburgh Shipping Co. v. Brown, 1905, 7 F. 488, fixed £2, 2s. as a reasonable amount for adjusting the stated case, that sum only ought to be allowed. Counsel referred also to M'Govern v. Cooper & Co., 1901, 4 F. 249.

Counsel for the appellant maintained that in Brown's case what was laid down was that the party found entitled to expenses was to be allowed whatever in the circumstances was fair and reasonable. Two guineas was clearly too little if that was to include the £1 paid to the sheriff-clerk, which was included in Brown's case. What was disallowed in Brown's case was expenses in connection with counsel's assistance in regard to revising and adjusting the case.

The account in the present case contained no charge with reference to counsel's assistance. It included the £1 paid in terms of the Act of Sederunt of 3rd June 1898, and charges with reference to drawing minute to Sheriff to state a case; attendance receiving draft; attendance on respondent's agent with a view to having case adjusted; attendance on sheriff-clerk with draft case and making representation against question of law, etc.; correspondence and attendance as to the amount of wages, and similar charges.

366. Allan v. Dunfermline District Committee of the Fife County Council.

Reparation — Negligence — Relevancy—Safety of Children — Sewage Tanks in Private Ground—Child Drowned—Circumstances in Which Held No Duty to Fence.

The pursuer was the father of a child of six years of age who fell into and was drowned in a sewage tank, the property of the defenders. On record he averred that the defenders were responsible, firstly, as the public authority having control of public roads and footpaths, because they had failed to fence off a public footpath from said settling tank; and secondly, because, as proprietors of the settling tank and of the ground in which it was located, they had failed "(1) to fence the said ground adjoining said path and (2) to fence the said settling tanks." The pursuer, however, did not press the first ground of liability, but rested his case upon the second only. The circumstances in which the accident to the pursuer's child was said to have taken place and the fault alleged against the defenders, are set forth in the following averments.

Cond. 2. The pursuer's dwelling-house is a top flat, and is situated at the back and on the north side of Middleton Place aforesaid. It is entered by an outside stair, which opens upon a roadway running north of and parallel to Middleton Place, and leading to a grass park belonging to the Carron Company Limited. This grass park opens upon the public road that runs in a north-easterly direction from Middleton Place, and is contiguous to ground upon which settling tanks have been erected by the defenders in connection with the drainage scheme of Crossgates. The said ground and settling tanks belong to the defenders. On 21st June 1907 the grass park belonging to the Carron Company

Outer House. Lord Guthrie.

Allan v. Dunfermline District Committee of the Fife County Council.

Limited had no gate, and its fencing was completely broken down and useless. This park was then open to the public, who used it daily without check or hindrance as after mentioned. On said date there was no fence on the east side of the defenders' ground between the defenders' ground and the said grass park. There was thus free and unhampered access to and past the defenders' said settling tanks for all who wished to go, and there is a well-beaten footpath used by miners going to their work at certain of the pits belonging to the Fife Coal Company Limited, and by other members of the public. . . . By the footpath mentioned, adults and children had free access, uninterruped by fence or otherwise, and the pursuer believes and avers that said footpath was, prior to the date of said accident, used by members of the public constantly without let or hindrance, and since that date has been used by members of the public notwithstanding the erection of a fence on the east side of the defenders' said ground. . . . Said footpath runs within two or three feet of said tanks. . . .

Cond. 4. . . . . The tanks on said ground are six in number, but form one oblong structure, and are enclosed by flat-topped walls, which on the west are flush or level with the ground for a number of feet. At the north-west corner there is also access by means of a gangway. At the north-east corner the ground reaches to within a foot or thereby of the top of the tanks. . . . The flat-topped nature of the walls, the said gangways, and the ground level with them on their south-west and north-east sides, permit children to run about the said tanks, which are not protected in any way whatever, and this was well known to the defenders prior to 21st June 1907. . . . Many accidents have happened to children at said tanks, and in particular a young girl fell into them about two years ago. . . . These accidents were or ought to have been known to the defenders. . . .

Cond. 5. On 21st June 1907 the said Peter Baxter Allan, along with some other children, went along said open path . . . . and . . . . stopped to play there. While playing at said tanks the said Peter Baxter Allan fell into and was drowned in the centre tank situated at the north-east of said structure.

Cond. 6. The death of the pursuer's son was due to the fault and negligence of the defenders in respect that they failed—(1) to fence the said ground adjoining the said path, and (2) to fence the said settling tanks. It was their duty, both as proprietors of the said ground and as the District Committee of the County Council, to see that the ground on which the tanks are situated was properly fenced or that the tanks were properly fenced in, but this duty they failed to perform, and their negligence caused the said accident. The defenders were aware of the dangerous and unfenced condition of the ground and of the tanks, and that the said footpath and stile were habitually used by miners and other members of the public, but they never stopped or tried to prevent any person from using the said footpath, or children from frequenting the said path, ground and settling tanks, and they did not put up any notice warning the public of the nature of the ground or the danger arising from the settling tanks, although it was their duty to do so. The defenders were, on said date, aware that their ground was only fenced on the north, at which point they had put up a stile to give access to it. They knew that the ground was bounded on the north by the public road, and that children and others had free access to the tanks from that direction and from the south, but they used no means to prevent children or members of the public from falling or stumbling into said tanks until after the date of the said accident. They have, however, since the accident, put up barbed-wire cattle-fencing on the south and the south-east ends of said path, and have removed the said stile at the north end, except its top step, and have heavily re-wired the fence where it had been, with barbed wire. If they had taken these precautions prior to the accident, as it was their duty to do, the pursuer's son would not have been drowned, and thus they are responsible to the pursuer in reparation for his death. Moreover, the accident would not have happened if they had put a fence round and in close proximity to the said tanks. This could have been easily and cheaply done, and would not have interfered in any way with their utility, but this they did not do, although they ought to have done so. The tanks are situated between and in close proximity to both Middleton Place, which is part of the public road leading from Crossgates to Dunfermline, and the public road leading from Main Street, Crossgates, to the said manse, and there are many dwelling-houses in their immediate neighbourhood. Had the fencing, which has been erected since the date of the accident, been in existence prior thereto, the pursuer's son could not have entered the ground, and he would not have been drowned, or if he had entered the ground by way of the stile, he would not have been drowned had the tanks themselves been fenced. The defenders are thus responsible in reparation to the pursuer for the death of his said son. The averments in answer are denied. The distance from the pursuer's house to the scene of the accident is less than a quarter of a mile.

The pursuer therefore maintained that in these circumstances the defenders were bound to anticipate that children would stop and play at said tanks, and to provide against danger to them by fencing. In addition to the cases referred to by the Lord Ordinary the pursuer cited Black v. Caddell, M. 13,905; Green v. Stirling Road Trs., 1882, 9 R. 1069; Waugh v. City of Glasgow Union Railway Co., 1883, 20 S.L.R. 585; Findlay v. Angus, 1887, 14 R. 312.

The defenders maintained that the action should be dismissed as irrelevant. This was not a case of a dangerous place near a public road; the child was a trespasser, and there was no averment even of implied invitation.

The Lord Ordinary dismissed the action.

Lord Guthrie.—The fault alleged against the defenders is failure either to fence the path alleged to run alongside the tanks where the pursuer's child was drowned, or to fence the tanks themselves. It was admitted that, if the pursuer has a case, it is against the defenders as proprietors of the ground, and not as a public road authority.

It is not alleged that there is any public right of way along the path in question said to run past the tanks on the defenders' ground. But it is alleged that, prior to the accident (for how long it is not said), the public, including children, have, in the defenders' knowledge, used this path as a means of going from the Dunfermline to Crossgates Road on the south to the road to Crossgates on the north. Had the pursuer's case been that his child, while proceeding along the path from end to end—that is, from one public place to another—accidentally strayed off the path into a tank in immediate proximity to the path, the question would have arisen whether such an averment was a relevant foundation for a claim of damages, in the absence of any averment either that the child was at the time of the accident engaged on business in which the defenders had an interest (as, for instance, taking food to its father working on the defenders' ground), or at least that the child was passing from end to end on business, as, for instance, going a message or to school. I had a full citation of the cases bearing on issues of those kinds. The pursuer quoted Gavin, 1889, 16 R. 509; Gibson, 1893, 20 R. 466; Hamilton, 1893, 20 R. 995; Haughton, 1892, 20 R. 113; Messer, 1897, 25 R. 7; Laughlan, 1895, 3 S.L.T. p. 209; Gillespie, 1906, 14 S.L.T. 85; and the defenders quoted Prentice, 1889, 17 R. 484; Devlin, 1902, 5 F. 130; Cummings, 1903, 5 F. 513; and Hastie, 1907, S.C. 1102.

But no such case is made here. The child, at the time of the accident, had left the path, with its companions, for the purpose of playing at the tanks, and while so engaged the unfortunate accident happened. Had the improbable averment been made that the tanks were habitually used, with the defenders' knowledge and approval, by children as a playground, it might have been argued that an invitation was thereby given by the defenders; and the same argument might have been maintained, under certain cases of doubtful authority, even if the averment had only come up to knowledge without objection. But the pursuer makes no such case, and stated that he was not prepared to amend to raise any such case. I therefore hold his averments irrelevant.—6*th March* 1908.

Post Office — Delivery of Letters — —Interdict—Held that an Action Against a Local Postmaster to Have Him Interdicted From Dealing With Letters in Accordance With Instructions From His Official Superior Was Irrelevant.

In this action Alfred Horne, 58 High Street, Dunbar, sought interdict and decree against Patrick Macgregor, postmaster, Dunbar, in the terms given in the Lord Ordinary's Opinion.

Outer House. Lord Mackenzie. Horne v. Macgregor.

The pursuer's averments are also given in the Lord Ordinary's opinion. In Cond. 7 the pursuer averred that he had requested the defender to deliver to him the letters, telegrams and other communications addressed to and intended for him under the name Horne, but that on 2nd October 1907 the defender, through the medium of the Secretary of the General Post Office, Edinburgh, intimated to the pursuer's agent that all letters addressed "Horne, Livery Stables (or Stables), Dunbar"; "Horne, Postmaster, Dunbar"; "A. Horne, Dunbar," etc., etc., were to be treated as undeliverable. The pursuer further averred (but this was not admitted by the defender) that he was the only person bearing the name of "Mr Horne," or "Alfred Horne," or "A. Horne," in Dunbar, and that he was the only person in Dunbar bearing the name of "Horne," other than his niece, Miss E. Horne, whose business he managed; and that George Wilson Burnett did not purchase the right to use or trade under the name of "Horne," and had used his own name, "G. W. Burnett," only in connection with his business.

The defender in Answer 9 referred to the terms of sect. 63 of the Act 3 & 4 Vict. cap. 96; the Telegraph Acts and, in particular, sect. 15 of the Act 31 & 32 Vict. cap. 110, and sect. 2 of the Act 48 & 49 Vict. cap. 58. In Statement 3 of his Statement of Facts the defender set forth the instructions received by him from the Secretary of the General Post Office, Edinburgh, and averred that he had acted upon these instructions and had given directions accordingly. The defender also averred that he had received a letter from George Wilson Burnett in which he intimated that he had purchased the pursuer's business, and had since carried on that business under the name of "A. Horne," and in which he requested that all letters addressed to "A. Horne, or Alfred Horne, hirer or postmaster, or A. Horne or Alfred Horne, Stables, Dunbar, with the exception of those addressed to A. Horne, 58 High Street, Dunbar, should be delivered at the St George Stables."

an undischarged bankrupt, for some time carried on a posting business in Dunbar, at the St George's Stables there. In January 1907 George Wilson Burnett bought the business, and has since carried it on (the pursuer says under the name of Burnett) at the St George Posting and Livery Stables. The pursuer remained with him as manager till August 1907, when he left. The pursuer then went to be manager of a posting business and livery stables in Dunbar, carried on by his niece, E. Horne. This business is carried on at 54 High Street, Dunbar. The pursuer's residence is at 58 High Street. The pursuer avers in Conds. 4 and 5, that after leaving the St George's Stables, one letter and two telegrams which were addressed to him were not delivered to him. He then sets out that he requested the defender, who is the local postmaster of Dunbar, to deliver to him the letters, telegrams and other communications addressed to and intended for him under the name of Horne. The pursuer then avers that on 2nd October 1907, through the medium of the Secretary to the General Post Office, Edinburgh, the defender intimated to the pursuer's agent that all letters addressed "Horne, Livery Stables" (or "Stables"), Dunbar; "Horne, Postmaster, Dunbar"; "A. Horne, Dunbar," etc., etc., were to be treated as undeliverable. He then sets out that on 19th October 1907 a telegram addressed "Horne," jobmaster, Dunbar, which was intended for him, was not delivered, and that other telegrams and letters, the dates of which are not specified, addressed to or intended for him, had not been delivered to him but had been delivered to George Wilson Burnett.

It is in these circumstances that the present action has been brought by the pursuer against the defender to have him interdicted from delivering to any person other than the pursuer all letters, telegrams, postcards, circulars, parcels or other communications bearing the addresses "Horne, Livery Stables, Dunbar"; "Horne, Stables, Dunbar;" "Horne, Postmaster, Dunbar"; "A. Horne, Dunbar"; "Horne, Dunbar," or addressed in such other manner or way as to shew that they are intended for the pursuer. Then follows a conclusion that the defender should be ordained to deliver all such letters, telegrams, etc., addressed to him as aforesaid or in such manner or way so as to shew that they are intended for the pursuer, either to him personally or at the premises of E. Horne, livery stable keeper and cab-hirer, No. 54 High Street, Dunbar, or at his dwelling-house, No. 58 High Street, Dunbar.

The summons contains a demand upon the defender to act otherwise than in accordance with the instructions given by the Secretary to the General Post Office, as set out by the pursuer himself in Cond. 7. Now, it appears to me that there is sufficient on the pursuer's side of the record to enable this question to be disposed of upon relevancy. The averments of the defender, contained in Answer 9 and Statement 3, are not admitted, and therefore it would not be possible to proceed upon these without a proof. I think, however, it sufficiently appears from what the pursuer himself says that what he wishes the Court to do is first to interdict the defender from acting in accordance with the intimation of his official superior; and, in the next place, to ordain him to do something which would be equivalent to disobeying the instruction so given. It may be that if what the defender was doing was of the nature of a delict it would be no protection for him to say that he was acting in accordance with the instructions of his official superior. Bnt none of the cases cited by the pursuer warrant the proposition that a local postmaster is bound, in consequence of some implied contract with the addressee of a letter, to disregard the orders of his superior. The defender founds upon certain statutes, among others 3 & 4 Vict. cap. 96, sect. 63, and 48 & 49 Vict. cap. 58, sect. 2, which provide that the Postmaster-General may make regulations for the delivery of letters and for the general conduct of telegraphic business. It is not said by the pursuer that the defender has been acting contrary to any regulation. So far as appears, he has been acting entirely in accordance with the directions given by the Secretary to the General Post Office in Edinburgh. In these circumstances I think it would be most unfortunate to comply with the pursuer's request that there should be an enquiry in order that the Court may decide whether the instructions given are reasonable or not in the circumstances. There was an attempt of a similar kind in the case of Stapleton v. The Foreign Vineyard Association, 1864, 11 L.T. 77, in which Wood, V.C., refused an injunction which was asked against the Postmaster-General, his agents, servants, etc. So far as appears, the Post Office officials seem to have done their duty in the present case, and the pursuer's ground of complaint ought not to be against the postmaster but against Burnett. The pursuer founded upon the case of Bainbridge [1906], 1 K.B. 178. The judgment in that case was that the Postmaster-General was not liable in an action of damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the act of one of his subordinates without fault on his part. The ground of judgment was that the subordinate in question was a servant of the Crown, and was not in the employment of the Postmaster-General. I am unable to see that this is an authority for the proposition that the Court, in an action to which the subordinate alone is made a party, is to enquire whether the orders given to him are reasonable or not, and, if it is considered they are unreasonable, then to ordain him to disobey them. There was also a reference made to several old cases decided in England in the middle and latter part of the eighteenth century, dealing with a controversy which then existed between postmasters and the public, as to whether a postmaster was bound to deliver letters without extra charge within his district. These cases, however, do not support the contention of the pursuer that a postmaster is bound to deliver otherwise than in accordance with the instructions given him.

The conclusion to which I come is that it sufficiently appears from the pursuer's averments what the instructions were in regard to these letters. I am of opinion that there is no implied contract binding the defender to deliver otherwise than in accordance with the orders he receives from his superiors. The pursuer has no right to litigate with the defender the question whether the instructions given him were proper in the circumstances or not. I am accordingly of opinion that the pursuer's averments are irrelevant, and that the action should be dismissed, with expenses.—8th Februrary 1908.

Petition and Answers.

The facts of this case and the contentions of parties sufficiently appear from the Lord Ordinary's Note.

The Lord Ordinary held that the respondents Colonel Malcolm and others were entitled to have the sums realised from uncalled capital set aside and retained for security of their obligations.

Outer House. Lord Johnston.

Liquidator of the Ballachulish Slate Quarries Co. Ltd. v. Malcolm and Others.

Lord Johnston.—The Ballachulish Slate Quarries Company was incorporated in 1893, with a capital of £30,000 divided into 600 ordinary shares of £50 each, the whole of which have been issued. It went into voluntary liquidation on 13th August 1907, and the liquidation was thereafter at once placed under the supervision of the Court.

In order to carry on its business it obtained an overdraft from the Bank of Scotland on 8th January 1901 for £3000. This was increased on 7th September 1901 to £5000, but the nominal amount of the overdraft was very much exceeded, and towards the end of 1904 it had reached about £13,000. At this point the bank demanded either reduction of the overdraft or security, and on 12th and 13th October 1904 a letter of guarantee, No. 67 of process, limited to £8500, was granted in the bank's favour by Colonel Edward D. Malcolm, C.B., of Poltalloch, and three others, some, if not all, of whom were directors of the Company, to the terms of which I shall afterwards refer. It is stated, and I think admitted, that the guarantee was intended to be temporary merely, pending a call being made on the shares of the Company, which were then only £24, 10s. paid. But however this may be, at the date when the letter of guarantee was granted, the guarantors did not stipulate for any security from the Company. In December following, however, the proposal to make an immediate call having apparently been departed from, the guarantors demanded that a bond of relief and assignation in security of the uncalled capital of the Company should be granted in their favour, and this was acceded to (see directors' minutes of 14th December 1904, and 20th, 25th and 30th January 1905), and accordingly the bond of relief and assignation of uncalled capital in security, No. 68 of process, was granted of the last mentioned date in favour of the guarantors, and it was intimated to the shareholders on 6th March 1905.

The call of £7, 10s. per share which had been contemplated in the end of 1904, was made on 5th June 1905 and produced £4500, and the guarantors did not interpose to impound the proceeds, but permitted them to be applied with other monies in reduction of the overdraft; and accordingly in November 1905 the overdraft had been reduced to between £9000 and £10,000. At this stage pressure was brought on the Company, both by the bank and the guarantors, the result of which was that by their Minute of 14th November, as modified by that of 28th November 1906, the directors resolved on a further call of £5 on the Company's shares, which was made payable OUTER HOUSE. Lord Johnston.

Liquidator of the Ballachulish Slate Quarries Co. Ltd. v. Malcolm and Others.

£2, 10s. at 31st December 1906 and £2, 10s. at 31st January 1907, "the above calls to be made payable to Messrs Menzies, Bruce-Low & Thomson, as agents for the guarantors, to whom the uncalled capital has been hypothecated, and applied by them in partial discharge of the sum guaranteed." On this call being made there remained £13 per share still to call, and on 12th December 1906 the directors minuted that they "resolved to make, and hereby make, a call of £10 per share, payable in two instalments of £5 each at the end of March 1907 and at Whitsunday 1907 respectively, the proceeds to be payable to Messrs Menzies, Bruce-Low & Thomson, W.S., to be placed to the credit of a deposit or other separate bank account in name of Messrs Macandrew, Wright & Murray, W.S., and Messrs Inglis, Orr & Bruce, W.S., on behalf of the guarantors, or otherwise as may be hereafter arranged." Although this last-mentioned call of £10 was made, so far as the resolution of the directors went, it does not appear to have been intimated to the shareholders, and certainly it was not carried into effect. I gather that the reason of this was that the bank had at once made it clear that, in respect of these calls having been made in November and December 1906, they would require a further guarantee or other security for the unsecured portion of the overdraft. Accordingly, when the Company went into liquidation, there was still £13 per share uncalled, and this amount has been made a call in the liquidation by the liquidator.

The sums which require to be dealt with in this note are the following:—

1. A sum of £540, being payment by Mr Edward Bruce, one of the guarantors, of the £5 call of 28th November 1906 on his holding of thirty shares in the Company, together with payment in advance of the £13 per share then remaining to be called on his said shares.

2. The sum of £2493, being the proceeds of the call of £5 per share made on 28th November 1906, from the whole shares of the Company, other than Mr Bruce's said thirty shares.

These two sums were deposited, not in the name of Messrs Menzies, Bruce-Low & Thomson, as had been originally arranged, but in the joint names of Messrs Macandrew, Wright & Murray, and Messrs Inglis, Orr & Bruce, on behalf of the guarantors.

3. The sum of £357, being the balance of the last mentioned call, which had not been recovered by the directors, but which has been or is to be paid to the liquidator.

4. The sum of £7410, being the proceeds of the call of £13 per share made in the liquidation, under deduction of the £390 prepaid by Mr Bruce on his thirty shares, and which is included in the sum first above mentioned.

The guarantors claim that they are entitled to the whole of these sums so far as necessary to secure their relief of their obligation to the bank under the letter of guarantee. The liquidator, on the other hand, maintains:

First, That no effectual assignation of uncalled capital, or at least of capital remaining uncalled at the date when a company goes into liquidation, can be made; and Second, That no such assignation has in the circumstances of the present case effectually been made.

The first question is therefore a general question, and assumes power in the Company by its Memorandum and Articles, and in the directors by the Articles, to borrow money and to pledge the uncalled capital of the Company. The question has not arisen for decision in Scotland, but assuming the above, I have no hesitation in saying that it must be decided here, as in England, in the affirmative. There is in England a series of authorities which has established this. I refer to Stanley's case (1864), 4 De G., J. and S. 407; Sankey Brook Coal Co. (No. 2), (1870), 10 Eq. 381; Bank of South Australia v. Abrahams (1875), L.R. 6 P.C. 265; Phœnix Bessemer Steel Co. (1875), 44 L.J. Ch. 683; In re Pyle Works (No. 1), (1890), L.R. 44 Ch. D. 534; and Newton v. Anglo-Australian Co., L.R. 1895, A.C. 244. The latter case, though not decided in the House of Lords, was decided by the Privy Council, upon the New South Wales Companies Act of 1874, which for the purposes of the case is identical with the Companies Act 1862 of the United Kingdom. As the Privy Council, on which sat five members of the then House of Lords, were interpreting a legislative enactment which applies to Scotland as well as to England and to some at least of the Colonies, I do not think that I could with propriety do otherwise than simply accept their judgment and apply it in Scotland. But I would venture to quote the following passage from Lord Macnaghten, who delivered their Lordships' judgment. Referring to the case of In re Pyle Works (supra), his Lordship says (p. 248): "The main argument against the validity of the charge was that it seemed to contravene the directions of the Act in regard to the application of moneys recovered from contributories in the winding up. But the answer was obvious. The liability of a contributory as a present member to pay calls in the winding up, is not a liability springing into existence for the first time on the company going into liquidation. It is merely the ripening of that liability which the contributory undertook when he became a member. The liquidator, no doubt, is bound to distribute what belongs to the company in the manner prescribed by the Act. But after all the question is, What does belong to the company? What are its assets or its property? That must depend upon what dispositions have been made, and what charges have been validly created while the company acting within its powers was free to deal as it pleased with its own.

"Their Lordships see no reason to differ from the conclusion at which the Court of Appeal arrived in the case of In re Pyle Works. But they desire to add that if they felt any doubt about the matter, they would have been most reluctant to introduce into the administration of company law in a colony which has adopted the Act of 1862 a rule different to that established by judicial decisions in this country. There is no case in which uniformity of practice is more important or more desirable."

I conclude therefore that a charge on the uncalled capital of the Company is just as competent in Scotland as in England. But then, in order that it may be effectual, it is necessary that it should be effected according to the law of Scotland—that is, that the law of Scotland, which requires intimation of an assignation, should be attended to (In re Queensland Mercantile and Agency Co., L.R. 1892, 1 Chan. 219; Liquidator of Union Club Ltd. v. Edinburgh Life Assurance Co., 1906, 8 F. 1143). But this has been done in the present case, as the bond of relief and assignation in security was intimated to each shareholder of the Company at the time it was granted, and I am not informed that there has been any change on the register of shareholders.

It remains therefore to consider the second question, Whether in the circumstances of the present case the charge is good? Now I do not think that it can be seriously disputed that both the Company and the directors of the Company were empowered to borrow and to pledge the uncalled capital in security. The power is taken by the Company expressly and not as matter of implication in Article 3 (e) of the Memorandum, and although the language of Article 53 of the Articles of Association is a little more confused, I have no doubt that the power is equally expressly conferred upon the directors. But it was strongly contended on behalf of the liquidator that the directors had not borrowed money and granted an assignation in security thereof in terms of the power conferred upon them, and that what they actually did was therefore ultra vires.

It is said that the Memorandum empowers the Company to borrow money by the issue of debentures and other documents of debt, as, for instance, "bonds and dispositions and assignations in security, bills of exchange, obligations and other securities for money, and by way of such security to dispose of absolutely or in trust, mortgage, pledge or charge all or any part of the Company's undertakings, assets, revenue, works, subjects and property, including uncalled capital, or to borrow money as aforesaid without any security." There can be no doubt therefore that under their Memorandum the Company had power to assign by way of security its uncalled capital. Turning, then, to the 53rd head of the Articles of Association, the directors are thereby authorised at their discretion to borrow moneys for the purposes of the Company and to "raise or secure the repayment of such moneys in such manner and upon such terms and conditions in all respects as they think fit"; and in particular by the issue of debentures charged upon "the property and rights of the Company, both present and future, including the uncalled capital thereof," or by granting bills, mortgages, bonds and dispositions and assignations in security (including therein bonds of cash credit) over all property of the Company, "including the uncalled capital thereof." It is therefore clear that the directors are empowered on behalf of the Company to exercise the Company's power under their Memorandum, by borrowing and assigning in security, inter alia, the uncalled capital of the Company.

But then it is said that the directors have not done what the Memorandum and Articles authorised them to do; that they have not borrowed on the security of the Company's uncalled capital; that they have borrowed from the bank and given the bank no security over the uncalled capital or over any other assets of the Company; but having borrowed from the bank they have given a security to persons from whom they have borrowed nothing, but who have only given to the bank a guarantee of their advances to the Company, which guarantee involves merely a contingent obligation and may never ripen into an actual one. It is said that for such an assignation neither the Memorandum nor the Articles give any authority. I think that such construction is not warranted by any reasonable reading of the documents in question. In the first place, I do not think that there is any obligation on the Company or its directors to give the security unico contextu with raising the money. An advance may be made without security, but the time may come when, if the advance is to be continued, security must be found. In such case, if security is found, the money is virtually paid off on the original footing, and re-borrowed on the new footing. And in the second place, I see no necessity for the security being given directly to the lender, and not indirectly through a guarantor. Nor do I see any necessity for the security being for an absolute obligation to the lender, and not merely for a contingent obligation to the guarantor. I think that the course which has been taken here is not only amply covered by the spirit of the Memorandum and Articles, but even by their letter. The borrowing has been by a composite arrangement — an advance by the bank, a guarantee by Colonel Malcolm and others, and an assignation in relief to the guarantors. Now, though the arrangement be composite, it surely comes within the express power of the directors "to secure the repayment of such moneys" as they borrow, "in such manner, and upon such terms and conditions, in all respects as they think fit," and in particular by assigning uncalled capital. And equally does it come under the express description in the Memorandum of "other securities for money" when that is read along with the context, and is just one of those securities by way of which the Company is empowered to charge its uncalled capital. I may refer to the case of In re Pyle Works (No. 2), L.R. (1891), 1 Ch. 173, where the circumstances, though not identical, were very similar.

But then the guarantors' claim against the Company is contingent merely, and they are entitled to recover what under their letter of guarantee they are called upon to pay to the bank. This is expressed in the letter of guarantee, No. 67 of process, "not to exceed £8500 sterling, and interest from the date or dates of advance." When read in connection with the subsequent provision, "that this guarantee shall apply to and secure any ultimate balance of the sums that shall remain due to you (the bank) after applying any dividends, compositions or payments which we may receive," the obligation to pay interest from the date or dates of advance is one difficult of practical interpretation. But I understand it to be accepted at any rate that the guarantors are bound in payment of the last end of the bank's advances after the bank has applied in their reduction all recoveries, including dividends in liquidation, from the Company, the limit of their guarantee, however, being £8500 of principal, whatever may be the obligation as regards interest. If, however, there is any dubiety about this, or any question of the meaning of the obligation as to interest, the parties may require to be further heard.—6th March 1908.

369. Inverness County Council v. Burgh of Inverness.

I. Local Government—Extension of Burgh—Assessment—Transference of Area from County to Burgh—Adjustment of Liability for Proportion, Effeiring to such Area, of Loans for County Purposes Secured on County Assessments—Held that a Burgh Taking in, Under the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1892, an Area Formerly in a County Was Not Liable to the County in Payment of a Proportional Part of Loans by the County Secured on the Assessment of the County or of the Division of the County in which the Area was Formerly Included—The Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1892 (55 and 56 Vict. cap. 55), sect. 11.

II. Public Authorities Protection Act 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. cap. 61)—Expenses as Between Agent and Client—Motion for Expenses on this Scale Refused.

In this action at the instance of the County Council of the County of Inverness against the Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of the Royal Burgh of Inverness, the pursuers sought to have it found and declared that "the defenders are liable in repayment of a rateable or proportionate share of all loans effected by the pursuers the said County Council for the general purposes of the County of Inverness, or for the purposes of the First or Inverness District of said County, and existing at 11th May 1903, and secured on assessments leviable by the pursuers the said County Council on said County or said District respectively, said share being the proportion of the amount of said loans respectively which the assessable rental as existing at said date of that area of said County and District, which was transferred on said date by interlocutor of the Sheriff of the County of Inverness to the Burgh of Inverness, bore to the assessable rental of said County at said date in the case of loans secured on assessments leviable by the pursuers the County Council on said County, and to the assessable rental of said District at said date in the case of loans secured on assessments leviable by the pursuers the County Council on said District; and it having been so found and declared, or whether it shall be so found and declared or not, the defenders ought and should be decerned and ordained by decree foresaid to make payment to the pursuers" of three sums which were the proportions exigible from the transferred area of the balance unpaid on three loans raised by the pursuers for general county purposes, and of three sums being the proportion of balance unpaid on three loans raised by the pursuers for the purposes of the First or Inverness District of the County, or alternatively for six sums being the proportions of the annual instalments payable in repayment of the said loans.

The nature of these loans is given in the Lord Ordinary's opinion.

The Pursuers pleaded:

1. The defenders having taken over the administration of the area in question, are liable for its debts and liabilities existing at the date of transference, and the pursuers are accordingly entitled to decree of declarator as concluded for, and to decree in terms of one or other of the alternative petitory conclusions of the summons, with expenses.

2. The area in question having become liable in repayment of a pro rata share of the loans referred to on record until said loans are repaid, and the said liability subsisting at the date when said area was transferred as condescended on, the pursuers are entitled to decree of declarator as concluded for, and to decree in terms of one or other of the alternative petitory conclusions of the summons, with expenses.

The Defenders pleaded, inter alia:

4. The defenders are entitled to absolvitor in respect that—

(a) The loans condescended on were effected by the pursuers upon the security of rates leviable by them within the area comprised for the time being within the county of Inverness, or within the first district thereof, exclusive of any royal or parliamentary burgh situate therein, according to the boundaries of such burgh for police purposes;

(b) The transferred area in question ceased upon the extension of the burgh boundaries to be within the county of Inverness as above defined;

(c) No real security affecting any part of said transferred area was constituted by any of the mortgages or bonds and assignations in security founded on by the pursuers;

(d) No rates affected by any of the said mortgages or bonds and assignations in security are levied or leviable by the defenders within the transferred area;

(e) The statute under which the transference of said area from the county to the burgh took place contained no provision for adjustment of debts and liabilities between the county and the burgh consequent upon such transference.

The Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. cap. 55), sect. 11, enacts that "upon the application of the Commissioners or of the Council of any burgh," and after intimation and, if necessary, enquiry, "it shall be lawful for the Sheriff, after hearing all parties interested, from time to time to revise, alter, extend, or contract the boundaries of such burgh for the purposes of this Act, but so as not to encroach on the boundaries of any other burgh," and to divide the same into wards, "and the Sheriff shall define, in a written deliverance on such application, the new boundaries of such burgh and wards, for the purposes of this Act; and such deliverance, unless appealed against (in manner hereinafter provided, shall be final; and when recorded along with the application on which it proceeds in the Sheriff Court books of the county, shall fix and determine the boundaries of such burgh and wards for the purposes of this Act. . . ."

Sect. 21 of the said Act provides that "wherever the boundaries of any burgh have been determined in terms of this Act, the whole powers and duties (including the rights to levy assessments) exerciseable by any local authority acting under the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1867, and Acts amending the same, within the district or districts comprehended within such burgh shall cease and determine, and the same shall be transferred to and vested in the Commissioners under this Act, and all drainage, water, and other works executed in such district or districts by such local authority in the performance of its powers and duties under the said Acts shall be taken over by the Commissioners under this Act, who shall be liable for the whole debts and obligations of such local authority applicable to such district or districts. . . ."

Sect. 22 of the said Act provides that where under the Act any area of a county is annexed to a burgh, "the Commissioners of such burgh shall pay annually to the County Council of such county from which such area is taken such proportion of the expenses payable by the County Council for the preparation of the register of parliamentary voters for such county or division thereof, as the case may be, as the number of voters in the said area shall bear to the total number of voters in such county or division thereof."

The Lord Ordinary found that the pursuers' averments were irrelevant, and dismissed the action.

Lord Mackenzie.—On 11th May 1903, by interlocutor of the Sheriff of the County of Inverness, the boundaries of the Burgh of Inverness were extended, under the provisions of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act 1892, sect. 11, so as to include an area of ground which prior to that date had formed part of the County, and which was situated within the First or Inverness District of the County.

This is an action at the instance of the County Council to have it declared that the Burgh are liable in repayment of a rateable or proportionate share of all loans effected by the pursuers, for the general purposes of the County of Inverness, or for the purposes of the First or Inverness District of the County as the same existed at 11th May 1903, which were secured on assessments leviable by the pursuers on the County or District respectively.

Now, in order to judge of the soundness of the pursuers' demand, it is necessary, in the first place, to consider what the loans are of which the Burgh of Inverness are asked to bear a rateable or proportionate share. To take first the loans raised by the pursuers for general county purposes, these are (a) loan of £2600, dated 18th October 1894; (b) loan of £1400, dated 23rd May 1898; and (c) loan of £5150, dated 3rd February 1903. No. 6 of process deals with the loan of £2600. It is a bond by the County Council of Inverness in favour of the Scottish Legal Life Assurance Society. It bears that by virtue of (1) the Police (Scotland) Act 1857, and (2) the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889, and by virtue of the consent of the Standing Joint Committee, the County Council, in consideration of the advance of £2600 as a loan for the purpose of erecting new police houses within the county, bound and obliged themselves and their successors in office and representatives whomsoever, out of the moneys to be raised under the annual assessments by the said Acts authorised to be imposed and levied within the county, and designated the police assessment, and all other rates and assessments which they could competently charge with repayment of the said loan, to repay the sum borrowed to the lenders, and that by thirty equal yearly instalments. Then follows an assignation in security of all and whole the foresaid police assessment and all other assessments as the same should become due and payable from time to time. There was also an obligation on the borrowers to impose and levy such assessments as should be sufficient to provide for due payment of the principal, interest and penalties. No. 7 of process is a bond and assignation in security by the County Council of Inverness in favour of the Parish Savings Bank of Dumfries for the loan of £1400, which was obtained in order to provide for the cost of new police stations and the balance of the cost of those already built. The terms of this bond are practically the same as those of No. 6 of process above referred to. No. 8 of process is a bond and assignation in security by the County Council in favour of the Savings Investment Trust (Limited) for the loan of £5150 which, as the bond narrates, was obtained to pay the price of the building at Inverness purchased from the Prison Commissioners for the purpose of providing accommodation and rooms for the transaction of the business of the County Council, and also to provide certain police accommodation. The only difference between this bond and the two foregoing is that there is in it an assignation in security not only of the Police Assessment but also of the County General Assessment leviable under the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889.

OUTER HOUSE. Lord Mackenzie.

Inverness County Council v. Burgh of Inverness.

Turning now to the loans raised by the pursuers for the purposes of the First or Inverness District of the County, these are (a) a loan of £3000, dated 2nd April 1894, and (b) a loan of £500, dated 13th October 1899. No. 9 of process is a mortgage to secure the loan of £3000, and sets out that the County Council had resolved to borrow that sum under the powers contained in the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Act 1878, sect. 58, and in the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889, sect. 67, for the purpose of defraying the cost of the construction of new roads and bridges in the First or Inverness District of the County of Inverness, under the powers contained in the said Acts; that they had borrowed the said sum from William Carson, repayable by thirty equal instalments. The security for the loan was an assignation of the assessment for maintenance, management, and repair of highways leviable in the First or Inverness District of the County of Inverness, under the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Act 1878, and the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889, and of all other moneys, assessments, and rates which the County Council had power to levy within the said First or Inverness District and charge for the purposes of the said security. No. 10 of process is a bond and assignation in security by the County Council in favour of the trustees for the Ardrie Savings Bank for the loan of £500, which was obtained for the payment of the expense of constructing a new bridge across the Craggie Burn, near Craggie Inn, in the First or Inverness District of the County, under the provision of the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Act 1878, and the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889. The assignation in security was of all assessments to be raised and paid within the First or Inverness District of the County, for payment of the expense of new roads and bridges under sect. 58 of the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Act 1878, as amended by sect. 16 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889, being the road maintenance rate of the said district, and that by thirty equal annual instalments.

Now, what is the theory upon which the pursuers seek to make the defenders liable for portions of these loans as concluded for in the summons? Is it because there is a contract, statutory or otherwise? There is certainly no contract under the Burgh Police Act of 1892, which is the statute under which the Sheriff extended the boundaries of the burgh. That Act contains no provision for the apportionment of debts and obligations except in the two cases dealt with by sects. 21 and 22, dealing respectively with matters pertaining to public health and registration. The legislature in 1892 having dealt expressly with the adjustment of certain debts and obligations, and said nothing about any other, must, in my opinion, be held, on the ground of expressio unius, to have intended that there should be adjustment only in the two cases expressly dealt with. In 1903 a different view seems to have been taken, because, in the Burgh Police Act of that year, sect. 96 incorporates sect. 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889. If the boundaries of the burgh had been extended subsequent to the Act of 1903 having come into operation, it is conceded that the pursuers would have had a title, failing agreement, to apply to the Sheriff to adjust their respective liabilities for the debts in question. There is, however, no provision in the Act of 1892 similar to that contained in sect. 96 of the Act of 1903, and I am unable to read into the Act of 1892 a section which it does not contain. I am accordingly of opinion that plea 4 (e) for the defenders is well-founded.

The pursuers, however, urge that they have a claim in equity. They contend, as I understand their argument, that anyone who takes land must take it cum onere; that it was incumbent upon the burgh to have got from the Sheriff a declaration that the area in question should cease to be burdened with any portion of the debts for which it was liable at the date of the transference, and that, as they failed to do this, the debt still affected the transferred area. They founded upon the cases of Caterham Urban Council [1904], A.C. 171, and West Hartlepool Corporation [1907], A.C. 246, in support of this contention. All that these cases decided was that, on a construction of certain statutory provisions, a rural district in the one case and a county in the other were not entitled to compensation for any loss of assessment in respect of areas transferred from them. Certain expressions in the judgments were founded upon, particularly in the opinion of Lord Davey in the Caterham case, to the effect that, when a severance takes place of an administrative unit, some adjustment is necessary. It has to be observed, however, that this opinion was expressed in a case where the statute under consideration contained careful provision for such adjustment. It was urged for the pursuers here that in the Caterham case it was recognised there is a right to adjustment independent of these provisions. This, however, does not appear to me to affect the defenders' argument above referred to, that, as regards the Burgh Police Act of 1892, the legislature must be held to have made provision for all that was then considered necessary in the way of adjustment. A reference may be made to the Govan case, 1902, 4 F. 479, in which the Lord President pointed out that a County Council has no jus quæsitum to a valuable rate-producing area, so as to entitle them on that ground to object to the area being withdrawn from them.

It was argued, however, for the pursuers that the burdens in question were inherent in the transferred area. The answer contained in the defenders' plea 4 (a) and (c) appears to me to be conclusive upon this point. The loans in question were effected by the pursuers upon the security of the rates leviable by them within the area comprised for the time being within the county, or within the district, exclusive of any royal or parliamentary burgh situate therein, according to the boundaries of such burgh, for police purposes, and no real security affecting any part of the transferred area was constituted by any of the mortgages or bonds and assignations in security above referred to.

An examination of the statutes makes this clear. Under the Police Act of 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. cap. 72), sects. 28 and 29 shew that the police assessment is to be imposed upon all lands and heritages within a county. Sect. 78 defines the word "county" as being exclusive of a burgh which has a Police Act or an establishment of police of its own. Inverness is a royal burgh having a separate establishment of police of its own. The section which confers power on the Commissioners of Supply to borrow is sect. 57, and this confers power to charge the future police assessments with the amount of the loan. It is only necessary to notice in passing sects. 13 and 60 of the Local Government Act of 1889, in order to say that these do not affect the question here.

As regards the county general assessment, which, as above stated, is assigned in security by No. 8 of process (the bond for £5150), this is dealt with by sects. 26 and 27 of the Local Government Act 1889. Sect. 27 (1) and (3) shew that this rate is to be imposed upon all lands and heritages within the county. Sects. 44 and 105 show that the expression "county" is exclusive of any burgh wholly or partly situate herein. The County Council's borrowing powers are contained in sect. 67 of the Local Government Act of 1889, and the only security they can give is that of any rate leviable by the Council.

Dealing next with the road assessment, the management and maintenance of the roads in each county is vested, by sect. 11 of the Roads and Bridges Act of 1878, in the County Road Trustees, the transfer to the County Council of these duties being contained in sect. 16 of the Local Government Act of 1889. Sect. 52 provides for the assessment in counties; sect. 54 for the assessment in burghs. "County" means, except where otherwise expressly provided, the county exclusive of any burgh wholly or partly situate therein, as provided by sect. 3, and "burgh" includes, inter alia, royal burghs. In sect. 58, the section referred to in the loans in the present case, there is the same limitation of the assessment to the county; and sects. 74 and 75 shew that the county and burgh authorities have power to levy assessment within their respective boundaries.

The result of all this is to shew that it is incompetent for a burgh to levy assessments to pay any portion of a county debt, or for a county to levy any assessments within a burgh. Reference, in this connection, may be made to the case of MacArthur v. County Council of Argyll, 1898, 25 R. 829. Moreover, the creditors in these loans contracted to take as their security assessments leviable from a restrictible area.

It was said by the pursuers that if the debt attaches to the area transferred it was no concern of theirs to point out the fund out of which the debtor ought to make payment. In my opinion, the absence of any statutory authority either to levy assessment or to borrow money to pay any part of the loans in question goes far to shew that Parliament did not intend, in 1892, to saddle the burgh with this obligation. The section which provides for the general purposes assessment in the Burgh Police Act of 1892 is sect. 340, but that only empowers the Commissioners to levy assessments for the general purposes of the Act. The payment of a debt incurred by the county would not be one of these purposes. Sect. 374 gives the Commissioners power to borrow, but here, again, the same observation applies, because it is only for any of the purposes of the Act. Under the combined effect of sect. 96 of the Burgh Police Act of 1903, and sect. 50 of the Local Government Act of 1889, it would now be competent for the burgh to borrow any sum required to be paid for the purpose of any adjustment. The want of such statutory authority in the Act of 1892 appears to me to emphasise the strength of the defenders' position in the present case. The pursuers founded upon the case of Conn v. The Corporation of Renfrew, 1906, 8 F. 905, as an authority that the defenders might apply the funds belonging to the common good, which it is alleged they possess, to pay their share of the debt in question. The possession, however, by a burgh of such a fund is an entirely fortuitous circumstance, and does not seem to me to affect the present question.

It does not appear to be necessary to decide which side is supported by the stronger equitable considerations. The fact that Parliament, in the Act of 1903, made provision for adjustment, may be taken as a recognition that, in certain cases, equity requires this. Dealing, however, as I have to do in the present case, solely with the Act of 1892, I am unable to read into it any such provision as that for which the pursuers contend.

Upon the whole matter, I am of opinion that the pursuers have set forth no relevant case, and that the action should be dismissed, with expenses.

The defenders moved that they should be found entitled to expenses as between agent and client in virtue of the Public Authorities Protection Act 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. cap. 61), and cited Aird v. Tarbert School Board, 1907, S.C. 305; Greenwell v. Howell [1900], 1 Q.B. 535; Fielding v. Morley Corporation [1899], 1 Ch. 1, [1900], A.C. 133; Cree v. St Pancras Vestry [1899], 1 Q.B. 693; Pearson & Son Ltd. v. Dublin Corporation [1907], A.C. 351; Sharpington v. Fulham Guardians [1904], 2 Ch. 449; Holsworthy Urban Council v. Holsworthy Rural Council [1907], 2 Ch. 62. 370. The Assessor for the County of Lanark v. The Clyde Navigation Trustees.

I. VALUATION—PRINCIPLE—CONTRACTOR'S OR REVENUE — GLASGOW HARBOUR — CONTRACTOR'S PRINCIPLE HELD TO BE INAPPROPRIATE AS A METHOD OF VALUATION.

II. VALUATION—GLASGOW HARBOUR—METHOD OF VALUATION DETERMINED IN 1866—RES JUDICATA — CHANGE OF CIRCUMSTANCES—DREDGING — HELD THAT, IN THE ABSENCE OF PROOF OF A MATERIAL CHANGE OF CIRCUMSTANCES, THE METHOD LAID DOWN IN 1866 SHOULD BE ADHERED TO—CLYDE NAVIGATION TRUSTEES, 1866, 4 M. 1143, FOLLOWED.

Case.

An an adjourned meeting of the Lands Valuation Committee for the Lower Ward of the county of Lanark, held at Glasgow upon the 26th day of September 1907, the Clyde Navigation Trustees appealed against entries in the Valuation Roll for the county of Lanark of Prince's Dock, quays, sheds, etc.; Quays, etc., Plantation; Mavisbank Quay, etc.; Quays at Graving Docks and Shieldhall Wharves, at a rent of £75,991, and craved that the valuations of the subjects be restricted to £43,502.

The facts and the determination of the Valuation Committee were set forth in the case as follows:

The appellants put in copies of their printed statements of accounts for the years ending 30th June 1905, 30th June 1906, and 30th June 1907, and a statement of the total valuation prepared by the Assessor for the burgh of Glasgow, bringing out the above sum of £43,502 as applicable to the subjects under discussion.

The Trustees of the Clyde Navigation are a body of statutory trustees incorporated under the Clyde Navigation Consolidation Act 1858, as amended by subsequent Acts, and having the power and duty of carrying into effect the provisions of these Acts.

The limits of the harbour of Glasgow were defined in sect. 74 of the said Act of 1858, but that section has been repealed, and the limits of the harbour are now defined by sect. 43 of the Clyde Navigation Act 1904, which is in the following terms:

"43. Section 74 of the Act of 1858, section 32 of the Act of 1883, and section 12 of the Act of 1884, are hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof the following provisions shall have effect: the harbour of Glasgow shall for all purposes (including the rating purposes of the Trustees) mean and include the river Clyde between Albert Bridge (formerly Hutchesontown Bridge) and a line drawn across the river Clyde in line with the western termination of the Shieldhall Wharf, as authorised by and delineated on the plans deposited relative to the Act of 1884, and also the whole docks, quays, wharves, piers, yards, buildings, erections, and other works and conveniences belonging to the Trustees, constructed or which may hereafter be constructed or used in connection therewith, within the said limits for the purposes of their undertaking; and the byelaws, rules, and regulations of the Trustees are hereby extended, and shall apply to the harbour as in this section defined."

Section 75 of the Act of 1858, which defines the limits of the river Clyde, is as follows:

"75. The limits of the river Clyde shall include the whole channel or waterway of the said river forming the harbour, and as far down the said river as to a straight line drawn from the eastern end of Newark Castle on the south shore of the said river to the mouth of Cardross Burn on the north shore of the said river, and the whole works within the said limits for the improvement of the navigation of the river constructed or authorised to be constructed by or under charge of the Clyde Trustees or the Trustees appointed by this Act, and the whole lands acquired for the purposes of such works, or occupied by the Trustees in connection with the navigation of the said river."

Section 97 of the Act of 1858 is as follows:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, it shall be lawful for the Trustees to levy on and in respect of all vessels entering or using the river or harbour the rates specified in the schedule (G) to this Act annexed, and all such rates shall be paid by the owner, agent, master, consignee or other person in charge of such vessels."

Section 98 of the Act of 1858 is as follows:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, it shall be lawful for the Trustees to levy on and in respect of all goods shipped or unshipped in the river or harbour the rates specified in the first and second columns of part 1 of the schedule (H) to this Act annexed, and on all animals and carriages shipped or unshipped in the river or harbour, the rates specified in part 2 of the said schedule (H), and all such rates shall be paid by the owner of such goods, animals, and carriages."

Section 19 of the Clyde Navigation Act 1884 provides:

"That section 98 of the Act of 1858 and schedule (H) referred to in and annexed to that Act shall be read and have effect as if the same, subject to the provisions of this section contained, authorised the Trustees to levy the rate specified in such schedule on and in respect of all goods, animals, and carriages conveyed upon, or otherwise passing up or down the river or any part thereof, or into or out of the harbour (including timber floated)."

Section 99 of the Act of 1858 is in the following terms:

"For the more equitable payment of the rates hereinbefore granted leviable below the Stockwell Bridge, formerly called the Old Glasgow Bridge, that part of the river shall be divided into three stages, videlicet:—The first stage, comprehending that part of the river lying above the Old Ferry of Renfrew, being about 660 yards to the east of the present Ferry; the second stage, extending from the said Old Ferry of Renfrew to the mouth of Dalmuir Burn; and the third stage, extending from the mouth of the said Dalmuir Burn to the Castle of Newark; and all vessels and goods, animals and carriages whatsoever, passing in or upon the river or any part thereof within the limits aforesaid shall pay the said rates in manner and in the proportions following, and at such stations on the river as the Trustees shall appoint,—that is to say, in passing upon or going down the river on any part of the first stage as aforesaid, two-third parts of the aforesaid rates; on any part of the second stage as aforesaid, one-sixth part of the aforesaid rates; and on any part of the third stage as aforesaid, one-sixth part of the aforesaid rates, and shall pay the same proportion of the rates aforesaid on passing upon or coming up the river; provided that the Trustees shall be entitled to levy the whole amount of the said rates on all vessels, goods, animals and carriages passing or being conveyed along or into the said three stages or any parts thereof."

Section 46 (application of money) of the Clyde Navigation Act 1883 provides:— . . . "and all tolls, rates, and charges levied by the Trustees under the authority of this Act, and all other money in the nature of revenue received by the Trustees, shall be applied in or towards carrying into execution the purposes of the recited Acts and this Act, and the undertakings thereby authorised, to which revenue is properly applicable, and to no other purpose whatsoever."

A similar provision is contained in section 15 of the Clyde Navigation Act 1884, section 31 of the Clyde Navigation Act of 1899, section 40 of the Clyde Navigation Act of 1904, and section 22 of the Clyde Navigation Act of 1907.

Section 96 of the Clyde Navigation Act of 1858, after empowering the Trustees to sell surplus lands, proceeds as follows: . . . "Provided that nothing herein contained shall authorise the Trustees to sell or dispose of any land which now is or heretofore was within or part of the alveus or channel of the river or of the shores thereof below high-water mark, without the consent, in writing, of the commissioner or commissioners for the time being in charge of Her Majesty's Land Revenues in Scotland; and in the event of any such consent being given, the said commissioner or commissioners shall, from time to time, be a party or parties to the deed or conveyance or disposition for the purpose of granting to the purchaser the estate and interest of Her Majesty in the land sold or disposed of, and the purchase or consideration money arising from any such sale or disposition shall, upon or previously to the execution of any such deed, be from time to time paid into the Royal Bank of Scotland to the account of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues."

In a series of actions extending from 1857 till 1866, the question as to the liability of the Clyde Trustees to pay poor rates in respect of the lands and heritages belonging to and occupied by them under their Acts of Parliament was under the consideration of the Court. These actions were as follows:—

Adamson v. Clyde Navigation Trs., 27th January 1860, 22 D. 606.

Adamson v. Clyde Navigation Trs., 26th June 1863, 1 M. 974.

Clyde Navigation Trs. v. Adamson, 22nd June 1865, 3 M. H.L. 100.

Clyde Navigation Trs. (valuation case), 25th July 1866, 4 M. 1143.

Under these cases the Clyde Trustees are liable to be assessed in respect of the quays, wharves, buildings, and other heritable subjects belonging to and occupied by them; they are not liable to be assesssed as proprietors or occupants of the river Clyde in respect of dues payable for the navigation or use of the said river, and they are not owners or occupiers of the river Clyde, or of any other lands and heritages, except specific wharfage ground, quays, wharves, sheds, cranes, ferry, and house property.

The decision of the Court of Session was appealed to the House of Lords by the Clyde Trustees so far as it determined their liability to be assessed, but the pursuer, Adamson, representing the City of Glasgow Parochial Board, did not appeal against the other findings of the Court, and the interlocutors, so far as appealed, were affirmed.

In the valuation case Clyde Navigation Trs., 25th July 1866 (4 Macph. 1143), the Valuation Judges, on an appeal from the local commissioners, applied the decision of the Court of Session. They adopted, what they considered, in reference to the whole circumstances of the case, an equitable principle of adjustment, viz.—to deduct from the proportion of the dues applicable to the first (or upper) stage (being that containing the wharves, etc.) one-third thereof, as being fairly assignable to that portion of the subjects which is not assessable. They thus wholly excluded the two-sixths of the dues applicable under the Act of 1858 to the use of the waterway of the two lower stages, extending from Renfrew Old Ferry to Port-Glasgow, and assigned two-thirds of the remaining two-thirds, being the dues for the first (or upper) stage to the use of the quays and wharves, which were lands and heritages owned and occupied by the Trustees. This decision has been given effect to and acted upon by the various assessors and local authorities since 1866.

The valuation put forward by the Clyde Trustees is the proportion of the total valuation on that basis, as ascertained for convenience and with the acquiescence of other assessors by the assessor for the city of Glasgow to be applicable on an apportionment according to the length of quayage to the quays and wharves within the county of Lanark and beyond the city of Glasgow.

There are eleven separate subjects belonging to the Trustees in the county of Lanark, against the valuation of which by the assessor the Trustees appealed. The valuations of six of these subjects, consisting of graving docks, timber yards, works, and a new quay, which were not affected by the cumulo valuation of the Trustees' quays and wharves, were adjusted between the assessor and the Trustees at £20,320, and the valuations so adjusted have been given effect to by the County Valuation Committee, and are not included in this case.

The apportionment of the valuation according to length of quayage as followed since 1866 is also approximately in accordance with the revenue derived from the parts of the harbour in separate jurisdictions.

There has, the Clyde Trustees contended, been no alteration in the circumstances since the Court of Session found that the Clyde Trustees were not owners or occupiers of the waterway of the river Clyde within their jurisdiction, and that the dues payable for the use of that waterway by ships and goods passing upon it could not be taken into account in valuing the quays, wharves, etc. It is therefore submitted by the Clyde Trustees that the proper method to value the Trustees' quays and wharves is to take the revenue of the trust remaining after excluding the proportion of the dues applicable to the two lower stages, and at least one-third of the dues applicable to the upper stage, and to make the appropriate deductions from the revenue as so ascertained in accordance with the Lands Valuation Acts as interpreted by the valuation judges in a series of decisions. It was further submitted that there is no justification for the assessor adopting any new or different method of valuation. It was explained that the assessors had from time to time taken an average of the revenue of three years, but that the Trustees had no responsibility therefor, and it did not affect the amount of the valuation appealed against.

The assessor stated that the valuation of the artificial works other than certain subjects, such as graving docks and timber yards in the harbour of Glasgow, has for a number of years been prepared by the assessor for the burgh of Glasgow in cumulo, and allocated among the various areas solely with reference to the length of quayage in each area; that the practice has been to fix the valuation on the revenue and expenditure for three years to 30th June in the year of valuation; that this course appeared to be objectionable, as it is plainly impossible for the hypothetical tenant to take into consideration the revenue of the year ending 30th June after Whitsunday of his hypothetical entry, and also because in practice the valuation is not completed at a date which enabled him or any other person interested to properly examine it; that the allocation by quayage only also appeared to him to be unsound, as it does not take into account either the large water area in the docks or the value of the large two-storied sheds, power station, and other costly works at the Princes Dock; that in the Ayr case, 25th May 1894, 21 R. 807, that harbour was held to be unum quid, but apportionment by exact length of quayage was not adopted, some weight being given to the greater extent of artificial works in Newton parish, but he stated that the harbour of Glasgow had never been treated as unum quid, the harbour proper having been excluded from valuation altogether. He also stated that in the case of large systems of docks in England, the courts there have held that the docks in different parishes should be treated separately (Mersey Docks v. Liverpool, 1872, L.R. 7 Q.B. 643; Hull Dock Co. v. Sculcoates Union, L.R. [1895], A.C. 136).

The assessor further stated that the valuations of the subjects in question have hitherto been based to a considerable extent on the decision in the Clyde Navigation case in the Valuation Appeal Court in 1866, 4 M. 1143, but one-half of the dredging in the whole 18½ miles of river has been deducted, although this was claimed but not allowed by the judges in that case; that in the Mavisbank valuation case decided in 1866, 4 M. 1143, the decision in Adamson v. Clyde Trs. (Court of Session, 26th June 1863), 1 M. 975, 4 Macq. 931, was founded on, and that this decision was stated to have been confirmed on appeal by the House of Lords, but that it appeared from the judgment in the case of Gardner v. Leith Harbour Co., 1866, 2 M. 1234, that the House of Lords had only before them the general question of the liability to rating of the Clyde Trustees' undertaking, and that on the question of the treatment of the dues they did not agree with the decision in Adamson's case, 4 M. (H.L.) 14; Irvine Harbour Trs., 1893, 30 S.L.R. 660.

The assessor maintained that if the decision stands the true reading of the judgment of the Court of Session in Adamson v. The Clyde Trustees, 1 M. 986, is that resort should be had to the contractor's principle, since it is impossible for the assessor to shew what parts of the dues, rates, etc. are payable in return for the use of and accommodation afforded by the quays; that it appeared also from the interlocutor deciding the valuation case of 1866 that the judges called for particulars of the expenditure on the quays presumably with the view of applying the contractor's principle of valuation, but, probably from insufficiency of information, finally had recourse to taking a proportion of the dues as the basis of valuation.

The assessor contended that although this might have been an equitable solution of the problem in 1866, it is not necessarily so at the present time, when very large extensions of the quayage have been made, and the water area in docks, which did not exist in 1866, has to be dealt with. He stated that under that method the amount deducted as applicable to the lower 13 miles of river had grown from £33,011 to £134,838, and the amount for the waterway in the upper stage from £22,007 to £89,892, a total of £224,730, the increase of nearly £170,000 being out of all proportion to the expenditure on the waterway in the interval. He also objected to the deduction in respect of the 2nd and 3rd stages of the river of one-third of the dues levied, and of a further proportionate deduction for the waterway in the first stage.

The assessor stated that he had made a survey and valuation of the subjects situated in the county, and estimated the cost of the Prince's Dock and accessories, including the solum, at . . . £1,125,230

Mavisbank Quay at . . . 70,240
Plantation Quays, ... 205,240
Graving Dock Quay, . . . 24,700
Shieldhall Wharves, . . . 94,520
on which sums his valuations were based at 5 per cent. The assessor considered that it was incumbent on him to show that the subjects produced a revenue sufficient to pay these rents, and stated that he had prepared from the accounts of the trustees for the year ending 30th June 1906 a statement, which, after disallowing certain expenditure which would fall on the trustees as proprietors of the heritable subjects, brought out a balance of £367,090, and from the account of capital expenditure to the same date a statement showing that 5 per cent. on the capital expenditure of the trustees in respect of the heritable properties producing this revenue did not nearly exhaust that balance.

The assessor referred to Lord Wellwood's remarks in the Irvine case in 1893, and stated that if, in view of the reference to the decision in Adamson v. The Clyde Trustees in Gardner v. Leith Dock Commissioners, that decision is not to be taken as authoritative, and therefore the subjects are to be dealt with as unum quid, the Clyde Navigation Trustees' undertaking is one which extends into more than one parish, and it would therefore be competent for them to apply, under section 23 of the Valuation Act, 1854, for a valuation of the undertaking by the assessor of railways and canals; that they had not exercised their power of making this application, and that in these circumstances it is proper for the local assessor to apply the rules laid down in the Valuation Act for valuing such subjects. He further stated that the statement prepared by him already referred to brings out a balance available for the valuation of the whole undertaking, excluding the graving docks, timber yards and let subjects, which are separately entered in the valuation rolls of the several parishes, of £367,090; that he had also inquired into the cost of the several subjects in the parish of Govan (outwith the burgh of Glasgow), and estimated the cost, including the solum, at the sums previously stated, on which amounts the valuations are calculated at 5 per cent. in accordance with sections 21 and 22 of the Valuation Act, 1854, and that from the printed statement of capital expenditure by the trustees, he had also prepared a statement of the value of the various works over which the valuation falls to be spread, bringing out a value of £3,931,751, 5 per cent. on which is £196,587, leaving a balance of £170,503 from the rental £367,090 arrived at in his previous statement.

The appellants led evidence as to the methods of valuation adopted by the assessor of railways and canals, and as to the cost of dredging in the harbour, but did not lead evidence as to the assessor's estimates of the capital cost of the several subjects, as the appellants disputed entirely the contractor's principle on which the assessor had proceeded.

The committee having considered the evidence and the statements for the parties, found:—

1. That while from their personal knowledge of the subjects they considered that their cost was moderately estimated at the sums stated by the assessor, there was no authority for adoption of the "contractor's" principle by the assessor in valuing these subjects.

2. That while they were of opinion, looking to the altered circumstances since 1866, that there was no equitable reason why from the total dues paid by ships using the harbour of Glasgow the proportion of the dues, which would have been paid had they not entered into the upper stage of the river, should be wholly excluded in computing the revenue of the undertaking, the assessor was not, standing the decisions upon which the appellants rely, entitled to adopt the rules laid down in sections 21 and 22 of the Valuation Act, 1854, but was bound to follow the method adopted by the judges in the Mavisbank valuation case, 1866.

3. That the valuation and allocation prepared by the assessor for the burgh of Glasgow were in general conformity with the method adopted in that case.

The Committee accordingly sustained the appeals and restricted the valuations as craved. It was agreed, at the request of both parties, that the cumulo valuation of £43,502 should be divided as follows, and the committee found accordingly, viz:—

Princes Dock, quays, sheds, &c. .	£31,336
Quays, &c, plantation, . .	7521
Mavisbank quay, &c. . . .	2591
Quays at graving docks, . .	1015
Shieldhall Wharves, . . .	1039
	£43,502

The Assessor obtained a case for the opinion of the Valuation Judges.

The contentions of the parties were set out inter alia as follows:—

1. (a) The assessor contends that the Clyde Navigation undertaking has never been treated as unum quid, the lower stages of the river and the waterway in the upper stage having always been excluded from valuation by the deduction from the dues received from vessels using the harbour of Glasgow of the proportion (one-third) fixed by the Clyde Acts, for the entirely different purpose of settling the proportion of the dues payable by vessels which use only the lower stages of the river, and by the further deduction of two-ninths of the said dues in respect of the waterway in the upper stage, being the proportion which the judges stated in the interlocutor in the Clyde Navigation valuation case in 1866 (4 M. 1143) they were obliged to adopt.

1. (b) That it is competent for the assessor to make his valuations of these subjects on the contractor's principle, as he is unable to show what sums are payable in name of rates or dues in respect of these subjects; that this method of valuation is clearly contemplated by the judgment delivered by the Lord Justice-Clerk in Adamson v. Clyde Navigation Trs., 1863, 1 M. 989, and by the Clyde valuation case, 1866; and that the English decisions that where the harbour dues do not inhere in the subjects under valuation, they are not to be taken into account in valuing these subjects, are in support of the adoption of the contractor's principle (New Shoreham Harbour Commissioners (1870), 5 Q.B. 489; Blyth Harbour Commissioners, L.R. (1894), 2 Q.B. 675).

Lands Valuation Appeal Court.

The Assessor for the County of Lanark v. The Clyde Navigation Trustees.

2. The assessor maintains that although, as stated in the interlocutor in the Clyde Navigation case in 1866, being unable to come to a satisfactory conclusion from the materials as to the expenditure on the quays, etc., supplied to them, the judges adopted the deduction of certain proportions of the dues, amounting in 1866 to £55,018, it does not follow that a proper result is produced by adopting a similar apportionment at the present date, involving the deduction of no less than £224,730 for the same length of river, and that the increase in the dues should to a larger extent be considered as the result of the great expenditure since 1866 in the construction of docks and other works in the harbour itself.

3. The assessor contends that if the decision in Adamson v. Clyde Trs., 2 M. 1234, is held to be overruled by the case of Miles v. Leith Dock Commissioners, 4 M. (H.L.), 14, referred to by Lord Wellwood in the Irvine valuation case, and the whole undertaking is to be dealt with as unum quid, this should be done under the rules laid down in sections 21 and 22 of the Valuation Act, 1854, and that 5 per cent. on the cost of the docks, wharves, etc., should be allocated to the several parishes, the balance of the net revenue being distributed over the length of the navigation.

5. The assessor maintains that in any case the deduction of one-half of the whole dredging (other than the dredging for deepening) in the navigation, including 18½ miles of river, is greatly in excess of the fair proportion which might be held as falling on a tenant for cleansing purposes, as distinguished from the owner's duty of maintaining the subjects in a state to command the rent (Leith Dock Commissioners v. Assessor for Leith, 1907, S.C. 751).

With reference to the contentions of the assessor, the trustees submit:—

1. (a) The undertaking of the Clyde Trustees, so far as consisting of lands and heritages forming continuous quays and wharves of which they are owners or tenants, has been treated since the decision of 1866 as a unum quid. It is apparent that the object of the assessor is to have set aside the judgment of the Court of Session finding that the River Clyde is not the property of the Clyde Trustees, and that the statutory dues payable in respect of its use cannot be taken into account in ascertaining the valuation of the quays, wharves, etc.

(b) No difficulty has arisen during the last forty years in ascertaining the proper valuation of the lands and heritages belonging to the Clyde Trustees on the general principles adopted by the valuation judges in 1866. Since that date the revenue principle followed in that case has been confirmed and extended in an unbroken series of decisions. The Valuation Judges did not contemplate valuing these subjects on the contractor's principle.

(c) The effect of the English decisions referred to would be to exclude the whole of the dues from vessels and goods in ascertaining the valuation of the quays and wharves. The assessor is in error in suggesting that these cases are in any way authorities in favour of the adoption of the contractor's principle of valuation. In these cases the valuation has been made solely with reference to the revenue derived from the actual subjects of valuation.

2. The assessor has misunderstood the effect of the decision of the valuation judges in 1866. What the Court then adopted was an equitable principle of adjustment following that adopted by the legislature. The proportion of valuation to gross revenue is greater to-day than it was in 1866, when the valuation judges fixed the details of the system on which the valuation should be ascertained. . . .

3. The decision of the Court of Session in Adamson v. Clyde Trs., 1863, is not in conflict with the decision in the case of Gardner v. Leith Dock Commissioners. The facts in the Irvine harbour case were entirely different from those affecting the Clyde, and the obiter dicta in that case are inapplicable. Sections 21 and 22 of the Valuation Act 1854 refer to the valuation of railways, and the taking of a percentage on the cost of stations, wharves, etc., belonging to the railway is merely for the purpose of apportioning, among various parishes, a total valuation ascertained wholly on the revenue principle. There is no authority for applying a percentage to wharves, docks, etc., such as those of the Clyde Trustees. Few, if any, docks in Scotland have such earnings as would give a valuation of anything like 5 per cent. upon their cost.

5. In the statement of the valuation put forward by the trustees (state A), a deduction is made under dredging in proportion to the revenue included in the valuation. State A proceeds on the principle that tenants' profits are inadmissible, in which case, according to the decisions of the Court, no distinction falls to be made between landlords' and tenants' expenditure (except rates and taxes), and accordingly the cost of dredging proportionate to the revenue applicable to the subjects of assessment is claimed.

On the assumption that the trustees are to be allowed tenants' profits (state B) the amount taken for dredging is less than the amount which has been actually expended in maintaining the water at the river-side berths and docks at the depth previously attained by expenditure out of capital. If the subjects had been let to a tenant under the ordinary obligation to maintain them in the state in which they were handed over to him, he would have had to incur the expenditure so deducted.

It is explained that while the valuation judges did not allow a deduction for dredging, they gave a deduction of 20 per cent. for tenants' profits, and that the assessors at some time subsequent to that date agreed to allow a deduction for dredging, but to disallow the tenants' profits formerly given.

At the hearing counsel cited, in addition to the cases above mentioned, Burghead Harbour Co. v. George, 1906, 8 F. 982, per Lord Kinnear at 987, as to the meaning of the case of Adamson in 1 M., and St Cuthbert's Co-operative Association v. Assessor for Edinburgh, 1896, 23 R. 681; Edinburgh Parish Council v. Assessor for Edinburgh, 1906, 8 F. 521, as to the application of the contractor's principle.

The Valuation Judges were of opinion that the determination of the Valuation Committee was right.

Lord Low.—The main question in this case appears to me to be whether the judgment in Adamson v. Clyde Navigation Trs., 1 M. 974, was overruled by the House of Lords in Leith Dock Commissioners v. Miles, 4 M. (H.L.) 14, in so far as it was held in the former case that the trustees were not assessable as proprietors of the port and harbour of Glasgow as something separate and distinct from the wharfs, quays, and other structures of which physically the harbour consisted.

I am of opinion that that question must be answered in the negative. The report of the Leith Docks case in the House of Lords does suggest that the noble and learned Lords were under the impression that the Second Division had held in Adamson's case that a harbour was not an assessable subject. That, however, was a misapprehension. What was decided was that upon a sound construction of the Clyde statutes there was not (I quote from the opinion of Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis) "any jus incorporale vested in the defenders" (the Clyde Navigation Trustees) "by which they can be said to be, in the common law sense, the proprietors of the right of harbour. . . . I think that the subjects in respect of which the defenders are liable to be assessed as constituting the port or harbour of Glasgow are the subjects embraced in the minute" (that is, the wharfs, quays, and other structures), "and that there is no other subject in respect of which they can be assessed under the name of the port and harbour of Glasgow."

It seems to me that the Lord Justice-Clerk there plainly recognises that a harbour is an assessable subject, but that his view was that, apart from the quays and other works, the trustees were not owners of any harbour. Therefore, in my opinion the judgment in Adamson was in no way inconsistent with that of the House of Lords in the Leith Docks case, or in the Mersey Docks case, 3 M. (H.L.) 102, which was there followed.

The reason why the appellants attempted to shew that the judgment in Adamson had been overruled by the subsequent decisions in the House of Lords was that it was held in Adamson that the rates and dues, which the Clyde trustees were by these statutes authorised to levy, could not be taken into account in estimating the yearly value of the subjects in respect of which they were assessable, in so far as these rates and dues were paid for the navigation of the river, including that part of it which the statutes described as being within the limits of the harbour of Glasgow. The appellants' argument accordingly was that, Adamson having been overruled by the Mersey Docks case and the Leith Docks case, and it having been held in the latter cases that a harbour was an assessable subject, the rates and dues paid for the navigation of that part of the Clyde within the statutory limits of the Glasgow harbour should be brought into computation.

It seems to me to be a complete answer to that argument that the judgment in Adamson has never been overruled; that it was a judgment pronounced by the Inner House in an action of declarator brought for the very purpose of determining the rights and obligations of the parties in regard to assessment for poor rates; and that it has been acted on, so far as I know, without challenge for more than forty years.

The case of Adamson was decided in 1863, and in 1866 the question of valuation came before this Court. The learned judges who then constituted the Court, in fixing the yearly value of the undertaking, gave effect to the decree of declarator which had been pronounced, and they did so by deducting from the proportion of the dues applicable to the first of the three stages into which the Clyde is divided by the statutes (that being the stage with which alone we are concerned in this appeal) one-third thereof as being fairly assignable to that portion of the subjects which the Second Division had held not to be assessable. The rule so laid down has been followed until the present time as the basis upon which the subjects fall to be valued, but I do not say that the apportionment of the dues made in 1866 must be regarded as res judicata, and cannot be revised. If it could be shewn that, owing to a material change of circumstances, the apportionment was no longer fair and reasonable, I think that it would be quite competent for this Court to reconsider it. But no such question was submitted for our determination, although the appellants' counsel did refer to the great change which had taken place during the last forty years, both as regards the extent of the works and the amount of the dues.

I have already said that the main contention of the appellant was that the whole dues should be taken into account in estimating the yearly value, and I have expressed the opinion which I have formed upon that point. The appellant, however, contended alternatively that instead of the principle of valuation which has hitherto been followed, what has come to be known as the contractor's principle should be adopted—that is to say, that the yearly value should be arrived at by taking a percentage upon the structural cost of the quays and other works. That appears to me to be a method of valuation which is not appropriate to the kind of subject in question. Indeed the only reason which can be suggested, so far as I can see, for adopting the contractor's principle is that it would get rid of the limitation placed by the judgment in Adamson upon the revenue which may be taken into account, and would make it possible to value the subjects at a much higher amount than under the method which has all along been followed, and which I take to be the approved method of valuing such subjects. I have therefore no hesitation in rejecting the argument that the contractor's method of valuation should be adopted.

A question was also raised in regard to the cost of dredging, but upon that I need only say that we were furnished with no materials to enable us to form an opinion the one way or the other.

Upon the whole matter, therefore, I am of opinion that we must hold that the determination of the Valuation Committee was right.

Lands Valuation Appeal Court.

The Assessor for the County of Lanark v. The Clyde Navigation Trustees.

Lord Dundas.

Lord Dundas.—In the year 1866 our predecessors in this Court (Lord Kinloch and Lord Ormidale) laid down a rule for the valuation of the Undertaking of the Clyde Navigation Trustees (4 M. 1143), which has ever since been acted upon by the various assessors and local authorities. It is obvious that strong grounds would be required to warrant us in now upsetting this uniform practice of about forty years, following upon the decision to which I have referred. But the appellant's counsel undertook to establish the existence of such grounds. They maintained that the Valuation Court in 1866 merely followed a judgment of the Second Division, which the House of Lords subsequently declared to be erroneous. It is true that the decision of the Valuation Judges was really executory of the interlocutor of the Second Division in the declarator Adamson v. Clyde Navigation Trustees, 1863, 1 M. 974. But I am satisfied that, as your Lordship has pointed out, the appellant's argument proceeds upon a misapprehension; and that nothing was said or done in the Leith case (4 M. (H.L.) 14, reported also L.R. 1. Sc. and Div. App. 17) to warrant the assertion that the House of Lords expressed or entertained any opinion adverse to what was really decided by the Second Division in 1863, as explained in the clear opinion of Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis. It may be worth while to point out that the same Lord Ordinary (Jerviswoode) decided in the Outer House the case of Adamson (1 M. 974) and the Leith case (2 M. 1234); and that, looking to the respective dates of decision, it would appear that the Valuation Judges on 25th July 1866 (4 M. 1143) must have had in contemplation the judgment of the First Division in the Leith case (17th June 1864, 2 M. 1234), if not also that of the House of Lords in the same case (12th March 1866, 4 M. (H.L.) 14). Having said this much, I need say no more, except that I have had an opportunity of reading the opinion which your Lordship has just delivered, and entirely concur with all that you have said in it in regard to the various points upon which we heard argument.—4th March 1908.

(Appeal against an Interlocutor of the First Division (Lords M'Laren, Kinnear and Pearson) affirming an interlocutor of the Sheriff of Stirling.)

After the decision in the First Division the claim by Robert Cameron, the tenant, was settled. The appellants, his wife and children, appealed against the judgment of the Division, which held that they had no title to sue.

The House dismissed the appeal.

The Lord Chancellor.—I have had the advantage of reading the opinion about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend Lord Robertson. I agree with it, and have nothing to add.

Lord Macnaghten.—I have had the same advantage, and I also concur and have nothing to add.

Lord Robertson.—The facts giving rise to the important question now before the House are of the simplest. The respondents let to one Robert Cameron, the husband and father of the appellants, a dwelling-house at Crieff. The house was allowed to get out of repair in the matter of drains; disease was generated owing to this neglect, and Cameron and his family, the appellants, suffered accordingly. Cameron's own claim for damages was sued by him in this action, but he has been settled with and is out of the case. The question is whether the appellants, who are not parties to the contract of lease, have a good ground of action against the landlord.

It seems to me perfectly clear that they have not, and I rest my opinion not alone on the authority of Cavalier v. Pope, but on principle common to the laws of Scotland and of England which Cavalier applied.

These respondents were perfectly entitled to let this house or not to let it, and in either case they were entitled to allow the house to fall to pieces and the drains with it so long as they did not injure any neighbour (by which I of course mean any neighbour in vicinage whether the title of that neighbour was of property or of passage), or violate any existing law of nuisance, the only restraint on their action being obligations of contract with their tenant. Now it happens that in the present instance they were under such obligation to their tenant, by virtue of a condition which the Scotch law implies in leases of urban houses, that the landlord shall not only give the tenant a habitable house but maintain it in that state. It ought to be, but apparently is not, superfluous to say that if the law implies this condition it is because this is the customary arrangement in Scotch towns, and therefore when nothing is said to the contrary, parties are taken to have agreed to it. That an obligation to maintain a house habitable is not an essential term or obligation of the tenure of real property in Scotland but a matter of agreement is indeed most strikingly proved by the fact that in the case of farmhouses the contrary is the presumption of liability; for there it is the tenant and not the landlord on whom this duty of maintenance falls. It thus appears that the landlord's liability is conventional and contractual, and not the less so where it is implied by law and not written in the contract.

The argument for the appellants has indeed rested on invoking principles of the law of neighbours which have nothing to do with the rights of inhabitants of the house. Those principles are embodied in a distinct chapter of Scotch law, and are concerned with what may be called the external or foreign relations of the owner of a house. There he is liable, because the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas necessarily imposes on the proprietor the duty of exercising that measure of care which will avoid injury accruing to his neighbour from his house. He must not allow his house to get into such disrepair that it falls down on his neighbour's house or injures the passer-by in the street. In all those cases the person injured and claiming damages stands on his own rights, and his relation to the offending or negligent proprietor is not constituted or measured by any voluntary contract.

These principles have no application at all to persons who are within the house, for they have and can have no right to be there except by the licence of the owner, given by the owner on certain terms to the person with whom he chooses to contract. Nor can it be omitted from notice that if the appellants' contention were sound the liability of the landlord may be indefinitely increased or diminished according to the domestic or social relations or tastes of the tenant, over which the landlord has no control.

I have examined all the cases prior to Cavalier which were cited at the Bar, and with one apparent but not real exception, and one real exception, there is none which conflicts with that decision. All fall within the category of external relations which I have discussed.

The apparent exception is the case of Shields v. Dalziel, 24 R. 849, in the First Division. There it is quite true that the claim which the Court allowed was that of the wife of the tenant and not of the tenant. I must, however, point out that neither in the written pleadings nor in the oral argument did the landlord question or object to the title or instance of the wife, the defence being rested on totally different grounds. The pleadings were written and the argument was conducted by very able counsel, and presumably they deliberately abstained from stating this plea. Suffice it to say that the present question was not before the Court, and the decision in Shields v. Dalziel is not a judgment adverse to the doctrine of Cavalier v. Pope.

The other case which I have called an exception is Hall v. Hubner, 24 R. 875, decided by the Second Division. There the landlord argued that the pursuer being the tenant's wife was . . . . a stranger to the landlord, and must seek her remedy, not against him but the tenant. The learned judges in their reported opinions take no notice of this argument, but their judgment allowing issues to be lodged amounted to its rejection. This decision I therefore think cannot be supported, but this is the only and the slender support of the appellants' case to be found in the Scotch cases prior to Cavalier v. Pope.

I am of opinion that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), sects. 3 (1) and 15—Contracting Out — Scheme — Scheme Under 1897 Act in Force at Commencement of 1906 Act—Workman Entering Employment Subsequent to Commencement of 1906 Act, and Agreeing to Accept Compensation

2ND DIV.

Wallace v. R. and W. Hawthorne Leslie & Co.

PROVIDED BY SCHEME IN LIEU OF COMPENSATION PROVIDED BY ACT — ACCIDENT TAKING PLACE PRIOR TO SCHEME BEING RE-CERTIFIED AS A SCHEME UNDER 1906 ACT—SCHEME SUBSEQUENTLY RE-CERTIFIED — HELD WORKMAN NOT BOUND BY AGREEMENT TO ACCEPT COMPENSATION PROVIDED BY SCHEME, BUT ENTITLED TO CLAIM COMPENSATION UNDER 1906 ACT.

Stated Case under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906.

This was an appeal by way of stated case from the judgment of the Sheriff-Substitute (Neish) at Greenock, in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906.

The case stated:

On 15th August 1907 the appellant was employed by the respondents on board H.M.S. "Agamemnon," which was then lying at the Tail-of-the-Bank opposite Greenock, for the purpose of undergoing official trials.

On said date the appellant was injured on board said ship by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment.

The appellant entered the respondents' employment on 9th August 1907, and agreed to accept the scale of compensation provided by the St Peter's Works, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Accident Compensation Fund Scheme, which is marked A, is produced herewith, and forms part of this case.

The said scheme was certified as Scheme No. 7 by the Registrar of Friendly Societies on 10th December 1903, and the certificate did not expire till 31st December 1908.

On 18th October 1907 the said Scheme No. 7 was re-certified as Scheme No. 107 by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, in accordance with the provisions of sect. 15 of the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906.

The said Scheme No. 107, marked B, is produced herewith, and forms part of this case. [Said scheme marked B was certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, in terms of sect. 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906, on 18th October 1907.]

I held (1) that the appellant's claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 was excluded by his having agreed to accept the scale of compensation provided by the Scheme No. 7, marked A; and (2) that the appellant was not entitled to the increased compensation provided by the Scheme No. 107, marked B.

The following Question of Law was, inter alia, stated:

(1) Is the appellant entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906?

The Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58) provides:

Sect. 3. (1) If the Registrar of Friendly Societies, after taking steps to ascertain the views of the employer and workmen, certifies that any scheme of compensation, benefit, or insurance for the workmen of an employer in any employment, whether or not such scheme includes other employers and their workmen, provides scales of compensation not less favourable to the workmen and their dependants than the corresponding scales contained in this Act, and that where the scheme provides for contributions by the workmen the scheme confers benefits at least equivalent to those contributions, in addition to the benefits to which the workmen would have been entitled under this Act, and that a majority (to be ascertained by ballot) of the workmen to whom the scheme is applicable are in favour of such scheme, the employer may, whilst the certificate is in force, contract with any of his workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme; but, save as aforesaid, this Act shall apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act.

Sect. 15. (1) Any contract (other than a contract substituting the provisions of a scheme certified under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897 for the provisions of that Act) whereby a workman relinquishes any right to compensation from the employer for personal injury arising out of and in the course of his employment, shall not, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to continue after the time at which the workman's contract of service would determine if notice of the determination thereof were given at the commencement of this Act.

(2) Every scheme under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897 in force at the commencement of this Act shall, if re-certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, have effect as if it were a scheme under this Act.

(3) The Registrar shall re-certify any such scheme if it is proved to his satisfaction that the scheme conforms, or has been so modified as to conform, with the provisions of this Act as to schemes.

(4) If any such scheme has not been so re-certified before the expiration of six months from the commencement of this Act, the certificate thereof shall be revoked.

Sect. 16. (1) This Act shall come into operation on the first day of July 1907. . . .

Argued for the Appellant: The accident took place subsequent to the date when the Act of 1906 came into operation. Scheme A, therefore, being a scheme under the Act of 1897, did not apply. But further, Scheme A was not a subsisting scheme at the date of the accident. A scheme under the 1897 Act fell on the passing of the 1906 Act unless it was expressly saved (Workmen's Compensation Act 1906, sect. 3), and it was saved only if it were re-certified (sect. 15 (2)). In the present case Scheme A had not been re-certified at the date of the accident. If there were any scheme in existence it was Scheme B. But the sound view was that there was no scheme in existence, and that the appellant was entitled to compensation under the Act.

Argued for the Respondents: If the appellant's argument were sound, it followed that, on the 1906 Act coming into operation, there would be a period of six months during which it might be impossible for an employer and his workman to contract out of the Act. That was not to be presumed, and was not the sound construction of sect. 3. That section provided that unless there was in existence a scheme under the Act of 1906 the Act should apply, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary. That brought in the whole provisions of the Act, including sect. 15. Under that section a scheme under the Act of 1897 remained in force until it was re-certified under the Act of 1906, or until the expiry of six months from the date when the Act came into operation. Scheme A was therefore in existence at the date of the accident, and the appellant's claim was for compensation under that scheme, and not for compensation under the Act. Scheme B was out of the case; it did not come into operation until after the date of the accident.

The Court answered the first question of law in the affirmative.

Lord Low.—The appellant entered the employment of the respondents on 9th August 1907, and he agreed to accept the scale of compensation provided by a scheme which had been certified under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897, by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, as Scheme No. 7, on 10th December 1903. The certificate bore that the scheme was to expire on 31st December 1908, and accordingly it had not expired when the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 came into operation on 1st July 1907. On 18th October 1907 Scheme No. 7 was, with certain modifications, re-certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies in accordance with the provisions of sect. 15 (3) of the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 as Scheme No. 107.

The appellant was injured on 15th August 1907 by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and the question is whether he is entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 or only under Scheme No. 7?

The answer to that question depends upon the construction of sects. 3 and 15 of the Act of 1906.

By sect. 3 it is provided that "If the Registrar of Friendly Societies, after taking steps to ascertain the views of the employer and workmen, certifies that any scheme of compensation" satisfies certain requirements, "the employer may, whilst the certificate is in force, contract with any of his workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme, but, save as aforesaid, this Act shall apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act."

Now the initial words of that section providing for certification of the scheme by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, plainly refer to what may be done after the commencement of the Act, and accordingly, under the final clause in the section, a workman cannot be deprived, after the commencement of the Act, of his right to compensation under the Act by entering into a contract to the contrary, unless it be a contract to substitute for the provisions of the Act the provisions of a scheme of compensation certified by the Registrar after the commencement of the Act.

Now the scheme of compensation which the appellant agreed to accept was not a scheme which had, at the time when the agreement was made, been certified by the Registrar after the commencement of the Act; and accordingly, if the question raised depended only upon the 3rd section, it is clear that the appellant would not be barred by the agreement from claiming compensation under the Act.

The 15th section, however, which deals with contracts and schemes existing at the commencement of the Act, requires to be considered.

Sub-sect. (1) provides that any contract whereby a workman relinquishes any right to compensation existing at the commencement of the Act, "other than a contract substituting the provisions of a scheme certified under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897, for the provisions of that Act," shall not, for the purposes of the Act (of 1906), be deemed to continue after the time at which the workman's contract of service would determine if notice were given at the commencement of this Act.

Then by sub-sect. (4) it is provided that any scheme under the Act of 1897 in force at the commencement of the Act of 1906 which has not been re-certified before the expiration of six months from the commencement of that Act, shall be revoked. Accordingly, if a workman had before 1st July 1907, the date of the commencement of the Act of 1906, agreed to accept the provisions of a scheme certified under the Act of 1897, and if this scheme was still in force at the commencement of the new Act, it would regulate the right of the workman to compensation for a period of six months after the commencement of the Act.

That, of course, does not precisely meet the present case, because the appellant agreed to accept the provisions of a scheme (namely, Scheme No. 7) certified under the Act of 1897 after the commencement of the Act of 1906, but it to some extent aids the respondents' contention that the appellant is bound to accept compensation under that scheme.

The respondents' argument was that sub-sects. (1) and (4) of sect. 15 when read together shewed that a scheme certified under the Act of 1897, the period of which had not expired at the commencement of the Act of 1906, continued, at all events for the period of six months, to be an operative scheme under the latter Act, and that such a scheme continued to regulate the rights of a workman who had agreed to it before the commencement of the new Act. That being so, there was, it was contended, no reason why the scheme should not have the same effect in regard to a workman who had agreed to it while it was still in operation although after the commencement of the new Act.

Wallace v. R. and W. Hawthorne Leslie & Co. Ltd.
Lord Low.

I recognise the force of that argument, but I do not think that it can be sustained in face of the provisions of sub-sect. (2) of sect. 15. That sub-section provides that "Every scheme under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897 in force at the commencement of this Act shall, if re-certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, have effect as if it were a scheme under this Act."

Now at the time when the appellant agreed to accept the provisions of Scheme No. 7 it had not been re-certified by the Registrar, and therefore could not receive effect as if it had been a scheme under the Act. What is meant by a scheme under the Act is plainly a scheme certified by the Registrar in terms of sect. 3 after the commencement of the Act, and, as I have already pointed out, that section declares in unequivocal terms that no contract, except a contract to accept the provisions of such a scheme, shall bar a workman from claiming the compensation provided by the Act. No doubt if the construction which I put upon sub-sects. (1) and (4) of sect. 15 be sound, an exception to the rule laid down in the third section is made in the case of a workman who at the commencement of the Act was under contract to accept the provisions of a scheme certified under the Act of 1897, but that is the only exception which I can find.

I have therefore arrived at a different conclusion from that of the learned Sheriff-Substitute, and am of opinion that the appellant is not excluded, by having agreed to accept the provisions of Scheme No. 7, from claiming compensation under the Act. I accordingly think that the first question should be answered in the affirmative, and that being so, the second question does not arise.

Lord Ardwall.—I concur in the course which is proposed by Lord Low. I am of opinion that the appellant is entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906, and that the Sheriff's decision ought to be recalled. I do not think that the appellant's claim for compensation under the Act is excluded by his having agreed to accept the scale of compensation provided by the Scheme No. 7 marked "A". That scheme had been certified in terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897, on 10th December 1903, but at the time the appellant signed it it had not been re-certified after the passing of the Act of 1906, as provided by sect. 15, sub-sects. (2) and (3) of that Act, and although subsequently the scheme is said to have been re-certified, yet that re-certification only took place after material alterations had been made upon it. The question is whether by signing the said Scheme "A" after the Act of 1906 had come into operation, the appellant has contracted himself out of the operation of that statute. I am of opinion that he has not. Sect. 3 of the said Act of 1906 deals with the question of contracting out, and provides that that can only be done if the Registrar of Friendly Societies, after taking steps to ascertain the views of the employers and workmen, certifies that any scheme of compensation provides certain benefits therein specified; and if that shall have been done, the Act goes on to provide as follows: "The employer may, while the certificate is in force, contract with any of his workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme; but saving as aforesaid, the Act shall apply, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act." Now upon the facts stated in this case it appears that the contract signed by the appellant had not been certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies in terms of this section. Accordingly, as provided by the clause above quoted, the Act of 1906 applies, notwithstanding the contract in question, which was made after the commencement of the Act. This matter is, in my opinion, quite clear so far as sect. 3 is concerned.

But it is said that the provisions of sect. 15 have the effect of rendering the scheme under the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897, in force at the commencement of the Act of 1906, a valid scheme under the Act of 1906 if it is re-certified at any time before the expiration of six months from the commencement of the said Act, and in the present case this has been done. I cannot accept this reasoning. I think the result of sub-sect. 2 of sect. 15 is that until what one may call an old scheme is re-certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, it has not effect as if it were a new scheme under the Act of 1906 as far as regards workmen signing it after the commencement of that Act are concerned. Accordingly the scheme signed by the appellant was not at the time he signed it equivalent to a new scheme under sect. 3 of the Act of 1906. It was argued that if this be so, the Act of 1906 makes it impossible for workmen or employers to enter into a contract taking themselves out of the Act during the period elapsing between the commencement of the Act and the adjustment of a scheme under sect. 3, or the re-certifying of an existing scheme under the Act of 1897. It is, I think, possible that this is the effect of the Act of 1906, but this defect is not of much moment, for it only affects workmen who are entering an employment for the first time between the passing of the Act and the certification or re-certification of a scheme, and does not prevent even them contracting themselves out of the Act so soon as a new scheme shall have beeen certified or an old one recertified. The terms of sect. 3 are quite absolute, and in my opinion they are not altered by the provisions of sub-sects. (2), (3) and

(4) of sect. 15, which are intended to save contracts current at the commencement of the Act, and also under certain conditions to utilise in whole or part schemes then in force as schemes under the 1906 Act.

I. Workmen's Compensation Act 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. cap. 37), Schedule II. (8)—Agreement to Pay Compensation under the Act — Memorandum Recorded—Agreement Containing Undertaking to Give Employment—Breach of Agreement to Employ—Enforcement—Common Law Action of Damages—Held Action Incompetent.

II. Master and Servant—Contract to Give Regular Employment — Employment for a Period of Two and a Half Years — Dismissal—Breach of Contract—Held no Relevant Averment of Breach.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Guthrie.

The pursuer reclaimed against the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary assoilzieing the defenders from the conclusions of the summons.

Argued for Pursuer: (1) On competency. The agreement was not under the Act quoad the stipulation for regular employment, because the Act dealt with money compensation and nothing else (Cochrane v. Traill & Sons, 1900, 2 F. 794). Registering a memorandum did not make it such an agreement if it was not such otherwise. Recording was only for execution. It was incompetent to charge on such an agreement ad factum præstandum, because the Court would not enforce specific performance of a contract to employ. The only method of enforcement was by action of damages. Recording did not take away any remedy which was open to the pursuer without it. In Robertson v. Henderson, 1904, 6 F. 770, it was held that a common law action of reduction of an agreement was competent. (2) On relevancy. The defenders were bound to employ the pursuer under the agreement so long as he was able and willing to work. That was the meaning of the word "regular." Short of his lifetime, the contract was valid for any period. But the contract had, according to the averments, been broken from the beginning. The pursuer had never got the kind of employment stipulated.

Lawrie v. James Brown & Co. Ltd.

Argued for Defenders: (1) The pursuer's remedy was to charge on the recorded agreement for the 23s. a week, and tender his services. The agreement was one for compensation, and could not be split up. The recorded memorandum was equivalent to a decree; and an action at common law for non-implement of a decree was incompetent. It could not be in part a decree and in part not, with a charge alone competent on the decree portion and an action quoad the rest. If the decree could not be enforced by charge, then the pursuer simply would have an agreement which was unenforceable. Counsel referred to Robertson v. Henderson, 1905, 7 F. 776. (2) This agreement to give employment was of an indefinite character, and, short of a charge of mala fides, could not be enforced. It was for employment during pleasure, and could be put an end to at any time. Here employment was given for two and a half years, and was terminated for disobedience.

The Court adhered.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—My Lords, I agree with the Lord Ordinary upon both points. He has decided the case by finding that the action is bad, both as being incompetent and irrelevant. Now nothing is better settled than that you cannot proceed both under the Workmen's Compensation Act and also independently of it, and the Workmen's Compensation Act provides for workmen a short and simple remedy, where there has been an agreement between the parties, for working out that agreement, first, by registering the agreement, and then by making it enforceable as a Sheriff Court decree to all effects. The agreement here was signed by both parties, and from the first it seems to have been determined that it should be registered under the Act. Now when that is so I think that all other remedy is excluded. I quite agree that the judgment in the case of Robertson v. S. Henderson & Sons Ltd., 1904, 6 F. 770, settles that in certain circumstances there may be an action at common law. There, an agreement had been made between a minor and his employers, and it was held that it was reducible by the workman on the ground of minority and lesion, but the ground of that decision on the competency was stated by Lord Kinnear in these words: "The Act of Parliament gives compensation in certain circumstances, and allows it to be fixed either by agreement or by arbitration. But when it allows the compensation to be fixed by agreement it assumes that the agreement is valid and binding according to law." Now, of course, an agreement under the head of minority and lesion can only be reduced by an action at common law. Now what is the agreement here, and what are the circumstances of this case? The agreement was a mixed one: in the first place, it provided what the compensation to which the applicant was entitled under the Act would have been, and as to that the parties are agreed. It said that the average weekly earnings were 30s. and that the maximum compensation would therefore have been 17s. 6d., being the half thereof and an added sum for average overtime. And then it went on to agree that in lieu of such compensation the respondents were to give the applicant regular employment as a foreman over the workers at the settling ponds in connection with their works at Esk Mills, and to pay him the fixed weekly wage of 23s. with the usual additional pay for extra work, and also to pay him, on the date hereof, the sum of £90 sterling, and in full of all his claims for compensation under the said Act in respect of the said injury.

2nd Div.

Lawrie v. James Brown & Co. Ltd.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.

Well, now, the compensation which is here referred to covers all the stipulations in his favour—that is to say, those stipulations which the respondents agreed to pay in lieu of compensation are the £90 down and the undertaking to give regular employment as foreman over the workers at the settling ponds in connection with their works at Esk Mills, at a weekly wage, with a certain additional pay for extra work. It was these things which he agreed to accept as compensation under the Act, and that agreement was, as I have said, duly signed and recorded. It seems to me that the Lord Ordinary is quite right in saying that you cannot split an agreement of that kind into two. The compensation for the accident was a composite thing, part of which, I quite agree, would not have been enforceable at all, and so the Lord Ordinary held on the question of relevancy. But still I do not see how it was competent to split it into two as the workman proposes to do. He says, I have got my £90—and that is all that was, strictly speaking, money compensation for the injury I received—but I propose to treat that separately altogether from the obligation to give regular employment in a certain capacity, which I see is not enforceable under the agreement because it was open to a number of objections, and I can only enforce it at common law. Now I think that is an illegitimate way of dealing with the agreement, and it was so held, as I read the agreement, in the subsequent case of Robertson v. Henderson & Sons (namely, a report in 7 F. 776), because there the Court undoubtedly viewed the compensation as consisting partly of the promise or undertaking by the employers to give employment, although they admitted it was not enforceable at all.

Well, then, here the workman agreed to that, and it was a term of the agreement which he made under the Act, and the Lord Ordinary has held that you cannot split it into two parts and treat the one part as compensation and the other not. I think it was all compensation, and the workman took it for what it was worth, and was bound to proceed as the Act directed, namely, by registering the agreement, which he did, and by charging upon it as a Sheriff Court decree. I agree with Mr Lees that it is impossible to treat a Sheriff Court decree as a thing which is to be split into its parts and treated differently according as one part was and the other was not, strictly speaking, enforceable.

That concludes the Lord Ordinary's mode of dealing with the plea of incompetency, and then he goes on to deal with the relevancy, and there again he holds that the pursuer's averments are objectionable as being not relevant, because his complaint is merely that the employers failed to give him regular employment as he considers it. Now what is the fact? They took him on as foreman over the workers at the settling ponds and kept him there for two years and a half. However, there arose a dispute between them owing to his failure to obey the orders of the foreman over the whole workers, which undoubtedly he was bound to obey. It is not said that he was not put as foreman over the workers at the settling ponds, but it cannot be contended that he was not bound to obey the foreman over the whole workers. There also I think the Lord Ordinary was perfectly right, and therefore what I propose to your Lordships is to adhere to the interlocutor which the Lord Ordinary has pronounced in both branches.

Lord Low.—My Lords, I concur. I think that when the parties recorded the agreement under sect. 8 of the Second Schedule of the Act, they elected to abide by the Act, because the effect of recording the agreement was that, as it is put in the eighth section, they obtained what was equivalent to a County Court judgment in terms of the agreement; or if we take the words of sub-section (b) of the 14th section of the Schedule, what was equivalent to a recorded decree arbitral in terms of the agreement. The pursuer having therefore chosen to take a decree which he can enforce, it seems to me that he must abide by the remedy which he has chosen, and cannot throw over the registration and appeal to this Court on the ground that this is a contract having nothing to do with the Workmen's Compensation Act at all. But even if that view were not maintainable, I agree with the Lord Ordinary that the action falls to be thrown out on the ground that no relevant averment has been made. Under the agreement no doubt the employers bound themselves to give the workman regular employment as foreman over the workers at the settling pond, but no term of endurance of the employment is fixed. It was argued that the use of the word "regular" implied a term of endurance, but I do not think that is so, because I think that the word "regular" is used as distinguished from "occasional," or "intermittent," "regular" employment being employment which will enable the workman to earn wages regularly week by week. But as no term of endurance is fixed, I take it that the employment was necessarily employment at pleasure, and that is a contract which, in my judgment, cannot be enforced, because I do not think that the Court will ordain that to be done which may immediately be undone.

But I do not think it is necessary to go as far as that, because, assuming that the employers were bound, at all events, to give the workman employment for some time, they have done so. They have given him the stipulated employment and paid him regularly the stipulated wages for two and a half years, and it is perfectly plain that the reason why they dismissed him in the end was that there was a dispute about the kind of work he was to perform. In these circumstances I think that it is plain that the claim of damages for breach of contract is untenable. On both branches of the case, therefore, I agree with your Lordship in the chair and with the Lord Ordinary.

Lord Ardwall.—My Lords, I agree with the result at which your Lordships have arrived, that we should affirm the judgment of the Lord Ordinary, but I do so only on the question of relevancy, and that for the reasons stated by my brother Lord Low.

There was no duration here, and where this is so in a contract of service, it is well settled that the duration of such contracts is what is customary in the employment. In the case of gamekeepers and gardeners, etc., it is usually held that the engagement is for six months or a year according to the custom of the country. With regard to workmen in a work of this kind, they usually are employed for the term of a single pay, which is generally a fortnight. I think therefore it is absurd to say that after the pursuer had been three years or so in the defenders' service, and the parties having fallen out about the nature of the employment, and the defenders having dismissed the pursuer, there is any relevant averment entitling him to damages, and accordingly on that ground I think the action is irrelevant, and that the defenders must be assoilzied.

But I must say that I am not, without much further consideration, prepared to agree in holding that this action is incompetent. I am not convinced that it is illegal to insert an undertaking to give employment as part of a contract for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act. If it is not illegal to do so, the question comes to be, How is such an agreement to be enforced? It is said, "Just register your memorandum, and go on and charge upon it." Now that is all very well; but a contract of service, as is pretty well settled, is not a contract of which a court of law will decern specific implement. But the service has come to an end, and the man has been discharged. What, then, does the pursuer's claim resolve into? If a relevant case had been stated, it would resolve into a claim of damages, but there is no procedure prescribed by the Workmen's Compensation Act for enforcing such a claim, and therefore I must say I am disposed to think, if there had been a relevant case here, it was not incompetent to ask in an ordinary court of law a remedy which could not be worked out under the Workmen's Compensation Act. We, however, have not a relevant action here, and accordingly I refrain from expressing a definite opinion on the question of competency. —6th March 1908.

Landlord and Tenant — Reparation — Mora—Lease of Moorland Pastoral Farm —Heather-Burning—Stipulation in Lease as to Annual Proportion of Heather to be Burned—Claim by Tenant for Damages Suffered in Tenth Year of Lease Owing to Insufficient Heather-Burning—Defence of Mora—Clean Receipts Granted by Tenant for Rent Down to Year of Claim—Circumstances in Which Held that Tenant's Claim Not Barred by Mora—Rule in Broadwood v. Hunter, 1855, 17 D. 340, Discussed.

Appeal from the Sheriff Court of Perthshire.

These were cross actions, to which the parties were Sir James Ramsay of Bamff and John Howison, his tenant in a moorland grazing farm. The question at issue was a claim by the tenant of damages arising from the alleged failure of the landlord to burn sufficient heather upon the farm. Both actions dealt with other questions in dispute between the parties with regard to certain repairs and fencing stipulated for in the lease, but for the purposes of this report it is not necessary to refer to these more particularly. The tenant entered into possession of the farm at Martinmas 1895, upon conditions of a lease verbally arranged between him and Mr Panton, the landlord's factor, since deceased, for a term of nineteen years from that date. The terms of the lease were not finally adjusted until July 1902, when an approved draft lease was signed by the parties. No formal lease was entered into. At this time Mr Claude Ralston was factor to the estate, Mr Panton having died in 1892; in 1902 Mr T. P. Laird succeeded Mr Ralston as factor. By the terms of the approved draft lease the proprietor agreed to let to the tenant the lands in question "all as presently possessed by the said John Howison . . . . and that for a period of nineteen years from and after the term of Martinmas 1895, which, notwithstanding the date hereof, is declared to be the term of entry hereunder." The rent of the subjects was fixed at £315, payable half-yearly, the first half-year's rent being payable one year after entry—that is, payable at Martinmas 1896 for possession to Whitsunday 1896, and so forth. The stipulation as regards heather-burning upon the farm was in these terms:

> And with regard to heather-burning on the moorland of the farm hereby let, it is agreed upon, and the proprietor hereby undertakes to burn, weather permitting (except during the statutory close time from the eleventh day of April to the first day of November), one year with another, one-twelfth part more or less thereof during each year of the lease, the said heather-burning to be carried out under the supervision of the proprietor's head gamekeeper, the tenant giving the assistance of his shepherds in connection therewith: Declaring that no heather shall be burned on the lands hereby let except as herein provided for, under the penalty of Two pounds sterling per imperial acre, and at that rate for any part of an acre of additional rent.

The acreage of the farm was not made matter of agreement in the approved draft lease, nor was it agreed upon in the pleadings. The tenant stated it to be about 3000 acres, of which two-thirds were under heather, the landlord at some 2700 acres, of which two-thirds were under heather.

The tenant paid the rent half-yearly up to and including that payable at Martinmas 1904 for possession to Whitsunday 1904, but retained the rent payable at Whitsunday 1905 for possession to Martinmas 1904. On 7th July 1905 the landlord raised an action for payment of this half-year's rent, which action the tenant resisted, on the ground that the landlord had failed to perform material stipulations of the lease, including that with regard to heather-burning above set forth, and that he (the tenant) was entitled to abatement of rent or set-off of damages in consequence of the said breach of contract. On 21st September of the same year the tenant raised an action against the landlord in which he claimed, inter alia, two sums of £100 each as representing the damage which he had sustained in the years 1904 and 1905 respectively, owing to the landlord's failure to burn sufficient heather in terms of the obligation above set forth.

The tenant made the following averments:

COND. 3. A main condition on which the pursuer offered for and agreed to become tenant of the said subjects was that heather should be burned by the proprietor to the extent of one-tenth part yearly. (This was afterwards modified to one-twelfth part yearly as after mentioned.) The defender's factor gave that assurance before the pursuer would consent to offer, and the pursuer, in reliance thereon, agreed to give £315 of yearly rent for the subjects, being £25 more than had been paid for the subjects previously. . . .

COND. 4. The said factor had and acted upon the defender's authority in making the said bargain. He informed his principal (the defender) of the foresaid conditions, and the defender consented thereto.

COND. 6. . . . . The defender has not implemented his obligation, although he was well aware that the pursuer regarded it as of primary importance, and insisted upon its fulfilment. In 1896, indeed, the defender burned a little of the heather, but in the following year he burned none, and so anxious was the pursuer to have it done that he employed his shepherds to do it that year. The defender, however, objected, and threatened interdict. Since then the defender has burned little or no heather on the subjects let. In the ten years since the pursuer's entry, about 150 acres only of heather have been burned. Particularly in the years 1903 and 1904 the defender has burned no heather, and in the year 1905 no more than about 10 acres of heather on the said subjects. The pursuer made complaint of the want of heather-burning to the defender's successive factors, including the present factor, Mr T. P. Laird, C.A., Edinburgh, but without effect. The pursuer told Mr Laird that he would withhold rent until fulfilment of the defender's part of the lease, and he has retained the rent of the second half of crop 1904, which would have become payable at the term of Whitsunday 1905 had the defender performed his share of the contract.

In answer the landlord admitted that he knew of a bargain between pursuer and the said John Panton, but denied the conditions as stated. Quoad ultra, he denied these averments, under reference to the following:

STAT. 2. In the year 1895 the late Mr John Panton, solicitor, Blairgowrie, was factor for defender, and had a general authority to negotiate for the letting of farms. The defender was made acquainted at the time with the rent offered by pursuer.

STAT. 3. Defender knew that it had been arranged that about one-twelfth part of the heather portion should be burned yearly, one year with another, weather permitting, and explained that, as far as possible, the defender has fulfilled that part of the bargain. Explained that in the year 1896, the year after pursuer's entry to the holding, a very much larger proportion of heather was burned than bargained for, in order to give the moor a good start for grass, and it is averred that about one-sixth part of the whole moor was burned in that year. Since then about 1000 acres of heather have been burned from time to time. Explained, however, that in the years 1903 and 1904, in consequence of the very wet seasons, it was impossible to burn any heather, and consequently none was burned. Explained that in the year 1905 about fifty acres of heather were burned, and that more would have been burned if weather had permitted.

The landlord, inter alia, pleaded:

In any event, pursuer having paid his rent for the period of his possession up to Martinmas 1904 without specific reservation of any claim for compensation, cannot now maintain such claim, so far as arising prior to the said term of Martinmas 1904.

In the first action the rent was consigned. After sundry procedure the Sheriff (Johnston) ordered the consigned sum to be paid over to the landlord, conjoined the actions, and allowed proof in the conjoined actions. After proof the Sheriff-Substitute (Sym) pronounced an interlocutor in which he found, inter alia, as follows:

(3) That prior to his (the tenant's) obtaining entry, the lands had been held by a Mr Ferguson, and that there had been a want of attention to sufficient heather-burning, and that there was consequently a good deal of old heather upon the lands. . . . (17) finds with regard to heather-burning that, in the season 1896, a considerable amount of heather-burning was done and the moor was partially broken up, and that in 1906, after the present dispute was going on, a considerable amount of heather-burning was done, but that in the intervening years, notwithstanding complaint and objection on the part of the tenant Howison, the landlord failed to perform, taking these years together, the obligation of burning, one year with another, one-twelfth of the heather each heather-burning season. (18) That the seasons of 1903 and 1904, and to a considerable extent that of 1905, were wet and unsuitable for heather-burning, but the other seasons between 1897 and 1902 were more suitable, and the obligation, making proper allowance for the bad years, was capable of fulfilment. . . . (20) That during the earlier years of the agreement the terms of the heather-burning obligation had not been adjusted, because for some time the landlord had objected to bind himself to any definite amount of muirburn, and that, though this may have been earlier overcome (as appears from the communication of Mr Claude Ralston with the tenant, in process), the draft lease was not adjusted and approved till 11th July 1902. . . . Therefore with these findings of fact, finds in law in the conjoined actions, (1) with regard to heather-burning, that the tenant is not disentitled—having regard to the nature of the obligation, the uncertainty for some years of its position owing to the landlord's action, and the manner in which it is to be fulfilled on an average of years—from seeking damages for its breach; assesses the damages at £100. . . .

Note. . . .—The parties have caused serious difficulties about matters which ought to be plain. The contract between them was not adjusted till long after the possession of the farm was entered on. It still stands on an approved draft lease. Sir James Ramsay had, so late as 31st December 1898, a strong objection to agreeing to any definite amount of muirburn. He wrote of that date, "I will not sign any lease which binds me to a definite amount in each year," and "there are other clauses that I cannot accept." If one is to regard as settling the matter that copy of the draft lease on which Sir James founds, it could not have been till after the heather-burning season of 1902 that Sir James was induced to agree that a proportion of one-twelfth on an average should be burned each year. But perhaps before 1900 he had come round to agree to one-twelfth. On his part the tenant has not, all necessary allowance being made, so acted as to make his position safe. The acreage of the subjects let has never been agreed on. It was apparently not known to the tenant, who, when he took the lease, acted on his general knowledge of the place, and on an estimate of what stock he thought it would carry. A measurement has been made on the part of Sir James since the action was in Court. On what standard he and his advisers acted, after he came to agree that one-twelfth of the heather be burned each year, as to the amount which should be burned in any year, it is not easy to say, unless it be that, as before that time, "it depends very much on the assistance you give my keeper."

It may be said that in each year in which burning was possible some burning was done. Nearly always it was in small patches, which seems to be the practice on the Bamff estate. In the first year (1896) a good deal of burning seems to have been done. The only year in which anything of a like amount was done, viz. 1906, requires, owing to the date of the litigation, to be excluded from consideration.

For the first few years, 1896 to 1902, the tenant could hardly make a stand. For an average of one year with another has to be considered, and besides there was no agreement as to what should be burned until after several years had run. Though the lease may now shew what must be held to have been agreed upon at the beginning, the question is one of the tenant's conduct. He had no bargain on which to take his stand for a definite proportion. So he must for a time stand excused for not insisting, as a condition of paying rent, on one-twelfth being burned on an average.

In 1903 and 1904 there was no burning. But for these years the landlord stands excused. Burning was impossible to any serious extent, because a cycle of very wet years had begun. The year 1905, though a better year, was a wet year too. As has been said, an average has to be considered. It is thought that in 1905 it was not too late for the tenant to take up the ground of maintaining that he could withhold rent which had become due for possession in 1904 unless more heather-burning were done. Whether he could do so depends, of course, upon the facts. The Sheriff-Substitute is quite of opinion that it will not do for a tenant simply to complain or grumble and at the same time make payment on clean receipts without reserving his claim. If he do so he may exclude himself from remedy, because he will have led his opponent to think that the claim is passed from and, most likely, to lose evidence which would meet it. . . . .

[After reviewing the evidence and expressing the opinion that it would not be consistent with the result thereof to hold that there had been, one year with another, one-twelfth burned throughout the lease, the Sheriff-Substitute proceeds:]

His verdict on the whole proof is that the obligation has not been fulfilled, taking the years 1897 to 1905, and making allowance for the bad years. It is thought that the damages ought to be assessed on this head at £100. This sum is made up on the consideration that the tenant might have kept additional stock, and that prices have of late been good. Nothing has been allowed for the alleged loss of sheep by their falling into wet holes among the heather and being drowned.

The landlord appealed to the Sheriff, who pronounced the following interlocutor:

The Sheriff recalls the 17th and 18th findings in fact in the Sheriff-Substitute's interlocutor of

Ramsay v. Howison et e contra.

26th December 1906, and in place thereof finds in fact: (16) That having regard to the state of the weather in the years 1903, 1904, and 1905, and the amount of heather burned in 1906, no failure upon the part of the landlord to burn heather in accordance with the provisions of the lease is proved to have occurred subsequent to the spring of 1902; (17) that the tenant claims damages in respect of the failure of the landlord to burn sufficient heather in each of the years from 1897 to 1902 inclusive; (18) that the tenant paid his rent in full, without demanding any reservation in the receipt or intimating any claim for neglect of heather-burning, down to the term of Whitsunday 1905, when he consigned the half-year's rent then due: recals the first finding in law in the said interlocutor and the relative decerniture, and in place thereof, finds that the tenant is barred by delay in intimating his claim from any claim of damages in respect of failure to burn sufficient heather: Assoilzies the landlord from the conclusions for damages in respect of insufficient heather-burning.

Note.—The tenant entered into possession at Martinmas 1895. The formal lease was not executed until July 1902. The tenant maintains that the terms upon which he took the farm, as arranged between him and Mr Panton, the landlord's factor, were that one-tenth of the heather was to be burned annually, and that one-twelfth was ultimately substituted in the formal lease, reluctantly, on his part. The landlord's case I understand to be, that the question of what was to be the arrangement as to heather-burning was a matter of open negotiation down to the adjustment of the formal lease. I hold that the lease must be treated as speaking from the date of entry so far as fixing the landlord's obligation in the matter. But for the purposes of the present case, I do not think that the date of execution of the lease can be altogether ignored. According to the Sheriff-Substitute's view of the evidence, with which I do not differ, there was no default on the landlord's part after the spring of 1902. 1903, 1904, and 1905 were bad seasons, and there was much burning in 1906. Accordingly, when the lease was signed, all the failure which can be complained of had already occurred. But the lease, which is now appealed to as the record of the terms of the contract said to have been broken, was executed without any intimation of a claim upon the tenant's part. That is a circumstance which cannot be altogether overlooked in determining whether the tenant waived his claim in respect of prior default. Under the lease the tenant is made liable in pactional rent throughout the tenancy for any heather burned by himself without the keepers. Prior to the date of the execution of the lease, he had on three occasions so burned heather. It would not, I think, have been easy for the landlord, after signing this lease, without any intimation of a claim already accrued, thereafter to have insisted in a claim in respect of such bygone breach. Where two parties negotiate in a friendly way as to the adjustment of a lease, and then amicably sign the same when adjusted, it seems hardly consonant with what was their reasonable understanding of these parties at the time of such negotiation, adjustment, and execution, that, after the lease is signed, its terms should be appealed to, to liquidate a claim for damages said to have been incurred before its date, of which claim no hint was given until after the lease was signed. However that may be, the tenant paid his rent until Whitsunday 1905 without reservation or intimation of such claim. At Whitsunday 1905, being three years after the last act of default (if there was default) on the part of the landlord, the tenant retained his rent, and intimated a claim. According to the authorities on this branch of the law, this delay is a conclusive answer to the tenant's claim, unless he can find some special circumstance which takes the case out of the general rule (Emslie v. Young's Trs., 1894, 21 R. 710; Broadwood v. Hunter, 1855, 17 D. 340). The learned Sheriff-Substitute finds such circumstances, viz.: —(1) The lease had not been finally adjusted until 1902. Now, it is perhaps somewhat difficult for the tenant to maintain, on the one hand, that the lease shall be treated as a record of the original contract, and as speaking from the date of entry, but that, on the other hand, his conduct during the intervening period shall be judged upon the footing that there was no obligation to which he could appeal. I am not disposed, however, to apply this strict logic in the matter. I proceed upon a more general ground. The tenant was not to burn heather himself, the landlord was to burn it, and to burn it to an extent to meet the reasonable requirements of good farming. That was a special point according to the tenant when he took the farm, and, according to his own evidence, that duty was being neglected between 1896 and 1902. But he intimated no claim, and made no reservation in paying his rent. The difficulty about the adjustment of the lease might very well have justified a claim of merely a round sum, or it may be a claim or reservation of a still more general character. But I do not think that it was impossible or difficult for him to give the landlord clearly to understand that he was holding him responsible in damages for the neglect which he complains of. Further, there were five termly payments of rent after the lease was signed. There does not therefore appear to me to be anything in this aspect of the matter which interferes with the application of the principle upon which the Court proceeded in the cases above referred to; (2) the second specially is that the obligation was to a certain extent ambulatory, "one year with another." There would be weight in this consideration if only one or two years were in question, but according to the tenant, there had been default in six successive years, 1897–1902 inclusive, and thereafter, when the rent was paid without reservation, that default was irremediable, and the consequences of it were being felt by the tenant.

It is suggested that even if all claim is barred in respect of loss suffered before the tenant withheld his rent, still he is entitled to damages for loss suffered since that date in respect of prior default. But where there is action imputing waiver of claim after loss has begun to accrue, I think that this imports waiver of the whole claim in respect of the default. To hold otherwise would be inconsistent with the principle of timeous notice, upon which the cases proceed.

In the view I take of the law, it is unnecessary, and would not indeed be proper, for me to determine the question whether there was default upon the part of the landlord. The evidence upon the matter, however, goes to confirm my conviction of the propriety of the rule which requires notice de recenti of claims of this kind. The amount burned in the immediately preceding years could, in 1902, have been determined with an approximate precision, which is now impossible, and other evidence now lost would have been available.

The tenant appealed and argued: (1) The landlord's obligation must be taken as dating from 1895 and not from 1902, as contended by the appellant. The signature of the approved draft lease did not make a fresh contract between the parties, but only formally embodied the terms of lease already agreed upon (Foulis v. M'Whirter, 1841, 3 D. 343). (2) The Sheriff was wrong in holding that the claim was barred. The decision in Emslie v. Young's Trs., 1894, 21 R. 710, could not be applied to the facts of the present case. There the claim was for damages suffered three years before the claim and in a year for the rents of which clean receipts had been granted. There was no authority for holding that a claim for damage suffered in years for which the rent had been retained and after a claim had been formulated should be barred by the granting of clean receipts in previous years. The rule laid down in Broadwood, 1855, 17 D. 340, and followed in Emslie, 1894, 21 R. 700, amounted to no more than this, that the circumstances of each case should be taken into consideration in deciding whether or not there had been waiver, and the decisions had varied accordingly (Baird, Eliott and Mount, infra, and M'Donald v. Johnstone, 1883, 10 R. 959; Hardie v. Duke of Hamilton, 1878, 15 S.L.R. 329; Johnstone v. Hughan, 1894, 21 R. 777). In the present case no presumption of waiver was to be drawn from the delay of the tenant in intimating his claim. The landlord was entitled to perform his obligation on the average of a series of years and the tenant would not be safe in making a claim until sufficient time had elapsed to make it plain that breach had occurred. In the circumstances the tenant was not barred from claiming for damage, which according to the evidence he had in fact suffered.

Argued for the Respondent: (1) There was no obligation upon the landlord to burn any definite amount of heather until 1902, when the terms of the obligation, hitherto in dispute, were finally adjusted. The signed draft lease no doubt confirmed that part of the bargain which had been settled in 1895 beyond dispute, but as regards conditions hitherto not agreed upon it must be regarded as a new bargain. In this respect the present case differed from that of M'Whirter, for there the terms of the lease as eventually signed agreed with those of the missives upon which it proceeded, and which had never been in dispute. If this view were correct then the tenant had no claim, as according to the findings of both Sheriffs the landlord was excused after 1902 owing to the weather conditions. (2) Assuming the lease to speak from 1895 the Sheriff was right in holding that the tenant's claim was barred. In cases such as the present the law required that the party claiming should intimate his claim as the damage arose, and should intimate it specifically as a claim of damages; waiver would be assumed from the absence of such a specific claim. The ratio of this rule was that otherwise the party claimed against would suffer prejudice in preserving evidence for his defence. Accordingly in Broadwood, sup. followed in Emslie, sup.; Baird v. Mount, 1874, 2 R. 101; Eliott's Trs. v. Eliott, 1894, 21 R. 863; and Hamilton v. Duke of Montrose, 1906, 8 F. 1026, it had been held that the granting of clean receipts was a circumstance from which to infer waiver. Esto that the circumstances of Broadwood and of Emslie differed from those of the present case, the ratio of the rule to be applied was the same. In this case the presumption of waiver was stronger than that in Emslie's case in respect of the signature of the approved draft in 1902, an act entirely inconsistent with the subsistence of a claim. Any breach of obligation must have occurred prior to that date, as in subsequent years the landlord was held to be excused, and must have been known to the tenant. Mutual waiver of all claims must be presumed from this act, the alternative presumption being that each party thereby admitted liability, the landlord for damages owing to failure to burn, and the tenant for pactional damages for having burned in contravention of the agreement. In any view the various circumstances founded on in support of the plea of bar were evidence in support of the landlord's contention upon the facts that no damage had been suffered and no complaint made by the tenant in respect of insufficient heather-burning.

Ramsay v. Howison et e contra.

The Court recalled the interlocutor appealed against, and reverted to that of the Sheriff-Substitute.

Lord M'Laren.—This case comes before us on an appeal from the Sheriff Court of Perthshire in conjoined actions. In the first action Sir James Ramsay sued the appellant for £157, 10s., being half-year's rent due at Whitsunday 1905, and was met by a claim to retain the rent against a larger sum of damages said to be incurred in the year 1904, chiefly in respect of insufficient heather-burning.

The second action was instituted by the appellant, and in it he claims damages incurred in the year 1905. There is also a claim for repairs to the house and fences, but this part of the case was not brought under review in the Court of Session. The actions were conjoined in the Sheriff Court.

The Sheriff-Substitute awarded £100 of damage in respect of insufficient heather-burning, stating in his note that his award was made on the consideration that the tenant might have kept additional stock, and that prices of late had been good.

The Sheriff found "that the tenant is barred by delay in intimating his claim from any claim of damages in respect of failure to burn sufficient heather," and therefore assoilzied Sir James Ramsay v. Howison et e contra.

Lord M'Laren.

Ramsay from the conclusions under this head. In the note to his interlocutor the learned Sheriff states that in his view it is unnecessary for him to determine the question whether there was default on the part of the landlord.

It appears to me, however, that we cannot with advantage consider whether there was such delay in making a definite claim as would amount to a legal bar, until we have mastered the facts of the case, including such elements as the amount of heather burned from year to year, the state of the weather in the spring months in so far as it has interfered with burning of heather, and the condition of the moor at the time when the claim was made as compared with its condition when the tenant first entered on the possession of the farm.

The omission to burn the proper quantity for two or three years might not sensibly affect the value of the farm for grazing, and again, the inability to burn heather during, say, two consecutive seasons, even if it did affect the value of the farm, would not give the tenant a claim for damage.

But the effect of the heather being allowed to grow unchecked for a series of years is cumulative, and, prima facie, it is only when the tenant begins to suffer from the abnormal growth of the heather that his claim arises. In any view, it is only then that the attention of the tenant is directed to the subject, and that he is in a position to estimate the damage and to formulate a claim. For this reason I think we shall best get at the justice of the case if we begin by considering whether there was, in fact, a failure on the part of the respondent to keep down the heather to the proper extent.

The case is further complicated by reason of the parties being at variance as to the extent of the landlord's obligation to burn the moor. There is a concurrence of testimony that in 1895, when the appellant got possession of the farm of Craighead, the moor was not in good order, and the appellant would not have taken the farm except on the condition that it was to be made suitable for pasture by yearly heather-burning. But the terms of the lease, as often happens, were not arranged when the tenant got possession, and, as matter of fact, the lease was not executed until July 1902, the chief cause of the delay being the difference of view between landlord and tenant as to the extent to which the burning of the heather was to be carried. The appellant claimed that one-tenth of the moorland should be burned in each year. The respondent would only undertake to burn one-fourteenth. (See the evidence of Mr Ralston, factor in the intermediate years of the tenancy.) Eventually the figure of one-twelfth was agreed on, and that figure was inserted in the lease executed in 1902.

It is maintained for the proprietor that this figure ought not to be applied retrospectively, in estimating the damage under the present claim, but in my opinion there is not much substance in the argument. If the terms of the lease had been varied; if, for example, the original agreement had been to burn to the extent of one-fourteenth, and if after the lapse of say seven years, the proprietor had agreed to the proportion of one-twelfth, plainly there would be no breach of contract in past years if the burning had been carried out in terms of the original agreement. But in the actual case there was no variation of the original contract. The contract was (by legal implication) that the moor should be burned annually to a reasonable extent. The parties were not at first agreed as to what should be considered a reasonable proportion, but eventually they agreed that one-twelfth of the whole moor should be taken as a reasonable amount of burning in fulfilment of the proprietor's obligation, and this quantity was inserted in a lease which, although only executed in 1902, gave entry as at Martinmas 1895. I think this must be taken to be an estimate on which the parties were agreed and meant to be bound, of what they considered a fair fulfilment of the proprietor's obligation to burn reasonably. When, two years after the execution of the lease, it was found that the pasturage had deteriorated, I think the measure of damage is the loss the tenant proves that he has suffered from the neglect to burn to the extent of one-twelfth from the beginning. In that sense I see no difficulty in giving a retrospective effect to the clause in the lease, because it was not a variation, but an interpretation by joint consent of the original obligation. . . .

I agree with the Sheriff-Substitute that the respondent, or his gamekeeper, for whom he is of course responsible, has not fairly carried out the agreement with the appellant as to burning, and that the damage for the two years to which the actions relate is proved to amount to £100.

There remains for consideration the ground of the Sheriff's judgment, which is that the appellant by paying his rent for a series of years before making a specific claim, has departed from his claim of damage for future years.

Now I think that in applying the principle of decision in such cases as Broadwood v. Hunter to a case in which the uses of the land are different, and the conditions which determine liability are different, some caution is requisite; and it is proper to consider the principle which underlies the decisions, and to apply it, with the necessary reserve, to the altered conditions. There are two principles to be considered. The first is that where a proprietor is in breach of the contract of location, the tenant, and no other person, is the party entitled to sue for reparation, a principle which has lately been called in question, but may now, I hope, be held to be established. The other is, that a tenant may waive his claim, and that such a waiver may be inferred from his acts, even when he has not granted an express discharge. Whether in any particular case the tenant has waived his claim is a question of fact in which all the circumstances have to be considered. In this case, and according to the agreement, the tenant entered upon the occupation of a farm which was in very bad condition, with a legal expectation that in the course of his tenure the sheep-carrying capacity of the farm would be improved. But it was quite impossible to forecast the time when the expected improvement would be realised, because this depended partly on the weather conditions being favourable for burning, and partly on the system of burning, which to some extent was in the proprietor's discretion. If the burning was done in considerable tracts at a time, there would be a sensible improvement as soon as the grass began to grow, but if it were done in small patches scattered over the moor the benefit might be eventually the same, but it would be longer in coming into operation. In any case, as the tenant entered upon an improving lease, he could not reasonably make a claim of damage until after the lapse of such a period of years as would be necessary to give the system a fair trial. The most he could do would be to insist on the agreement as to burning being carried out. In consequence of the death of Mr Panton, the first factor, we have not the advantage of his evidence, but I see no reason for doubting the accuracy of the appellant's statement that he complained to Mr Panton, year by year, of the inefficient way in which the burning was carried out, and pressed for a more speedy fulfilment of the landlord's undertaking in this respect. In the year after Panton's death, the parties were negotiating as to the terms of the written lease, and it was not until 1902, when the lease was executed, and when there had been a six years' trial of the proprietor's system of burning, that the tenant can be said to be in a condition to judge for himself whether he had the materials for a specific claim. Up to this time the utmost effect that could be given to his omission to make a claim would be that he could not claim damage for any inconvenience he had suffered in the years that were past.

Then, after 1902, the case was further complicated by the occurrence of two unfavourable years for burning; but in 1904 the appellant had satisfied himself that the respondent did not mean, unless compelled by legal means, to carry out fairly his undertaking as to heather-burning. In this conclusion I think he is justified by the attitude taken up by the respondent's advisers at the proof, and also by the circumstance that in the year following the action the heather-burning was, for the first time, carried out in an efficient way.

Now, if the appellant had brought his action at an earlier period, he would very likely have been met by the defence that the heather-burning had not had a sufficient trial, and that he could not expect in so short a time to have the farm in good condition. There is really no criterion for determining at what particular year the damage had declared itself so as to put the tenant to an election, either to waive his claim altogether or to enforce it. In all the circumstances I see no sufficient evidence of waiver, and I cannot think it would be a just or equitable result that the tenant must submit during the remaining years of his lease (for this is the Sheriff's judgment) to an actual refusal on the part of the landlord to fulfil his contract, because he has not enforced his rights with the utmost strictness in the past. I am therefore of opinion that we should sustain the appeal and restore the judgment of the Sheriff-Substitute, that the appellant is entitled to £100 as damage sustained during the years 1904 and 1905 through the negligent performance of the respondent's obligation to burn a fair proportion of the heather year by year in terms of the lease.

The Lord President and Lord Kinnear concurred. (Lord Pearson was absent from the advising.)—5th March 1908.

375. Hunter v. Downie.

Succession—Testament—Words Importing Gift of Heritage — Titles to Land Consolidation Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. cap. 101), sect. 20—Bequest to Executor of "All My Estate" With Direction to Realise—Bequest Held to Include Heritage—Observations per Lord M'Laren on Grant v. Morren, 1893, 20 R. 404.

This was a special case, to which the parties were Archibald Hunter, the sole executor under the testamentary settlement of the late David Jack, of the first part, and Robert Downie, a purchaser from the first party, as executor aforesaid, of certain heritable property, of the second part. The said David Jack died in Dublin, leaving a last will and testament, of which probate was obtained in the High Court of Justice in Ireland. The will contained the following provisions:

I appoint Archibald Hunter of Roselea Drive, Dennistoun, in the City of Glasgow, to be the sole executor of this my last Will and Testament. I direct my said executor immediately after my death to realise all my estate and pay all my just debts and testamentary expenses. [After directing the payment of certain legacies, the will proceeds.] I direct that the residue of my estate, after the payment of the aforesaid legacies, shall be divided equally between my wife, Lucy Annie Jack, my son, James Jack, and my son, David Jack. I desire that my said wife, Lucy Annie Jack, shall have the choice of any of the furniture and books which she may desire, all remaining furniture or effects to be realised as aforesaid. I direct my said executor to place the realisation of my estate in the hands of Mr John Brown of 23 Exchequer Street, in the City of Dublin.

It was stated in the case that the estate of deceased consisted of certain moveable property in Dublin of the value of £326, and of heritable property in Glasgow. That the first party, desiring to realise the heritable estate belonging to the deceased, exposed the said property for sale at the upset price of £1750, and that the second party, the only offerer, was declared the purchaser. The case proceeded as follows:

4. The second party refused to accept the title offered by the first party, and questions have arisen with regard to the first party's title to said heritable property, and his power to sell the same.

5. The first party maintains that the whole estate, heritable and moveable, which belonged to the testator, was validly and effectually conveyed to him by said will and testament, and that there is an implied power of sale therein.

6. The second party maintains that the first party has no title to said heritable property, as it was not conveyed to him by said will and testament; that the said will and testament deals only with moveable estate, and that there are no words of direction or conveyance therein applicable to heritage in virtue of which a notarial instrument can be expede thereon in terms of the Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act 1868. He further maintains that even if the property were effectively conveyed to the first party under the said will and testament, there is no power of sale given to him therein.

The following Questions of Law were submitted:

1. Has the said heritable property which belonged to the deceased been validly conveyed under said will and testament to his said executor, the first party hereto?
2. In the event of the foregoing question being answered in the affirmative, is it competent to expede a notarial instrument in favour of the first party on the foresaid will and testament in the form of Schedule L of the Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act 1868?
3. In the event of the first question being answered in the affirmative, has the first party, as executor foresaid, power to sell said heritable property?

Argued for the First Party: No special form of words was required in order to convey heritage, provided the words were sufficient to carry moveables (Titles to Land Consolidation Act 1868, sect. 20). All that was necessary was that the intention of the testator to convey heritage should be plain from the terms of the deed (Aim's Tr. v. Aim, 1880, 8 R. 294; M'Leod's Tr. v. M'Luckie, 1883, 10 R. 1056; Forsyth v. Turnbull, 1887, 15 R. 172). Here such an intention must be drawn from the universal expression "all my estate." The word "estate" was suitable for the conveyance of heritage; and the absence of limitation, especially where, as here, the main portion of the estate was heritable, must be held as conclusive.

Argued for the Second Party: An intention to convey heritage must clearly be inferred from the language used, otherwise the Court will confine its application to moveable estate (Grant v. Morren, 1893, 20 R. 404; Urquhart v. Dewar, 1879, 6 R. 1026). Here there was ambiguity in respect that, first, the appointment was one of an executor prima facie for the administration of moveable estate; second, no words in the deed other than the words "all my estate" could be interpreted as including heritage, and the word estate had been refused such effect (Grant, sup.); third, the direction with regard to the realisation of the estate in Ireland, though appropriate to the moveable property which was situated there, was quite inappropriate to the heritable property which was situated in Scotland.

The Court answered the first and third questions in the affirmative, but did not answer the second question.

The Lord President.—The question before us is whether the executor of the late Mr Jack is in a position to give a good title to certain heritable property sold by him as executor, and that depends, in the first place, on whether the executor had right to the subjects in question; and, secondly, whether he had power to sell them. The first of these questions depends on the terms of the will and on the 20th section of the Titles to Land Act 1868. I need not quote the section, for your Lordships are familiar with its terms. The whole point of the section turns on the question whether the words used by the testator shew an intention to deal with heritable estate. If they do so, then the section provides that the mere absence of technical terms will not matter.

I think, looking to the terms of the will before us, there is no doubt that Mr Jack meant to dispose of his heritable estate, for he says: "I direct my said executor . . . . to realise all my estate"; and then after leaving various legacies, he goes on to direct him to divide the residue of the estate between his wife Lucy Jack and his sons James and David Jack.

Now, whether the use of the word "estate" would or would not in itself be sufficient to indicate that the will was meant to apply to heritable property, I think it is perfectly clear that when the words used are "all my estate," the whole estate, both real and personal, was meant to be conveyed. If that is so, it is obvious that the executor has right to the heritable estate, and that he has power to sell it. It would be absurd to suppose that the testator meant that the heritage was not to be realised, but to be conveyed pro indiviso to the beneficiaries under the will. If the executor has power to sell, it follows that he can give a good title to the purchaser.

I propose accordingly that we should answer the first and third questions in the affirmative. The second question is not one which should have been put to the Court.

Lord M'Laren.—The 20th section of the Titles to Land Consolidation Act 1868 deals with the language necessary to pass estates from the dead to the living, and for the purpose of abolishing the peculiarity which existed in the old law with reference to heritable estate the statute made the provision that the language used to pass moveable estate should now be sufficient to pass heritable estate if it is used with reference to heritable estate. But the 20th section does not profess to solve the question what actual words will suffice to shew that the testator intended to dispose of his heritable estate by will. Now I think the decisions upon the latter point are on the whole consistent, and they proceed upon the principle of ascertaining whether the testator had heritage in view when he made his will. In one case the word "property" was held to be sufficient to pass heritage, and the word "estate" seems to me to be quite as general and as sufficient to pass heritage unless when it is used in a more limited sense. I observe that in the case of Grant v. Morren, 1893, 20 R. 404, where it was held that the will was not habile to convey heritage, I expressed the view that the "estate" there conveyed was confined in meaning to such estate as an executor might administer. But that case is distinguished in two important elements from the case before us. First there was in Grant's case no formal gift or direction, but only a bare appointment of an executor to perform the duties of an executor; while here, after appointing an executor, the testator goes on to bequeath legacies and to direct that his estate shall be realised and divided. But I also agree with your Lordship in holding that the word "all" is important. In cases like that of Grant the words "my estate" may be controlled by subsequent expressions and by the terms of directions given to the executor, but that is only if the words themselves are ambiguous; and where, as in the present case, the word "estate" is joined with the word "all" there is no ambiguity, and there is no necessity of drawing inferences from other parts of the deed to explain what is already clear, and still less to limit the generality of a clause which on the face of it is a universal bequest of the testator's estate.

Lord Kinnear.—I think that the first question in this case is solved by a consideration of two propositions, both of which have been stated by Lord President Inglis in two different cases, viz. (1) that the first question in cases of this kind is whether words importing a gift have been used in a will or testament with reference to land; and (2) that that question must be answered in the affirmative if the words employed describe either heritable estate in particular, or the testator's whole estate, without distinguishing between heritable and moveable. If this is sound, the application is easy, because the testator here directs that "all" his "estate" is to be realised, and then, after certain legacies have been paid, that the residue of "my estate" is to be divided between his wife and his sons. I do not think it can be disputed that if he had said in terms, "all my estate, heritable and moveable," his intention would have been quite plain, in spite of the appointment only of an executor. It is just as plain in the will as it stands, because, if a man has heritable as well as moveable estate, the direction to realise "all my estate" is not carried out if only his moveable estate is realised.

Upon the question of the power to sell, I think that follows as a matter of course, for the reasons stated by your Lordship.—7th March 1908.

Justiciary Cases—Fishing—Salmon Fishing—Weekly Close Time—Sunday Labour—Reasonable Excuse — Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. cap. 123), sect. 24, Bye-law, Schedule D, sect. 3—When it Was Impossible, Owing to the Weather, to Remove Leaders on Saturday Night, but it Might be Done With Safety on Sunday, Held that the Fact that it Was Sunday Labour Was Not a Reasonable Excuse—Middleton v. Paterson, 1904, 6 F., J.C. 27, Disapproved.

Stated case.

This was an appeal against a judgment of the Sheriff-Substitute at Tain (Hay MacWatt) refusing to convict the respondent on a complaint which charged

That Mrs Margaret Anderson Tough, widow, residing in Portmahomack, in the county of Ross and

High Court of Justiciary

Middleton v. Tough.

Cromarty, occupier of the Geanies Salmon Fishery in the parish of Tarbat and said county of Ross and Cromarty, being a fishery at which bag-nets are used, has contravened the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1868, sect. 24, and the bye-law, Schedule D, sect. 3, annexed to the said Act, in so far as between six o'clock p.m. on Saturday the third day of August nineteen hundred and seven, and six o'clock a.m. on Monday the fifth day of August nineteen hundred and seven, and within or during the weekly close time for the district of the river Conon, under the salmon fishery statutes, the said Mrs Margaret Anderson or Tough did omit or fail entirely to remove and take out of the water the netting of the leaders of five bag-nets belonging to her on said fishery, all placed in the sea ex adverso of the lands of Geanies, belonging to Lieutenant-Colonel William Hugh Eric Murray of Geanies, in said parish of Tarbat and county of Ross and Cromarty, and within the said district of the river Conon, contrary to said Act and bye-law.

The facts were set forth in the stated case as follows:

The cause was tried at Tain on 23rd October 1907, and the respondent pleaded not guilty.

At the trial the evidence led established the following facts:—

That the respondent is the occupier of the salmon fishings specified; that she failed to remove and take out of the water the netting of the leaders of said five bag-nets belonging to her on the Saturday night in question; that owing to a strong wind and rough sea it was dangerous for the respondent or her men to remove the leaders on the Saturday night; that the leaders could have been removed without danger on Sunday, and that one of said leaders was in fact removed about eight o'clock that morning by bailiffs in the employment of the Fishery Board; that no attempt was made on the part of the respondent or her men to remove the leaders referred to on the Sunday in question, but they were removed as soon as possible on Monday morning.

It was proved that the appellant wrote to the respondent on 22nd March 1906, intimating that the Board held her bound to remove leaders on Sunday, when it was impossible to do so on the Saturday night. There was no evidence that the respondent's men were ever asked by her, or that they refused to remove leaders on Sundays, or that it was impossible for the respondent to hire men willing to remove leaders on a Sunday.

On these facts the Sheriff-Substitute held that there was no contravention of the statute by the failure to remove the leaders on the Saturday night; and in respect of the decision in Middleton v. Paterson, 6 F., J.C. 27, he refused to convict on account of the failure to remove on the Sunday.

The Question of Law for the opinion of the High Court of Justiciary was: Whether—the weather having been suitable—the respondent was bound, on the Sunday in question, to entirely remove and take out of the water the netting of the leaders of the five bag-nets specified?

Argued for the Appellant: The statute of 1868 had been held to be imperative as regards the mode prescribed of observing the weekly close time (Irving v. Phyn, 14th Dec. 1891, 3 W. 46, 19 R. (J.) 7; Osborne v. Anderson, 3rd Nov. 1887, 1 W. 497, 15 R. (J.) 12; Parr v. Mitchell, 24th Feb. 1890, 2 W. 434; Middleton v. Paterson, supra. Macrorie v. Forman, 17th Nov. 1905, 8 F., J.C. 23, was wrongly decided. Contrary to the view expressed there by Lord Trayner, the law was that every servant was bound to do necessary work on Sunday, unless the terms of his engagements expressly stipulated the contrary. The work in question here was one of emergency, and was on all fours with a case of a farm servant attending a sick animal on a Sunday, which he would be bound to do. It was not stated that the respondent had made any attempts to get the nets lifted on Sunday, and Macrorie v. Forman, supra, established that where an accused was prima facie in the wrong he must establish his excuse. The case of Phillips v. Innes, 19th May 1835, 13 S. 778, 2 S. and M. 465, was not a case of emergency, but of ordinary every-day work carried on on Sunday, and did not apply here. In Bute v. More, 26th Nov. 1870, 1 C. 495, 9 M. 182, and Nichol v. M'Neill, 13th July 1887, 14 R. (J.) 47, all that was decided was that a charge of keeping a shop open on Sunday under the Act of 1661, cap. 18, could not be tried summarily. Counsel also referred to Wilson v. Simson, 11th July 1844, 6 D. 1256.

Argued for the Respondent: The real question here was whether the decision in Middleton v. Paterson, supra, was sound. That case recognised that it was the custom of the Highlands that no work should be done on Sunday, and approved of that custom as a sufficient excuse for not putting the nets out of fishing order on that day. It was unnecessary to prove here that the fishermen would not do the work, as it was a matter of common knowledge that they would not do so. Further, such work was illegal under statutes 1579, c. 70, 1661, c. 18, and 1690, c. 5, which all dealt with Sunday working and trading. These statutes were not in desuetude as shewn by Phillips v. Innes, supra; Jennings v. Burnet, 18th Dec. 1852, 1 Irvine 115, and by the fact that they are not included among the statutes of a similar kind abrogated by 6 Edw. VII. c. 38. It was enough for the tacksman to shew that Sunday labour was illegal, and that he could only lift his nets by getting men to break the law. Her Majesty's Advocate v. Gollan, 23rd July 1883, 5 C. 317, showed that it was impossible to make people work on Sunday. The Salmon Fisheries Act of 1868 must be read along with the other Acts prohibiting Sunday labour.

The Court answered the question in the affirmative.

The Lord Justice-General.—My Lords, the question brought before your Lordships is whether there ought to have been a conviction on the following facts as stated by the learned Sheriff-Substitute who states the case.

In the county of Ross and Cromarty at the Geanies salmon fishery there is in operation by force of law the bye-law contained in Schedule D of the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act of 1868. The section of that statute which imposes the penalty is the 24th, and it puts upon the proprietor or occupier of every fishery the obligation of doing all acts for the due observance of the weekly close time required by any bye-law in force within the district. The bye-law imposed by Schedule D provides that with regard to the due observance of the weekly close time, which is a close time imposed from six o'clock on Saturday afternoon till six o'clock on Monday morning, "the netting of the leader of each and every bag net shall be entirely removed and taken out of the water." Your Lordships will therefore observe that a positive duty is put upon the owner or the occupier of every fishing. The occupier, who is the respondent in this case, is a Mrs Tough, and she admittedly upon the occasion specified did not take out the leaders of her bag nets during the whole of the specified period, but left them there from six o'clock on Saturday evening till a very early period on Monday morning. Prima facie, therefore, it is quite clear that she has contravened the statute, and consequently is liable to conviction. What, then, is her excuse? She says, and the learned Sheriff-Substitute holds that it is proved, that at six o'clock on Saturday evening the state of the weather was such that it was a physical impossibility to remove the leaders. Then he goes on to say that the leaders could have been removed without danger on Sunday—as a matter of fact, one of them was removed by the Fishery Board people on that day—and he further finds that there was no evidence that the respondent's men were ever asked by her to remove the leaders on the Sunday, or that they refused to do so, or that it was impossible for the respondent to hire men willing to remove leaders on the Sunday.

Upon that state of the facts I think there must be a conviction here, because the onus upon the prosecutor is satisfied as soon as he shews that there was a contravention of the bye-law. That he does by shewing that the leaders were not removed. No doubt there may be an answer to that which has always been held as an answer satisfactory to avoid conviction, namely, that there was impossibility. Physical impossibility there undoubtedly was at six o'clock on Saturday evening, by reason of the weather, but it was not according to the stated facts impossible on the Sunday morning. Therefore, there must have been some other class of impossibility which the respondent was bound to table, and she had not proved either that she took the slightest trouble to try and get her men to remove the leaders, or failing them, that she could not get others. Practically speaking, that is enough for the decision of the case.

But Mr Hunter has appealed to us not to decide the case upon that matter alone, because I understand that this case has been brought up in order to review the decision in Middleton v. Paterson. I have no hesitation in saying that I agree with the opinion of Lord Moncreiff in Middleton v. Paterson, and that I do not think that case was rightly decided. There are various grounds for my opinion. The argument for inability is admittedly entirely based upon the old Scottish statutes against Sunday labour. These are certain old statutes of the Scottish Parliament. I am bound to say that for myself I am greatly in doubt whether these statutes are still in operation, or whether they have not fallen into desuetude. But I do not think it is necessary to decide that question, as I shall presently explain. Prima facie, I do not think that these statutes have anything to do with it, because the question is not as to whether a conviction could be secured under these statutes for doing a certain thing, but whether this person was prevented from doing what she should otherwise have done by vis major. I use that expression because it comprehends laws of every kind, physical or otherwise. It may be that you could find persons who would be content to work on the Sunday and take their risk of a conviction under the statutes, and looking at the general state of affairs as matters go now a days, I do not think the risk would be a very great one. But it was argued that this was so clearly against the statutes that really it becomes tantamount to an impossibility, because if you engage anybody to do that thing you would be engaging him to do a thing which was in itself unlawful. My Lords, I cannot follow that, because, assuming as I do for the moment, that the statutes are still in observance and not in desuetude, I cannot say that the Act here would ever be struck at by the statutes. What may be called the leading case for the statutes is that of Phillips v. Innes, where it was held that looking to the prohibitions of the statutes, a barber's apprentice in Dundee, who had been engaged to do his master's work, holidays excepted, was justified in refusing to shave customers as an ordinary business on Sunday before ten o'clock in the morning. The one point was that shaving customers before ten o'clock on Sundays was ordinary work, and that if he had been obliged to do it, he would have had to shave Sunday after Sunday just as on other days. In point of fact, he might have had to shave more than on ordinary days, because there are men of peculiar habits who prefer shaving on Sundays rather than on other days. But the learned Lords who decided that case seem to have been very careful to distinguish between ordinary and regular labour, and labour of a casual sort, which might be called for in an emergency, because the Lord Ordinary and one of the noble and learned Lords, Lord Wynford, put as an exception the particular case of a man being called upon to shave someone suffering from acute illness, and the shaving of whose head became more or less a work of necessity. I am of opinion that this particular operation of taking up the leaders on a Sunday, when it has been rendered impossible on Saturday by the state of the weather, is just such a work of necessity, and there again I agree with the opinion of Lord Moncreiff in Middleton v. Paterson. Mr Hunter read a passage in Lord Brougham's opinion in Phillips' case, in which the noble and learned Lord used some expressions which seem to mean that the necessity must be that of the person called upon to work and not that of the person whom he serves. That view, I think, is absolutely untenable. It is perfectly evident that you cannot so limit it, for it is possible, not only to have works of necessity where the necessity is for the weal of the public in general, but also to identify the interests of the master and servant. If it were not so, the feeding of cattle, e.g., would not be lawful, because there is no necessity, so far as the servant is concerned, it being the master's loss, not his, if the cattle die.

Middleton v. Tough.

But the matter does not end there, because I think there is another ground which takes this case out of the decision in the case of Phillips, and it is this. These old statutes may not be in desuetude, but they certainly are not, to say the least of it, rigorously enforced. Then in 1868, Parliament passed another Act which shows upon the face of it that something must be done by somebody on Sunday, because Parliament must be held to have had the common sense to know that occasionally there would be states of the weather which would make it impossible to remove the leaders on Saturday. Still, Parliament has held that the leaders must be taken out of the water during the weekly close time. That is equivalent to a positive enactment not necessarily repealing the old statutes, but holding that such a work is a work of necessity. Upon that ground I come to the opinion clearly that there was here no justifiable excuse for not complying with the Act of Parliament. Of course, whether a person could get a servant or not to do the work is another matter. The duty is put upon the occupier or owners, and if they cannot do it themselves they must get someone who will. You might find certain persons who would not work for you on Mondays, but you may contract with those who will. Or take one religion, and you will find a person who refuses to work on a Saturday. But that is your affair. All that it is necessary to say here is that such an excuse is not vis major. Whether you can get a servant to do the work or not is simply a matter of contract. That is sufficient, I think; but I ought also to say that Osborne's case was overruled by the case of Irvine; and on the whole matter I come to the conclusion that in this case there ought to have been a conviction.

The Lord Justice-Clerk.—I entirely concur with your Lordships. The statute providing the weekly close time is imperative, and lays upon the occupiers of salmon fisheries a positive duty to throw their nets out of gear by removing the leaders. I do not consider that the existence of those old Scots Acts dealing with Sunday labour provides any excuse for not obeying the directions contained in an Imperial Act of recent date.

It is of course quite true that there may be cases where a servant by refusing to carry out the instructions of his employer may put his employer unavoidably in the position of contravention of a statutory enactment, but that is a question of fact, and there is no suggestion in the case before us that that was what happened here. This case differs from that of Middleton v. Paterson, 6 F. (J.) 27, because here it is expressly said that the respondent's servants were never asked to remove the leaders on the Sunday in question, while there it did appear that there had been an attempt made to get the work done and that there was a refusal to do it.

With regard to the case of Middleton v. Paterson, where the judgment seems to be in conflict with what we are deciding here, I should like to say that I was very doubtful about that case at the time, but in my position at the hearing I had no vote in the decision, except in the case of disagreement between my brethren, which in fact was what occurred. In that case there was this peculiarity, that there was an official of the Fishery Board present, and that he did not require that the leaders should be removed. In these circumstances I felt constrained to concur with Lord Trayner in a conclusion which meant acquittal, rather than with the conclusion of Lord Moncreiff which meant conviction.

I may add that it seems to me that in the case of Osborne v. Anderson the majority of the Court proceeded on a fallacy. It appeared that, owing to the tide at the particular time and place, the nets could not be put out of fishing order until several hours after the appointed time on the Saturday, and that, similarly, they could not be put again in fishing order on the Monday until some hours after the lawful time, and that the nets were out of fishing order for the full period of thirty-six hours, although not precisely between the times prescribed in the statute. Now I agree with Lord Rutherfurd Clark, who dissented there, that such acting was not an admissible construction of the Act, which plainly intends that all nets should be out of action during the fixed time—Saturday night at a fixed hour, and Monday morning at a fixed hour. The object aimed at is to give the fish a free run for the specified period past all nets, and that object would obviously be defeated if the result was that fish which passed nets the leaders of which had been lifted were in risk of being caught in those which had been left down.

Lord M'Laren.—I also concur with your Lordship in the chair. So far as the question is affected by authority, I think the explanation given by the Lord Justice-Clerk of the case of Middleton v. Paterson is very important, because I understand that in that case, and according to the constitution of this Court, his Lordship only gave a casting vote, and it is well known that in such circumstances considerations are taken into account which would not affect a vote given under ordinary conditions. In any case this question has been remitted to a Full Bench of Judges, and it is for us to decide the matter now.

Even supposing the earlier statutes relating to Sunday trading and Sunday labour to be in observance to certain effects, it is the fact that a later statute has been passed by the Imperial Parliament imposing the duty of putting the salmon nets out of fishing order during the whole period from Saturday evening until Monday morning. This consideration, in my judgment, is sufficient for the decision of the case. As, however, the whole law of the subject has been discussed, I think it desirable that we should also consider how far the old statutory law opposes obstacles to the performance of what most people would regard as necessary and suitable Sunday labour. There may be a difficulty, in consequence of the case of Phillips, in holding that the statutes are altogether in desuetude. But in the case of Bute v. More no precedent could be found for a conviction under these Acts, and neither the ingenuity of counsel nor the experience of the judges composing the Court was able to discover any form of process under which a person might be penalised for the contravention of these statutes. Therefore it is not saying too much when I conclude that these statutes are not likely to be again enforced. Indeed, without doing any violence to authorised expositions of the law, it may very well be held that the statutes have gone out of use altogether. But without entering further into that question, we know that it was the practice of the Scottish legislature to pass statutes which were expressed in very general terms, which were not always workable without the aid of judicial construction, and which were intended to be worked out by the courts of law applying common sense principles to their interpretation. Both before and after the passing of these Scottish statutes it is needless to say that there were certain descriptions of labour which had to be regularly performed on Sundays. Domestic service and a considerable portion of the work of farm service had to be carried on upon the first day of the week. Horses had to be fed, cows had to be milked, cattle had to be driven out to pasture in the morning and brought home at night. The statutes never were understood to prohibit anything except such work as was ordinarily carried on during week days and could be as well done on any other day as on the Sunday. The tailor or bootmaker was not to work at his trade nor to require his men to work for him on Sundays. The case of fishing for salmon, with all its statutory obligations, and the work of putting nets out of gear, must be held to be ejusdem generis with these kinds of work which have to be carried on upon Sundays; and as the Act of Parliament makes it necessary that the leaders should be removed either at six o'clock on the Saturday evening or as soon thereafter as the state of the weather permits, that is a sufficient reason why the lessee of such fisheries should be held bound to engage men who are willing to do this trifling amount of Sunday work when occasion requires. I have no conception that there would be any difficulty in finding men willing, when necessary, to perform these services on Sunday, just as servants can be found to undertake other services which are usually performed on Sundays as well as week-days. I agree with your Lordship in the chair that we should answer the question by holding that the person accused was liable to be convicted.

Lord Kinnear.—I agree entirely with the Lord Justice-General, and I only add, since this case has been brought for the purpose of reviewing the decision in Middleton v. Paterson, that I agree with the opinion of Lord Moncreiff in that case, and that my only difficulty in doing so has been removed by what the Lord Justice-Clerk has said.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—I concur in the opinion of your Lordship in the chair, and particularly in your Lordship's agreement with the dissent of Lord Moncreiff in the case of Middleton v. Paterson. He there points out at 6 F., J.C. 31, that "Sunday constitutes two-thirds of the weekly close time, and the regulations contain no sanction for non-observance of them on that day, on any ground whatever."

Lord Low.—I concur.

Lord Ardwall.—My Lords, on the application of the statute and the general law of the case, I entirely agree with your Lordship in the chair and with Lord Moncreiff's opinion in the case which has been cited. I should be very sorry if anything that we are deciding should seem in any way to derogate from the proper observance of Sunday. And I recommend the following view of the matter to these worthy people in Ross-shire who, greatly as I think to their credit, are desirous of avoiding unnecessary labour on the first day of the week. In the first place, I would point out that by leaving the nets set for fishing all Sunday, the people who fail to remove the leaders are truly guilty of engaging in the industry of fishing the whole of the Sabbath day. In the next place, it may well be considered a work of necessity or mercy to lift the leaders of the nets on the Sabbath day. The phrase "work of necessity or mercy," though embodied in a statute, is taken from the Confession of Faith and the Shorter Catechism, and these excellent documents profess to be founded on and only binding so far as founded on Scripture. Now in Scripture I find direct authority to the effect that if a sheep fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, it is lawful to lay hold on it and lift it out (see Matt. xii. 11). I hold it is an analogous act to take up the leaders of salmon nets on the Sabbath day, and let out the unfortunate salmon which have been entrapped by an illegal net, and mercifully to restore them to their native freedom.—10*th March* 1908.

Middleton v. Tough.

Lord Ardwall.

LANDS VALUATION APPEAL COURT.

(Lords Low and Dundas.)

377. Francis Webster & Sons and Others v. Assessor for Arbroath.

Valuation — Rent — Spinning Mills — Great Depreciation in Selling Value of this Class of Property—Number of Sales—Effect of Sales in Reducing Rental Valuation—Francis Webster & Sons v. Assessor for Arbroath, 1902, 4 F. 539, Commented on.

Case.

At a meeting of the Valuation Committee of the Royal Burgh of Arbroath, held in the town hall of Arbroath on the 11th day of September 1907, for the purpose of hearing the appeals against the valuation of property made by the Assessor for the year from Whitsunday 1907 to Whitsunday 1908, in terms of the Lands Valuation (Scotland) Acts, there were submitted the following appeals against the Burgh Assessor's valuation of the appellants' premises for the year, viz.:—

1. Francis Webster & Sons, Alma Works, Arbroath;
2. The Netherward Spinning and Weaving Company, Netherward Works, Arbroath;
3. Anderson & Chalmers, Brothock Mill, Arbroath.

The following are the particulars of the subjects belonging to the several appellants as valued and entered by the Assessor:

1. Alma Works, at a rent of £1293, 5s. consisting of, inter alia:

1. Mill and factory, Alma Works, Millgate, at a rent of . .	£900	0	0
12. Warehouse, Park Street, at a rent of	130	0	0
13. Hackling Shop, Park Street, at a rent of	60	0	0

The appellants, the said Francis Webster & Sons, maintained that this valuation should be reduced to £783, 5s., consisting of, inter alia:

1. Mill and factory, Alma Works, Millgate, at a rent of . .	£480	0	0

2. Netherward Works, at a rent of £730.

The appellants, the said The Netherward Spinning and Weaving Company, maintained that the valuation should be reduced to £260.

3. Brothock Mill, at a rent of £808.

The appellants, the said Anderson & Chalmers, maintained that the valuation should be reduced to £337, 10s.

The case set forth:

The contention of the appellants the said Francis Webster & Sons and the said The Netherward Spinning and Weaving Company was—

1. That the method of valuation adopted by the Assessor was not in accordance with the true meaning of the Valuation Acts.

2. That the true annual value of the subjects cannot be ascertained by taking a percentage on the structural cost, or by placing an arbitrary rate on the floorage, or number of spindles and looms in the concern.

3. That the true method of valuing the subjects in question was by ascertaining their annual value as compared with other buildings admittedly similar, whose value had been fixed by sales or leases in the open market.

4. That the assumed capital values on which the valuation of the Assessor is based are inconsistent with every case of a long series of sales and leases in the open market of similar subjects extending over the last twenty years, and including a number of recent transactions.

5. That the method of valuation by the Assessor was contrary to the principle of valuation fixed by the Court with reference to the subjects of Andrew Lowson, Limited (Andrew Lowson, Limited v. Assessor for Arbroath, 13th February 1901, 3 F. 466).

6. That the valuation of the Assessor was excessive and contrary to the evidence led.

The contention of the Assessor was—

That the particular circumstances attending the sale of the mill properties, which had recently changed hands, were such as to render the prices an unreliable basis for valuing the subjects of these appeals; inter alia, both the Brothock Mill and the Burnside Works had been standing idle for some time before they were sold. The latter had been depleted of machinery, and the former was largely fitted with a class of machinery for which there was little demand at the time. That the Assessor's method of valuation was in accordance with usage in the centres of the flax trade and with the Valuation Acts.

The principle laid down in Andrew Lowson, Ltd. v. The Assessor for Arbroath, 13th February 1901, 3 F. 466, did not apply, the case being ruled by Francis Webster & Sons v. The Assessor for Arbroath, 4th February 1902, 4 F. 539, which was an appeal dealing with the same subjects as the present ones. In that case the valuation of the Committee was sustained on appeal, and the principle of valuation adopted by the Assessor was upheld. That no material change affecting the value of the subjects had occurred since 1902.

The contention of the appellants, the said Anderson & Chalmers, was—

1. That the method of valuation adopted by the Assessor was not in accordance with the true meaning of the Valuation Acts.

2. That the true annual value of the subjects cannot be ascertained by taking a percentage on the structural cost, or by placing an arbitrary rate on the floorage, or number of spindles in the concern.

3. That the subjects having been sold in open market (after being duly advertised for private and public sale) for £8000, and this price being consistent with the other transactions which have taken place in the open market, the price must be held to be the full capital value of the subjects, and should be taken as the basis for arriving at the annual value.

4. That it having been agreed that $\frac{1}{32}$nds of the total capital value of the subjects shall be taken as the proportion applicable to heritage, £4500 (being $\frac{1}{32}$nds of £8000) is the capital value in the present case, and this, at 7½ per cent., being admittedly the highest percentage charged, shews the annual value to be £337, 10s.

5. That the assumed capital value, on which the valuations of the Assessor are based, was inconsistent, not only with the price at which the subjects were purchased in the open market, but also with every case of a long series of sales and leases in the open market of similar subjects, extending over the last twenty years.

6. That the method of valuation by the Assessor was contrary to the principle of valuation fixed by the Court with reference to the subjects of Andrew Lowson Ltd. (Andrew Lowson Ltd. v. Assessor for Arbroath, 13th February 1901).

7. That the valuation of the Assessor was excessive and contrary to the evidence.

The contention of the Assessor was—

That in the case of the Brothock Mill the purchase price, while it ought to be considered quantum valeat, was not, taken by itself, a reliable basis on which to value the works of the appellants Messrs Anderson & Chalmers, but that there should be taken into consideration the recent history of the subjects and all the other available data. That the circumstances under which the sale took place were such that the sale price did not reflect the true value of the subjects for the purposes of the Valuation Acts. That the market for mill property in Arbroath is a very small one, being confined to the manufacturers carrying on business within the burgh, and having the requisite technical knowledge and capital. That a period of dull trade had diminished the demand for mill property, and that, on the other hand, two or three mills had come into the market at the same time. That the effect of this was the absence of that competition among purchasers which would be found attending an exposure to public auction under normal conditions. That while trade had begun to improve when the purchase took place, this improvement had not had time to affect the purchase price, and that the position of the sellers, a body of private trustees, disabled them from taking advantage of the improvement and gave the purchasers an undue advantage over them. That the purchase price was lowered owing to the subjects standing idle. That the history of the subjects afforded other data which ought to be taken into consideration. In particular, the rent at which the subjects were formerly let, the amount spent after the fire in rebuilding and restoring them to their present state, and the amount for which they are at present insured ought to be kept in view. The Assessor's method of valuation was not inconsistent with the principles laid down by the Court in the case of Andrew Lowson Ltd. v. The Assessor for Arbroath, 13th February 1901, 3 F. 466. If due weight were given to all the circumstances his valuation would be found to be a fair one.

At an adjourned Court on 28th September the Committee gave the following judgments :—

"Arbroath, 28th September 1907.—These appeals by the appellants Francis Webster & Sons and The Netherward Spinning and Weaving Company appear to the Valuation Committee to be on all fours, and they have therefore been considered and dealt with together.

"The Alma Works and the Netherward Works have, for many years, been in possession of the present proprietors, who appealed against the Burgh Assessor's valuation of the respective premises in 1901, and their appeals being refused by the Valuation Committee, the appellants craved a case for the opinion of His Majesty's judges, and on 11th February 1902 the judges were of opinion that the determination of the Valuation Committee was right, and that the appeals should be refused. A good deal of evidence was adduced before the Committee in reference to the declining state of the flax industry in Arbroath, and the Committee are satisfied that the Arbroath flax and linen trade as a whole has, for several years, not been prosperous. In the case of these particular works, however, there has been no evidence placed before the Committee to shew that there has been any change of circumstances to warrant the Valuation Committee in departing from the existing valuation, as confirmed by the judges in 1902, with the exception that, in one respect, there is some depreciation of the subjects which may be properly kept in view. From the evidence led the Committee are satisfied that the engine and boilers in the Alma Works, and also, though to a smaller extent, in the Netherward Works, are now of considerable age, and are not up to date in efficiency, and for that reason the Committee think it right to give partial effect to the appeals, and to reduce the valuation of the Alma Works to the extent of £130, and the works of the Netherward Spinning and Weaving Company to the extent of £100.

"In the case of this appeal by Messrs Anderson & Chalmers the valuation of the Brothock Mill, etc., was £808, being the amount at which it had stood for many years when belonging to the late Mr David Corsar, and tenanted or occupied by the firm of Corsar Brothers, and subsequently when the property of Mr David Corsar's trustees. The mill had been unoccupied from February 1904 to the date of Mr Corsar's death in December 1904, and from that date till February 1907, when it was purchased by Messrs Anderson & Chalmers, the appellants, at the price of £8000. The Valuation Committee had evidence before them that the main part of the property, the spinning mill, was partially injured by fire in the year 1899, and was thereafter partly rebuilt and, to a considerable extent, reconstructed, by the late Mr

Lands Valuation Appeal Court.

Francis Webster & Sons and Others v. Assessor for Arbroath.

Corsar in 1899 and following year. From the Minute of Admissions by the parties it appears that Mr Corsar's expenditure amounted to upwards of £16,000, although it has not been ascertained how much of that expenditure applied to the heritable portion of the property and how much to the moveable machinery. It did not appear that any material addition was made to the previously existing valuation in consequence of Mr Corsar's expenditure, and therefore this expenditure does not appear to have, in Mr Corsar's view, led to an inflated valuation.

"It appears from the evidence placed before the Committee that Mr Corsar's trustees, after his death, used every endeavour to realise the property, but the state of trade was such that no one was found to make any offer for it. An improvement in the Arbroath trade began to appear about September 1906, and this improvement having continued, Messrs Anderson & Chalmers, the appellants, made, in January 1907, an offer to purchase the property at the price of £8000. Mr Corsar's trustees resolved to accept that offer. From their knowledge of the local trade the Valuation Committee believe that if Mr Corsar's trustees had been less anxious to sell, they could have got a considerably better price by waiting a few months longer; but as they did not feel in a position to work the mill themselves, and as to hold it implied a very considerable loss in interest, exclusive of the actual outlay in keeping a mill with valuable machinery in good order, it is not surprising that when they got an actual offer they resolved to accept it. The appellants Messrs Anderson & Chalmers have asked that the valuation of £808 be reduced to £337, 10s. The Assessor has been unable to accept this, and the Committee are of opinion that the Assessor is to a large extent correct; but looking to all the circumstances of the case, and to the evidence which was submitted in regard to the trade of Arbroath, the Committee do not think that the valuation of £808 can be properly continued. The Committee have not overlooked the decision of the judges in the case of Andrew Lowson, Ltd., decided in 1901, but in their view there is a material difference in the present case.

"In the present case the Brothock Mill had been standing for upwards of two years; the workpeople had been all dispersed, and could not easily be brought together again, or their places filled by others. The Committee are satisfied that in normal circumstances such a mill as the Brothock Mill, after being closed for some time, the connection broken up, and the workpeople dispersed and probably removed elsewhere, could not be worked during the first year except at a loss, and as it was not suggested that the mill was being worked at a loss, the Committee take that as further evidence of the very great improvement which has taken place in the spinning trade in Arbroath. On the other hand, there is the fact that these works were formerly let at £850, and that the appellants Messrs Anderson & Chalmers did not contradict the suggestion made by the Assessor, that, although they had acquired the property for £8000 they had now insured the buildings and machinery against loss by fire for £20,000 or upwards. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, the Committee came to the conclusion that the Brothock Mill properties should be valued on the same basis as the Applegate Works, which also belonged to the late Mr Corsar, and were sold after his death to Mr Corsar Pirret, now carrying on the business of Corsar Brothers, the valuation of which was adjusted between the Assessor and Mr Pirret in September 1906 at £500. On this footing the Committee fix the valuation of the whole Brothock Mill properties at £600, and remitted to the Assessor to adjust an apportionment of the valuation on this basis."

Argued for Appellants: This was a case of a declining industry. All the mills in the town except two had been sold, and none realised 50 per cent. of the capital value on which the Assessor's rental was based. The dictum of Lord Kyllachy in Francis Webster & Sons v. Assessor for Arbroath, 1902, 4 F. 539, applied. There had been a general depreciation of mill property; and in the light of that the old valuations ought to be greatly reduced. Counsel referred to Lowson's Judicial Factor v. Assessor for Arbroath, 1900, 2 F. 608, and Lowson Ltd. v. Assessor for Arbroath, 1901, 3 F. 466.

Argued for Respondent: There was no evidence of general depreciation, because there was no open market for such property. There had been a time of bad trade after the South African war, but business had improved. The whole circumstances of the sales must be taken into account, and the recent sales, so far as their circumstances were in evidence, had been forced sales. Selling price was no criterion of letting value. The letting value was more constant than the selling price.

The Valuation Judges were of opinion (1) that the determination of the Valuation Committee as regards the Brothock Mill was right; (2) that their determination as regards the Netherward Works and Alma Works was wrong; (3) that the valuation of the Netherward Works should be reduced to £500; and (4) that the valuation of the Alma Works should be reduced to £923, 5s., the valuation of the first item thereof being reduced to £577, 10s., that of the twelfth item to £97, 10s., and that of the thirteenth item to £45.

Lord Low.—There is no doubt that the evidence upon which the appellants mainly found is very striking. It appears that all the spinning mills in Arbroath, except apparently two, have been the subject of sales, and that in no case has the price actually obtained been within 50 per cent. of the capital value estimated by the Assessor. It is true that two of the sales took place many years ago, one being in 1888 and the other in 1892. All the other sales, however, have taken place since 1900, and therefore, in my judgment, furnish important evidence of the market value of spinning mills in Arbroath at the present time.

It was said that in the autumn of 1906 there was an improvement in the trade, and that seems to have been the case, but whether it has continued or not is doubtful. It was also said that while trade was very good during the continuance of the South African war, there was great depression when the war came to an end. That may be so, but it is significant that sales made during the war in 1900 shew substantially the same result as sales made after the war, namely, that the price actually obtained was at least 50 per cent. below the Assessor's estimate.

It is, however, to be remembered that we do not know the precise circumstances of all the sales, but several of them were more or less forced sales of mills which had ceased working. I therefore do not think that it would be safe to take the actual prices as fixing the capital value for the purpose of ascertaining the yearly rent. I mean that the capital value must be taken at something more than the prices; but, on the other hand, the result of the sales seems to me to shew that the capital value estimated by the Assessor is much too high.

That is the view which has been taken by the Valuation Committee in regard to the Brothock Mill, and accordingly they have reduced the Assessor's valuation of £808 to £600. If the Committee had fixed the value at a still lower figure I should have agreed with them, but (especially in view of the fact that they have local knowledge which we have not) I am not prepared to say that the amount at which they have valued the mill is not reasonable, and therefore I do not think that we would be justified in interfering with their determination.

In regard to the Alma Works and the Netherward Works the Committee have reduced the Assessor's valuation in respect of depreciation of engines and boilers, but otherwise they have allowed the valuations to stand. The chief ground upon which the Committee have proceeded is that these works were the subject of an appeal in 1902, when this Court sustained the determination of the then Committee, fixing the yearly value of the works at the amount at which they have ever since appeared in the Valuation Roll. The Committee in the present case say that no evidence has been placed before them to shew that there has been any change of circumstances to warrant them in departing from the existing valuation as confirmed by the judges in 1902, except as regards the engines and boilers.

Perhaps no substantial change of circumstances has been proved, but I think that we have evidence before us which was not before the learned judges in 1902, especially in regard to the sales which have taken place. Accordingly I think that it is quite competent for us to reconsider the valuation of 1902.

I am not sure how many cases of sales of mills were brought to the notice of the Court in 1902; but however that may be, Lord Kyllachy, after saying that if a "multitude" of sales had been before the Court a general depreciation of mill property might have been made out, proceeded to describe the actual evidence thus: "But that is a different thing from having before us—which is all we have here—one or two isolated cases of leases or sales—some of them as far back as in 1888, others of them in 1892, and I think two more recently."

I do not think that a similar description could be given of the evidence adduced in this case, which includes sales which have taken place since 1902, and which, as I have already indicated, appears to me to be entitled to great weight; and I repeat that the fact that additional and apparently more precise evidence has been led, justifies us in reconsidering the value of the mills in question.

Of course the allowance which the Committee have made in respect of depreciated plant and machinery must receive effect, but in addition to that I am satisfied that the appellants are entitled to a substantial reduction of the valuation. I therefore propose that the value of the Netherward Works should be reduced to £500, of the Alma Works to £923, 5s., that is, to £577, 10s. for the first item and £97, 10s. and £45 for the twelfth and thirteenth items respectively, which is a reduction very nearly proportionate to that allowed by the Committee in the case of the Brothock Mill.

Lord Dundas.—Having consulted with your Lordship, and having since then had an opportunity of reading your opinion, I entirely concur. —11*th March* 1908.

FIRST DIVISION.

(The Lord President, Lords M'Laren and Kinnear.)

378. Bruce Peebles & Company Limited v. Sheills and Others.

Company — Liquidation — Liquidator — Director — Appointment by Company of Director Residing in London as Voluntary Liquidator—Competency of Appointment—Application by Majority of Creditors and of Shareholders to Continue Voluntary Winding up Under Supervision of Court by Voluntary Liquidator in Association with Neutral Liquidator—Circumstances in which Application Granted.

This was a petition for the winding up under the supervision of the Court of Bruce Peebles & Co. Ltd., a Company carrying on the business of electrical and mechanical engineers, and having its registered office at East Pilton, Edinburgh. The Company appointed as provisional liquidator Mr A. W. Tait, a director of the Company resident in London, and applied to the Court for the continuation of the voluntary liquidation under a supervision order. The Lord Ordinary on 14th February ordered intimation of the petition, and in the meantime confirmed the appointment of Mr Tait as provisional liquidator. After this application was made, and in consequence of the representations of certain creditors of the Company, another special resolution was passed to the effect that Mr J. A. Robertson-Durham, C.A., Edinburgh, be associated with Mr Tait as liquidator. A note was presented for the joint liquidators, praying the Court to order the voluntary winding up to be continued under the supervision of the Court, and for confirmation of their appointment as joint liquidators.

Bruce Peebles & Co. Ltd. v. Sheills and Others.

Answers were lodged for Messrs Krauss & Sons, creditors of the Company, and for Mr Sheills, a preference shareholder, in which objection was taken to the appointment of Mr Tait as liquidator on the grounds that he was (1) a director of the Company, and (2) not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, and a compulsory liquidation under a neutral liquidator was asked for.

The application was supported by a very considerable majority of the creditors, shareholders and debenture-holders of the company, whilst the objectors were supported by a certain number of other creditors and shareholders and a small number of debenture-holders.

Argued for the Applicants: There were very special circumstances which made it of importance to the company that Mr Tait should be liquidator. (These circumstances are set forth in the Lord President's judgment, inf.) There was no invariable rule or practice against the appointment of a director as liquidator. Sanderson & Muirhead, 1884, 21 S.L.R. 766; M'Knight & Co. v. Montgomerie, 1892, 19 R. 501. The majority of the persons interested are those to be considered and consulted. Those persons were the creditors and the shareholders, and in this case there was no conflict of interest between these two bodies, their majority promoting the application. It was in the hands of the Court to protect minorities, and to see that no injustice was done even by very powerful majorities; here nothing had been shown to displace the special considerations upon which the order was asked by the majority of those interested.

Argued for the Objectors: The appointment of a director of the Company as its liquidator was most undesirable, as questions might arise in the course of the liquidation as to the conduct of the Company's business by its officials (In re Gold Co., 1878, 11 Ch. Div. 701). Nor should one be appointed who was not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court) Brightwen & Others v. City of Glasgow Bank, 1878, 6 R. 244; Baberton Development Syndicate Co., 1898, 25 R. 654.)

The Court ordered that the voluntary winding up be continued under supervision of the Court, confirmed the appointment of Mr A. W. Tait and Mr J. A. Robertson Durham as joint liquidators, found the petitioners and the liquidators entitled to expenses of the petition and note, taxed as between agent and client, as expenses in the liquidation; quoad ultra, found no expenses due to or by any of the respondents or compearers.

The Lord President.—In the application that is before us, we have to first of all decide whether this should be a compulsory winding up, or whether the voluntary winding up which has already been started by the Company should be continued under the supervision of the Court. There has been scarcely any argument upon that point, and at any rate it is sufficient to say that there is no reason why we should disturb the liquidation at present going on. The Court will accordingly pronounce the ordinary form continuing the winding up under the supervision of the Court.

The real question, however, which has been argued before your Lordships is the question who the liquidators are to be. The provisional liquidator, who was appointed only the other day, is Mr Tait, who is a chartered accountant resident in London, and also was a director of the Company. The application of the Company, who are the presenters of the petition, was originally intended to be an application to get the order which has just been made by the Court, and to confirm the appointment of Mr Tait as liquidator; but after the prayer had actually been framed, they were approached by several of the creditors who said that they objected to having a director of the Company appointed as sole liquidator, but indicated that they would be perfectly contented if an independent liquidator was appointed in conjunction with Mr Tait, and the name suggested was that of Mr Robertson-Durham. Accordingly, before your Lordships to-day, the position taken up by the Company has been that the liquidators ought to be Mr Tait, and associated with him, Mr Robertson-Durham. The application is opposed by certain parties who, through the counsel who appeared, represent in all £7000 worth of creditors, 1600 shares and £1000 worth of debenture debt. The total figures which might be represented under these three heads are, for creditors—I give the figures of course roughly—£200,000; for debentures £75,000; and for shareholders £290,000—58,000 odd shares. Now the objections that have been made by the compearing parties are really reduced to two heads alone. They objected to Mr Tait, first, in respect that he is domiciled in England, and not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court; and secondly, that he has been, and was at the moment of the liquidation, a Director of the Company. On the other hand, the Company have given special reasons, as they say, why Mr Tait's appointment should be confirmed. These special reasons are as follows: They explain that the Company has been brought into the difficulties which necessitate its liquidation because of the tightness of money in the money market, and that assuming its business may go on it is not certain that it will prove insolvent. Whether that is the case or not, it is true that the Company at this moment, in the course of its business, is engaged in carrying out a great many important and lucrative contracts. Therefore it is in the interests of all concerned that the benefit of these contracts should not be lost, because, even apart from the question of the relinquishment of profit from these contracts, there would be a very severe loss to the Company in respect that under the forfeiture clauses which are common enough in such contracts, they would lose a great deal of their plant in various parts of the world by that plant being seized by the persons with whom they had contracted. They further explained that there are in several of these contracts clauses of what we call in Scots law irritancy, by which the contracts may be brought to an end by the liquidation of the company, and they go on to say that the continued presence of Mr Tait in the active management of the business as a going concern is really a sine qua non in the negotiations which must necessarily ensue with the various parties with whom they have these contracts. That is a story which, upon the face of it, appears to have quite the impress of truth and probability. It is not admitted to the full by all the parties who are here compearing, and of course it is impossible for your Lordships sitting here to have an enquiry in order to get at the absolute truth of the state of facts. In regard to these matters, your Lordships are bound to deal in a case of this sort with the prima facie view, and all I say is that the story as told seems to me to bear the impress of truth. But your Lordships, I think, in such a case, where it is found that averments made on one side are not admitted on the other, have pointed out to you by the terms of the statute what is the proper method of solution. You are in all these matters, the statute says, to have regard to the wishes of the creditors and of the contributories. I have already given the figures of the compearing and objecting persons, and I have given the figures of the total compearers. In every such case, of course, it is not to be expected that we should have everybody here; but for the petitioners we have here, so far as the creditors are concerned, about £124,000 out of £200,000, and we have to notice that one very large creditor, the Royal Bank, who has over £43,000, is neutral, but neutral in such a way as practically to belong to the petitioners, because the Royal Bank, following its usual practice, did not take any part in determining the course to be taken by the creditors, but intimated that it would leave the decision to the trade creditors, which is tantamount to voting with the majority. Accordingly, you have here a sum of something like 160 odd thousand pounds, and you have on the other side practically about £40,000 worth out of the whole shareholding, and the petitioners have through a separate appearance practically the whole of the debenture-holders. My Lords, I need scarcely say when these figures are compared with the figures of the compearing objectors, that there is absolutely an overwhelming majority in favour of the demand by the petitioners. Therefore I think your Lordships should have little hesitation in supposing that the particular reasons which have been given for appointing this gentleman are true, seeing that the belief that these reasons are true is a belief that commends itself to the enormous majority of the shareholders, and still more of the creditors, who are, of course, the persons most to be thought of. Accordingly, it seems to me that everything points to granting the prayer of the petition in this matter, unless there is some real objection in law. Now, it is no objection in law to the appointment of the gentleman that he is not at this moment subject to the jurisdiction of the Court. It seems to me that he subjects himself most clearly by consenting to become an officer of this Court; and subject to the difficulty of arresting him in England, I cannot help thinking we should have every power against him, if such a thing were necessary—a contingency which is, I am glad to think, most improbable—that we would have against a Scotch liquidator. Nor do I find it has been ever laid down that it is impossible for the Court to appoint liquidators not subject to its jurisdiction. On the contrary, Lord President Robertson, in the case of The Baberton Development Syndicate Ltd., 1898, 25 R. 654, seems to me to have been particularly careful to bar the idea that such a course was incompetent, although it goes without saying that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is much more convenient in practice for the Court to appoint a gentleman in their own jurisdiction, for this reason, that it is better to have the man who conducts it there also. And the considerations which guided the Court in the well-known case of the City of Glasgow Bank (Brightwen and Others v. City of Glasgow Bank, 1878, 6 R. 244), are really too obvious to require stating. In that case there was nothing to be done but to distribute the assets of the City of Glasgow Bank. There were four men, capable gentlemen in Scotland, who had been appointed, and the man proposed to be added to these four was a gentleman who was in England—really, if I may use the expression, clearly a case of a fifth wheel to the coach. Here the reason for asking that Mr Tait should be a liquidator is not really connected with the distribution of the assets of the Company, but is connected with the weighty consideration of being able to continue this business as a going business at present, and consequently making the most money out of it for both creditors and shareholders. Well, then, possibly the only other matter is, that it is said Mr Tait was a director, and it is hinted or said that questions may arise as to the conduct of the directors in the past. My Lords, that may be so, and I think it would be a very weighty consideration against the appointment of Mr Tait as the sole liquidator. But it is not now proposed that Mr Tait should be sole liquidator. I do not wish to say anything peculiarly personal in the matter, but it is only fair to Mr Robertson-Durham to say that he, the gentleman selected and put before us, is a gentleman well known to this Court, and one at the head of his profession, and one in whom the Court has every confidence. It is perfectly absurd to think that Mr Robertson-Durham, knowing his duties as an officer of this Court, would ever allow to remain uninvestigated any transaction in the past, because he thought it might eventually go against the interests of Mr Tait. If such things are unfortunately discovered I conceive it would be a duty which he would perform, to call attention to the matter, to say to Mr Tait that the time had now come in which his interests became conflicting, and to call upon him to resign; and if he did not do so, it would be Mr Robertson-Durham's duty to bring the matter before the Court; and in such circumstances as I have put I do not think it is doubtful what the Court would do. All that is speculation as to the future, and all that does not touch the real crucial point of the matter, viz. the extreme desirability of keeping these contracts running. Accordingly, I am of opinion here—it is a peculiar and, in many respects, a unique case—that the petitioners have really made out the position they have put before us. Upon this matter of conflicting interests, there, again, it seems to me your Lordships' action is really backed up by the action of the persons to be considered, the creditors. As soon as it was known that Mr Tait was to lodge a petition to appoint him liquidator, the creditors said "No," and the moment it was proposed to have Mr Robertson-Durham along with him the creditors said "Yes," and they are saying "Yes" before your Lordships to-day. I am therefore of opinion that the prayer of the note should be granted.

Bruce Peebles & Co. Ltd. v. Sheills and Others.

The Lord President.

Expenses—Trustees—Personal Liability—Trustees Defend Action Acting on Advice of Counsel—Circumstances in Which Interlocutor of Lord Ordinary Finding Trustees Personally Liable in Expenses Reversed.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Johnston.

The defenders, Mr Buckle's trustees, reclaimed against the finding of the Lord Ordinary as to expenses which was in the following terms:

Finds the defenders the trustees of the deceased Mrs Dorothea Blackwell or Buckle personally liable to the pursuers in the expenses caused to them by the appearance of the said defenders in the cause, and finds that they are not entitled to charge their own expenses against the residue of the estate of the said Mrs Buckle, in which the pursuers are solely interested.

The Court recalled the portion of the interlocutor reclaimed against.

The Lord President.—My Lords, in this case I confess I have had considerable difficulty in seeing how the Lord Ordinary could possibly arrive at the conclusion at which he has arrived.

This lady died, leaving trustees who were, of course, in the possession of her funds for certain trust purposes, the eventual one of which was to convey funds to the residuary legatee. The lady left a son, who unfortunately being in an afflicted state of health, had appointed to him a curator bonis. One of the investments left at the lady's death was one of some Cape of Good Hope stock, the title of which is vouched by what is called an inscription, lodged in a London bank, and the terms of the inscription were in the names of the deceased lady and this afflicted son, and the survivor.

Two questions accordingly were mooted after the lady's death. The first question was whether this Cape of Good Hope stock was in bonis of the lady herself, and accordingly fell to the trustees to be distributed by them according to the terms of the settlement; or whether, by force of what I may call the destination in the investment, it went to the son by reason of his survivorship, and accordingly went to his curator bonis. The other question was whether it was the curator bonis' right and his duty to claim legitim against the mother's estate under the recent Act. But that question was complicated by certain terms of the father's settlement, which in a certain reading of them might be held to put the son to his election. Of course the contending parties on the one side and on the other in both of these questions were the curator bonis, as representing the afflicted son, and the trustees, or practically the residuary legatees, because it was upon them that the loss would fall, or to them the gain would accrue. The trustees very properly did the only thing they could do, which was to consult counsel, and they consulted counsel of the highest standing, namely the Dean of Faculty, and the Dean of Faculty gave them his advice upon the situation as it was. The curator bonis also independently consulted his counsel, and the result was not exactly the same, although I do not think that the opinions given very much differed. The trustees proceeded to take the next step, of a most sensible character. They tabled the opinion which they had got from the Dean of Faculty, and they said to the residuary legatees —"Now, what would you like us to do?"—because the outcome of the opinion, roughly speaking, was that upon one of the questions it was supposed that the residuary legatees had the better chance, and upon the other the worse; and there was, of course, the very practical proposal that instead of litigating and fighting these things out to the bitter end, it might be possible to make a compromise by setting the one against the other. Accordingly the trustees said—"What would you like us to do; in other words, would you allow us to compromise the question?" The residuary legatees did not give a decided answer to that, but said—"We should like to consult our own counsel." Eventually, after they had consulted their own counsel, there were attempts made at a settlement between the residuary legatees and the curator bonis, but unfortunately the advice which the residuary legatees had got in England was not eye to eye with the advice which the curator bonis had got, and consequently they could not effect a settlement. The next question was, how was it to be tried. Attempts were made to adjust a special case, but unfortunately the parties could not come to one view about the precise adjustment of the facts as regards the precise position of the document of inscription by which this stock was held, and that, of course, put an end to the special case, in which it is necessary that parties must be at one as to the facts. The residuary legatees next said to the trustees—"Well, then, lend us your names and we will raise an action." The trustees seem to have had some doubt about that, because their position in the action of claiming the stock must have been in the teeth of the opinion they had got, which told them they had no real claim to the stock. Accordingly, they said—"We should like to consult our counsel again."

The residuary legatees had got impatient, and without saying anything more they raised this action, in which they called as their true contradictor the curator bonis, and called the trustees for any interest they might have, and they put in a conclusion against the trustees for expenses, but only in the event of their appearing and opposing the conclusions thereof. Then the trustees did the only thing they could do, they went back to the Dean of Faculty, who advised them and said—"You have no reason, of course, to take any part in this matter upon the merits, but inasmuch as you are the people who are in possession of the facts to a great extent as to what has happened, you must go to the Court and lodge a formal defence, making a clean breast of everything that has happened." That the trustees did.

Now, my Lords, I do not mean to say that that was the only opinion which might have been given. As matter of fact, I think the Dean of Faculty might have advised them to make no appearance at all, and to wait until they were sent for. That would have been equally good advice to the advice given. But the advice given was not far different, and it was obviously very honest advice, and the trustees followed it. They accordingly put in a statement of facts, in which they stated all they knew, and they naturally sent counsel along with it. But that counsel took no part in the discussion on the questions of law which arose. These questions of law not being determined in the long-run without a proof, he did not even appear at the proof, and eventually the Lord Ordinary decided the question upon the merits. And now it is said, and it is said in the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, that the pursuer is entitled to expenses in so far as these expenses have been made greater by the appearance of the trustees. Now, the only way in which the pursuer has been hurt is that he has been made to print three or four more pages of the record than he would otherwise have had to print. Well, my Lords, de minimus as regards that. If that was done, it does not seem to me to make much difference whether you get it in the form of a statement of facts or whether you get it in the proof, as you certainly would have had to get it before the Lord Ordinary decided the case, because the Lord Ordinary could not possibly decide the case without hearing what the trustees had to say. That disposes of that part of the case.

Then the Lord Ordinary goes on to find that the trustees are not entitled to charge the expenses of their appearance against the trust estate, and that has been argued or supported by the learned counsel for the respondent here

1st Div.

Buckle and Another v. Kirk (Buckle's Curator) and Others.

The Lord President.

upon the view of the case of Anderson, 1901, 4 F. 96. That, I think, is an entire confusion. The case of Anderson is a decision of what I hope is perfectly well settled, which is that if trustees choose to fight beneficiaries upon the merits and are beaten, they are not to charge these expenses, which they have incurred by their unsuccessful appearance against them, against a share which goes to these beneficiaries. That is quite plain, and that, of course, has no application to the question of whether the trustees can charge against the estate a perfectly proper compearance—proper not because in itself it was proper, but because it was a compearance made by the trustees in consonance with the best advice they could get. Really, if trustees cannot go to the Dean of Faculty and follow his advice without having it afterwards said that they have done something improper and must forfeit their expenses and pay personally, nobody would be a trustee at all.

I cannot imagine how the Lord Ordinary came to any such result, and I have no hesitation in moving that your Lordships should recal that portion of the interlocutor. The respondents here might, if they had chosen, when they got the interlocutor, have said—"We won't enforce it." On the contrary, they have been too anxious to persuade us, through their junior counsel, that it was upon his motion that the interlocutor was granted, and the consequence is that the extra expense of printing the long correspondence must deservedly fall upon their own shoulders.

Lord M'Laren.—I concur. I think the Lord Ordinary has been rather strict in dealing with these trustees in regard to their appearance in Court, for they only appeared for the purpose of explaining that they had no interest in the decision. It is perhaps not always necessary, but it is often very useful, that trustees should appear and make such a statement, if they do not identify their case with that of one of the parties.

As to the correspondence, it is perhaps unfortunate that this case should have first been discussed at considerable length upon the correspondence and then discussed again in Court. But it is matter of common experience that cases begin with what is possibly an amicable correspondence, and the correspondence may afterwards become more hostile and lead to final disagreement. I cannot see that the trustees are specially responsible for this correspondence. I think that the real controversy was between the curator bonis and the residuary legatee, and I see no reason why a body of trustees who have no personal interests in the matter, and who seem to have been guided by the best advice of counsel they could get, should be subjected to the hardship of being obliged to pay expenses incurred for the benefit of the trust out of their own pockets, because that is what the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor comes to. I agree with your Lordship that that part of the interlocutor should be recalled.

380. Somerville and Others v. Commissioners for the Harbour and Docks of Leith.

Harbour — Dock — Charges—Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. cap. 177), sects. 58 and 60, and Schedule B—Special Charge Imposed by Harbour-Commissioners for Locking Vessels In or Out of Docks—Held That Vessels Entitled to Access To and Egress From Docks Free of Any Rates Other Than Rate Payable Under sect. 58 and Schedule B of Act of 1892, at All Times When Access and Egress Could be Safely Given by Means of Locks or Otherwise, but Without Prejudice to Powers of Harbour-Master to Give Directions Under Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. cap. 27), and Without Prejudice to Powers of Harbour Authority to Make Bye-Laws Under Harbour, Docks and Piers Clauses Act and Special Acts.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Dundas.

The facts of the case, the statutory enactments referred to, and the terms of the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, are sufficiently set forth in the previous report.

The Defenders reclaimed and argued: Under sect. 33 of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. cap. 27), the pursuers had a right of access to the docks. But that right was subject to the whole provisions of the Act of 1847, and of the special Act. Now under sect. 60 of the Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1892, the defenders were entitled to make charges for all services rendered and facilities afforded by them. Locking ships in and out was a facility for which the defenders were entitled to charge. In the ordinary case ships arriving at Leith were willing to wait until the locks were opened in the ordinary course of harbour management. By means of locking in and out, it was possible to add four hours per day to the time during which the pursuers' ships could enter or leave. Locking in and out imposed an extra strain on the locks, and involved the defenders in expense which they would not otherwise have incurred. Locking in and out, therefore, was a special service which the defenders were not bound to render, and for which they were entitled to make a special charge (Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1892, 55 & 56 Vict. cap. 177, sect. 60; Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. cap. 160, sect. 76), just as they were entitled to make a special charge for assigning special berths to regular traders (Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1875, sect. 60). To render the service without charging would be to give a preference to the pursuers. No doubt the defenders were not entitled to impose any rate which the statutes did not impose (Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1892, sect. 58, Schedules A, B, C, D, E). But they had not done so. What they had done was to make a charge for services rendered, and that was competent under sect. 60 of the Act of 1892. It was not necessary to proceed by way of bye-law. The matter was one of contract between the pursuers and the defenders, and procedure by way of bye-law was inappropriate (Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847, sects. 83–88; Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1875, sect. 71; Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1892, sect. 58). In any view the Lord Ordinary's judgment could not be supported. He had held that the pursuers had an absolute right of access, subject only to the conditions of safety and room. That was inconsistent with the defenders' rights as harbour authority, and in particular with the powers of regulating the mode of entry, etc., of ships conferred on the harbour-master by sect. 52 of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847. This was not a mere criticism of the form of the interlocutor. Any new qualification would go to the root of the Lord Ordinary's ground of judgment.

Argued for the Pursuers: The Leith Docks were a public undertaking—an opus manufactum constructed under statutory powers. Under sect. 33 of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847, the public (and the pursuers as members of the public) had a right of access to every part of the public undertaking on payment of the rates specified in sect. 58 of the Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1892. They were entitled to the use of the dock as it stood with all its natural advantages, and of course they must take it subject to all its natural disadvantages. In the present case the opus manufactum was the dock plus the lock. The locks were part of the undertaking which the defenders were bound to make available to the public on payment of the ordinary rates. The defenders' right under sect. 60 of the Act of 1892 was to make a special charge in respect of the services which the defenders were under no statutory obligation to render. Locking in and out, therefore, was not a service for which a special charge could be made. The defenders could not refuse to lock ships in and out, because that would be a refusal to use a part of a public undertaking for the purpose for which it was designed. The new charges were therefore ultra vires of the defenders. In any view, if the defenders had power to impose the charges complained of, they could only exercise that power by enacting a bye-law. In that case the pursuers would have an opportunity of stating their objections to the Sheriff. The pursuers' contention as to the unqualified nature of their right of access was not inconsistent with the defenders' rights as the harbour authority or the powers of the harbour-master under sect. 52 of the Act of 1847. While the pursuers had a right of access whenever it was safe and practicable, the exercise of that right was subject to the control of the defenders as the harbour authority.

The following is a list of the statutory enactments referred to:—Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. cap. 27), sects. 2, 3, 30, 33, 34, 35, 47, 51, 52, 83 to 88; Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. cap. 160), sects. 3, 4, 7, 41 (2) and (3), 52, 60, 71,75, 76; The Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. cap. 177), sects. 3, 58, 59, 60, Schedules A, B, C, D, and E.

The Court pronounced the following interlocutor:

"Refuse the reclaiming note; adhere to the . . . . interlocutor reclaimed against with the following addition thereto—viz. 'but without prejudice to the right of the harbour-master to give directions for all or any of the purposes set out in the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847, and also without prejudice to the right of the defenders to make bye-laws as allowed by the same Act or by either of the Special Acts,' and with the foregoing variation affirm the said interlocutor, reclaimed against and decern."

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—The harbour and docks of Leith are under the administration of a body of statutory Commissioners, whose powers and duties are regulated by two local Acts (of 1875 and 1892) with which is incorporated a public Act—the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act of 1847. By the latter Act, section 33, it is provided that "upon payment of the rates made payable by this and the special Act, and subject to the other provisions thereof, the harbour, dock and pier shall be open to all persons for the shipping and unshipping of goods and the embarking and landing of passengers." The rates here referred to, so far as applicable to rates on vessels, are those specified in section 58 of the special Act of 1892 and Schedule B appended thereto. It is proper to add that by section 59

2ND DIV.

Somerville and Others v. Commissioners for the Harbour and Docks of Leith.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.

of the same special Act the Commissioners have power from time to time to vary the rates thereby authorised to be levied, by reducing or raising the same to such an extent as they may deem expedient or necessary, under a certain restriction as to the amount of such increase, and with a proviso that such rates shall at all times be charged equally to all persons in respect of vessels of the same class or description; and also that before any increase on the rates shall take effect, at least twenty-one days' previous notice thereof shall be given in at least one newspaper published in Edinburgh or Leith. It is, further, proper to add that, by sect. 60 of the same special Act, power is given to the Commissioners "to make all reasonable charges for work done, services rendered, facilities afforded, and use of plant, machinery, or appliances provided by them for the despatch of business at the harbour and docks or the convenience of shipmasters, merchants and others concerned with the traffic thereat, in so far as such charges are not expressly provided for by this Act."

The pursuers are owners of a fleet of steamships trading regularly between Leith and ports in England and on the Continent. They complain of a certain resolution passed by the Commissioners on 8th September 1905, by which for the first time, as regards the three newest and largest docks in Leith, a change was attempted to be made in the practice of the Commissioners with respect to the admission of vessels to and from these docks, by limiting the locking in and out of vessels to two hours after high water, by imposing a charge of £2 (afterwards reduced to £1) against each vessel arranging to be locked in or out, and by making other less important charges. These resolutions are said to have been passed without notice in any newspaper, without being posted up as a rate in some conspicuous part of the harbour, and without having been embodied in any bye-law. On the whole matter it is pleaded that the Commissioners being bound, on a just construction of the statutes, to afford the pursuers' vessels access to and egress from the whole harbour and docks on payment of the statutory rates, are not entitled to make these new and unauthorised charges, and that the resolutions professing to allow them are illegal and ultra vires. The Lord Ordinary has sustained this view, and I think he is right. In pronouncing decree in terms of the first declaratory conclusion of the summons, his Lordship has adopted the final words of that conclusion: "And that at all times when access to and egress from the said harbour and docks can be given with safety, either by means of the said locks in the said harbour or otherwise, and when accommodation is available." That is a qualification in favour of the defenders; but they say there ought to be a further qualification, in order to save the right of the harbourmaster to give all lawful directions, and also the right of the defenders themselves to make bye-laws. It may be said that these rights are sufficiently secured by statute (particularly sections 52 and 83 of the Public Act of 1847). But Mr Clyde, for the pursuers, did not object to these rights being expressly reserved, and I think that our decree should contain some such additional words as these: "And without prejudice to the right of the harbour-master to give directions for all or any of the purposes set out in the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847, and also without prejudice to the right of the defenders to make bye-laws as allowed by the same Act or by either of the special Acts."

The defenders do not attempt to explain why the statutes give no express right to charge for locking vessels in or out, nor why it was not till 1905 that they themselves attempted to impose such a charge. They say a good deal about the additional expenditure which they will have to incur, if the pursuers' contention is given effect to, in wear and tear of dock gates, and in keeping a large staff of experienced men to work those gates. But they say nothing to displace the pursuers' argument upon the statutes, an argument which I think Mr Macmillan put very tersely when he mentioned that, once the pursuers had paid their rates under section 58, they were enfranchised of the whole harbour. At least the only counter-argument which the defenders urge upon the statutes is to refer to section 60 of the Special Act of 1892, which I have already recited. Now, the Lord Ordinary's criticism on section 60, with which I entirely agree, is that it deals, not with charges for "work done," or "services rendered," or "facilities afforded," or "use of plant, machinery or appliances provided by the Commissioners," but to special facilities which may be asked and received after the vessel has obtained due access to the harbour and docks, and for which (I may add) no charges are expressly provided by the Act. One has only to look at the schedules appended to the Act of 1892 to see how many different kinds of special facilities are afforded in those docks, for all of which there are special rates. I may only mention graving docks, cranes, rails, steelyards, and sheds for different kinds of goods. For all of these it is quite right that special rates should be provided, because only special ships require to make use of them. In like manner, according to the progress of mechanical invention, new kinds of appliances may come into use, for which it may be reasonable that the Commissioners should make a special charge, as, for instance, if they make a new installation of electric lighting in a particular part of the docks and allow its use for the convenience of merchants concerned with the traffic thereat. That is the kind of charge which section 60 contemplates, and not the use of a lock which is truly part of the dock accommodation, and is intended for "all persons" who may frequent the docks on payment of the scheduled rates.

If the Lord Ordinary is right as to the first declaratory conclusion, it was not contended that the rest of the interlocutor could be successfully challenged, and I am therefore for adhering (with the addition which I have suggested), with expenses.

Lord Ardwall. — I agree with the opinion which has been delivered by Lord Stormonth-Darling. There is certainly an appearance of equity in the defenders' resolution of 8th September 1905, because undoubtedly the entrance or egress of vessels to and from the docks by means of the locks after the lock gates have been closed for the time imposes work upon the defenders' servants beyond that which is necessary when the locks are open for three hours before each high tide, when of course vessels pass in and out without causing any more trouble than is involved in the regular opening of the dock gates previous to high tide once every twelve hours or thereby. But this fact does not necessarily entitle the defenders to make an extra charge in respect of the passage of the vessel in or out of the docks by means of the locks after the level of the water in the outer harbour has fallen below the level of the water in the docks. They must shew that the pursuers are obtaining some privilege over and above the rights conferred on them by statute in return for payment of harbour dues, or otherwise they must shew that there is a special provision in the Harbour Acts entitling them to make the extra charge of £1 per vessel.

In considering this case it must be observed that the locks and gates are part of the harbour works specially authorised to be made in virtue of the powers contained in the Acts empowering their construction just as much as are the docks themselves, and the water lying between the gates of the locks is as much part of the harbour as the water in the outer harbour or the water in the docks. This being so, I think it follows that all vessels are entitled to the use of the locks and the water therein on payment of the statutory harbour dues entitling them to the use of the harbour in terms of sect. 33 of the Harbours Act of 1847.

The defenders obtained powers to make these docks and locks, presumably with the view to making the harbour of Leith more available for commerce and more attractive to shipping, and, inter alia, to shipping consisting of steamers sailing as regular liners at stated periods to and from Continental ports; and I think it is contrary to the policy of the Harbour Acts as well as to sound considerations of public policy that the advantage afforded to steamers of a certain size of being able to get in and out of the docks at any suitable state of the tide should form the subject of a special impost. I am of opinion that it must be held that such extra labour as may be necessary for working the dock gates is labour necessary to render available the ordinary harbour waterways, and therefore should not form the basis of a claim for an extra charge on vessels taking advantage of the convenience afforded by the locks.

Somerville and Others v. Commissioners for the Harbour and Docks of Leith.

Lord Ardwall.

Defenders' counsel, however, founded strongly upon sect. 76 of the Leith Harbour and Docks Act 1875, and sect. 60 of the subsequent Act of 1892, which are in similar terms, and which authorise certain charges to be made. In my opinion these sections do not apply to a charge such as the present, but to charges for work done, services rendered, and facilities afforded, and the use of plant after a vessel has got to her berth in the harbour, and do not apply to the use of the harbour itself or any of the waterways forming part thereof. I accordingly think that the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary is well founded, but I agree with the opinion that both the conclusion of the summons and the portion of the interlocutor are too wide when they declare that the pursuers are entitled to have access and egress "at all times when access to and egress from the said harbour and docks can be given with safety, either by means of locks in the said harbour or otherwise."

Nothing is said in this case as to the engineering questions involved in the use of the locks for the passage of vessels when the level of the water in the outer harbour has fallen to a certain number of feet below the level of the water in the respective docks, or whether the locks may be safely used at all states of the tide provided there is water sufficient in the outer harbour for the passage of vessels, and so on. These matters are not before us, and in fact it was not until the debate had proceeded a considerable length that the Court were given to understand that there was really any question at issue except the right of the defenders to make the extra charge of £1 for the right of passage through the locks when they were not open at any rate. I accordingly concur with Lord Stormonth-Darling that there should be a qualification inserted in the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor in case of possible difficulties in the working of the locks at all times of the day and night.

Special Case.

The late James Adamson Beveridge, Esquire of Brucefield, Dunfermline, died at Edinburgh on 16th November 1887, leaving a trust disposition and settlement, dated 20th April 1883, and two relative codicils, dated respectively 13th September 1883 and 10th October 1884. By his trust disposition and settlement and first codicil, the deceased conveyed his whole estate and effects, heritable and moveable, to, inter alios, James Beveridge, farmer, Crombie, in the parish of Torryburn, and Robert Methven Heron, Fife Potteries, Gallatown, near Kirkcaldy, as trustees for the purposes therein mentioned. By the trust disposition and settlement, the testator directed his trustees to convey the residue of his estate to his sister Elizabeth Mary Beveridge, wife of Dr Alexander Watt Beveridge, Edinburgh.

By the second codicil, dated 10th October 1884, the testator, inter alia . . . . left to the said Robert Methven Heron, and others, and the survivors and survivor of them, the liferent of a sum of £20,000, free of legacy duty, and directed his trustees to set aside and invest in their names, for behoof of the said Robert Methven Heron and others, for liferent use only, the said sum of £20,000 on the securities authorised by the Acts of Parliament relating to the investment of trust funds . . . . and on the death of the survivor, the said capital sum of £20,000 was to revert to and form part of the residue of his means and estate. In consequence of the deaths of the other parties interested, the sole right to the liferent vested in Robert Methven Heron as at 2nd September 1896.

In November 1895 Erskine Beveridge of Brucefield was assumed as a trustee. James Beveridge died on 14th February 1903, and Robert Methven Heron on 23rd June 1906, and at the date of the case Erskine Beveridge was the sole surviving trustee.

The first party to the case was the said Erskine Beveridge, the sole acting and surviving trustee of the said deceased James Adamson Beveridge. The second parties were the executors of the said deceased James Beveridge, and the third parties are the trustees of the said deceased Robert Methven Heron, both of whom were trustees of the said James Adamson Beveridge. The fourth party was the said Mrs Elizabeth Mary Beveridge, the residuary legatee of the said James Adamson Beveridge.

At Whitsunday 1897 it became necessary to find a new investment for the sum of £9560, a portion of the liferented funds. The trustees, in March 1897, proposed to invest this sum in three per cent. stock about to be issued by the Burgh of Dunfermline. The fourth party refused to consent to the proposed investment. Ultimately the trustees resolved to make the investment proposed, and for that purpose they entered into an arrangement with the liferenter, Robert Methven Heron, which was set forth in a letter of guarantee which was granted on 21st April 1897 by Robert M. Heron in favour of the trustees as follows:

To

The Trustees of the late James Adamson Beveridge, Esquire of Brucefield.

Gentlemen,

I, Robert Methven Heron, sole surviving liferenter of the fund of £20,000 directed by the late Mr Beveridge, the truster, to be held in trust for the liferent use of me [and others], and the survivors and survivor of us, approve of your proposal to invest the sum of £9649, 4s., part of the capital of the said fund, in the purchase, at the price of £102 per cent. (that being the minimum price of issue), of £9460 of the redeemable three per cent. stock about to be issued by the Corporation of Dunfermline; and I further agree to accept interest on the said sum of £9460 at the rate of two and three-quarters per cent. per annum—the difference between such interest and the interest payable by the Corporation to be set aside by you as a sinking fund to meet the premium of £189, 4s., being the difference between the amount payable for the stock and the par value at which the same is redeemable, or such proportion thereof as may be lost when the said stock falls to be realised, or has been redeemed by the Corporation, such sinking fund, in the event of the said stock not being realised at a loss, to be payable to me or my heirs: And in the event of the said sinking fund not being sufficient to meet any loss that may be made on the realisation or redemption of the stock, I hereby agree and declare that the deficiency shall form a charge against my estate.

The special case stated:

10. The said £9460 of Dunfermline Corporation Stock was purchased by the trustees at Whitsunday 1897, at 102 per cent., the whole price being paid out of the trust funds, and the dividends received on said stock (less the deduction hereinafter referred to) were regularly remitted to Mr Heron by the factor and law agent of the trustees, accompanied by a statement shewing the details thereof. These remittances continued to be made up to the term of Witsunday 1906, being the last half-yearly term before Mr Heron's death. From each half-yearly remittance of the said dividends, ¼ per cent. was deducted and retained by the factor and law agent, in accordance with the terms of the guarantee by Mr Heron referred to. . . . At the date of Mr Heron's death, the sinking fund accumulated from such deductions amounted to £213, 18s. 11d., including bank deposit interest. This sum is more than sufficient to meet the premium of 2 per cent. originally paid on the stock, which amounted to £189, 4s.

11. The said stock was issued by the Burgh of Dunfermline under and in terms of the Local Authorities Loans (Scotland) Act 1891. The dividends thereon are secured upon rates or taxes levied by the said Corporation under authority of Act of Parliament, and the stock itself is redeemable at par on 15th May 1947, or, in the option of the Corporation, at the term of Whitsunday 1917, or any term of Whitsunday or Martinmas thereafter, on three months' notice to the holder. The whole stock falls to be redeemed on or before Whitsunday 1947. Since the date when the investment was made, it has fallen in value in common with other Corporation stocks. At Mr Heron's death the market price was 89½, and it is now quoted at 88⅛. The total depreciation at the present time, on the price originally paid, is thus £1123, 7s. 6d., or, deducting the amount of the original premium, £934, 3s. 6d.

12. In consequence of the death of the said Robert Methven Heron, the capital of the said sum of £20,000, liferented by him, now falls to be paid over to the fourth party, as residuary legatee of the said deceased James Adamson Beveridge. In the circumstances above set forth, she has intimated that she holds the first party, as trustee of the said deceased James Adamson Beveridge, and the second and third parties, as representatives of deceased trustees of the said James Adamson Beveridge, liable for the whole of the depreciation on the said Dunfermline Corporation Stock; the first, second and third parties agree to pay to the fourth party the premium of two per cent. originally paid on the stock, amounting to £189, 4s., but they refuse to pay the rest of the amount by which the stock has been depreciated.

The following Questions of Law were stated:

1. Are the first, second, and third parties jointly and severally liable to make good to the fourth party the difference between the redemption value of the said Dunfermline Corporation Stock and the amount which it yields on realisation?

2. In the event of the first question being answered in the affirmative, are the third parties bound to relieve the first and second parties of such liability?

The Local Authorities Loans (Scotland) Act 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. cap. 34) provides:—

Sect. 44 (1) Trustees or other persons for the time being authorised to invest money in the mortgages, debentures, or debenture stock of any railway or other company, shall, unless the contrary is provided by the instrument authorising the investment, have the same power of investing money in stock issued under the provisions of this Act . . . . as they have of investing it in the mortgages, debentures, or debenture stock aforesaid.

(2) Provided that when two or more persons are successively interested in money left subject to a trust, no investment thereof shall be made in stock at a price exceeding the redemption value of the stock, unless the instrument creating the trust shall otherwise expressly provide.

It was not disputed that the trustees were authorised to invest money on the debentures of a railway company.

Argued for the First and Second Parties: (1) Under sect. 44 of the Local Authorities Loans (Scotland) Act 1891, the trustees were entitled to make the investment in question provided they did not pay more than the redemption value of the stock out of the trust funds. Here they had not paid more than the redemption value, because the difference between the redemption value and the price paid to the purchaser was paid by the liferenter. The case was substantially the same as if the trustees had bought the stock above redemption value in the market and had sold it to the trust estate at redemption value. The investment therefore was valid. (2) If the investment were invalid, then the guarantee on its sound construction covered all loss which might result to the trustees from the investment — not only the difference between the cost price and the redemption value, but also the difference between the redemption value and the present price of the stock.

Argued for the Third Parties: (1) On the question as to the validity of the investment, these parties adopted the argument of the first and second parties as to the construction of section 44. Further, the trustees had an unqualified power to make the investment in question under sect. 3 (a) of the Trusts Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. cap. 42). That enactment swept away the proviso in sect. 44. (2) The guarantee should be construed favourably to the cautioner (Bell, Prin., sects. 251, 285; Baird v. Corbett, 1835, 14 S. 41; Napier & Co. v. Bruce, 1840, 22 D. 556, affd. 1 Bell, App. 78); it covered only the difference between the actual price and the redemption value.

Argued for the Fourth Party: The investment in question was absolutely forbidden by sect. 44 if the trustees had to pay more than the redemption value. Here they had done so, for the whole price came out of the trust funds. The investment was therefore invalid under sect. 44. The Trusts Act 1898 could not help the trustees, because it had not been passed at the date of the purchase.

The Court answered the first question in the affirmative and the second in the negative.

2ND DIV.

Beveridge's Trustee v. Beveridge.

Lord Low.

Lord Low.—At the time when the testamentary trustees of the deceased Mr James Adamson Beveridge invested part of the trust funds in Dunfermline Corporation Stock, their only authority for so doing was the power conferred upon trustees to invest trust funds in such stocks by the 44th section of the Local Authorities Loans (Scotland) Act 1891. The power conferred by the statute is, however, subject to the following proviso: "Provided that when two or more persons are successively interested in money left subject to a trust, no investment thereof shall be made in stock at a price exceeding the redemption value of the stock, unless the instrument creating the trust shall otherwise expressly provide."

It is admitted that that proviso was applicable to the investment in question, because there were two or more persons—liferenters and fiars—successively interested in the money, and there was nothing in the trust deed which authorised the trustees to go beyond the powers conferred by the statute. Now it appears to me that the language of the proviso is unambiguous and imperative. "No investment shall be made in stock at a price exceeding the redemption value of the stock." Nothing could be clearer than these words, and the fact is that the trustees did invest trust funds in stock of the kind referred to in the statute at a price of 102 per cent., while the redemption value was only 100 per cent. It is, therefore, clear that upon the face of the transaction the investment was one which the statute declares trustees shall not make, and was therefore ultra vires. The trustees, however, say that although the full price was in the first instance paid out of trust funds, they made an arrangement with the liferenter whereby the excess of the price was restored to the trust estate, with the result that ultimately, and before the expiry of the liferent, the investment had cost the trust estate only 100 per cent., or the redemption value. They argued that the plain object of the proviso was to prevent trustees expending more money in the purchase of stock than the ultimate fiar would get back when the stock came to be redeemed, and that as the trust estate had in fact only been diminished by the investment to the extent of the redemption value, the mischief struck at by the proviso had not arisen, and they (the trustees) could not be held to have contravened the enactment.

The argument is plausible, but I do not think that it is sound. The trustees unquestionably invested trust funds in the purchase of the stock at a price exceeding the redemption value, and they must, in my opinion, take the consequences. It seems to me that the arrangement which they made with the liferenter was for their own protection, and cannot be pleaded against the residuary legatee, seeing that not only was she no party to the arrangement, but that she expressly refused to consent to trust funds being invested in the stock at £102.

Accordingly the trustees are, in my opinion, in the position of having made an investment of trust funds which was ultra vires of them, and consequently they are liable to restore to the trust estate the loss which it has thereby sustained. The first question therefore must, in my judgment, be answered in the affirmative.

The only other question is whether the late Mr Heron—who was the last of the liferenters of the fund in question—by a letter of guarantee which he granted to Mr Beveridge's trustees, became bound to make good any loss which might be sustained on the investment, whatever that loss might be, or only to the extent of the premium—that is to say, the amount by which the price paid for the stock exceeded the redemption value.

The answer to that question depends upon the construction of the letter. In it, after approving of the proposal to invest part of the trust funds in the Dunfermline Stock at the price of £102, Mr Heron agreed to accept interest on the money invested at the rate of $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. only, and that the balance of the interest actually paid should be set aside by the trustees to form a sinking fund to meet the premium, "or" (I now quote the precise words used) "such proportion thereof as may be lost when the said stock falls to be realised, or has been redeemed by the Corporation, such sinking fund, in the event of the said stock not being realised at a loss, to be payable to me and my heirs."

I think that the words "when the said stock falls to be realised" refer to the expiry of the liferent, when the sum invested fell to be paid to the residuary legatee. That was the event which happened, because Mr Heron died in 1906, which was prior to the date when the stock might be redeemed. At Mr Heron's death the sinking fund was more than sufficient to meet the difference between the price at which the stock had been purchased and the redemption value. Accordingly, if there had been nothing more in the agreement than the clause which I have quoted, I would not, I think, have been doubtful that the trustees could only have claimed the sinking fund to the extent of the difference between the purchase price and the redemption value, and that the balance would have belonged to Mr Heron's representatives.

The letter, however, contains another clause in the following terms: "And in the event of the said sinking fund not being sufficient to meet any loss that may be made on the realisation or redemption of the stock, I hereby agree and declare that the deficiency shall form a charge against my estate."

The whole difficulty appears to me to arise from the use of the words "any loss." If the expression had been "such loss" it would, I think, have been clear that what was meant was the loss of the premium or any part of it, because that is the only loss which is referred to in the previous part of the letter. When, however, the letter is read as a whole, I think that it becomes sufficiently plain that that was truly the extent of the obligation. It is evident that the letter proceeded upon the view (as I think an erroneous view) that if the premium was restored to the trust estate, the investment would not be challengeable under the statute. Accordingly a sinking fund was established for the purpose of restoring the premium out of surplus interest, but in order to meet the possible event of Mr Heron's death before the sinking fund had attained the requisite amount, he came under an obligation that any sum required, in addition to the sinking fund, to make good loss of premium should be a charge upon his estate. I do not think that it can be disputed that that was the scheme of the letter, and therefore I am of opinion that the words "any loss" must be construed (as I think they are quite capable of being construed) as meaning any loss to the extent of that which alone was the subject-matter of the letter, namely, the premium.

I am therefore for answering the second question in the negative.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—I concur in the opinion of Lord Low.

Lord Ardwall.—I concur in the opinion delivered by Lord Low; but I confess I have found the case to be one of some difficulty. I think it is obvious that the intention of the proviso of subsection 2 of section 44 of the Local Authorities Loans (Scotland) Act 1891 was to prevent loss falling to the ultimate beneficiary when the stock came to be redeemed at par value in cases were persons were successively interested in an investment. Indeed, so far as I can see, the statute can have no other object, because it authorises the purchase of the same stocks at par value. Now, if any stock happens to stand at more than par value, the only inference to be drawn from that would be that it is a very good security, and commands a premium because of its superiority to other stocks of the same description. Therefore, so far as the safety of trust investments is concerned, there is no reason whatever for the provision of the subsection in question.

But I think it must be held that in dealing with statutes a court of law is not entitled, in considering a prohibition contained in a statute, to enquire what the object of the prohibition is, and should the object be the prevention of a loss of some kind, to hold that if the possibility of that loss is obviated the prohibition of the statute may be disregarded. Such a method of reasoning, if generally applied, would make wild work with the application of statutes, and, in my opinion, is not permissible.

I think that in this case we must confine ourselves to a consideration of the plain question whether the investment made by the trustees in Dunfermline Corporation Stock was an investment which as trustees they were entitled to make at the time, and at the price they did. To this there can be only one answer, to the effect that it was not. The result is that the trustees' actings must be held to have been ultra vires, and that they are liable for all loss resulting therefrom, and are not entitled, in response to the fourth party's request for payment of £20,000, to tender as part thereof the investment in question, but that they are bound to replace in the trust the price originally paid for the said stock.

I therefore concur in holding that the first question should be answered in the affirmative.

With regard to the second question, I think it is quite clear upon the facts stated in the case that at the time the letter of guarantee of date 21st April 1897 was granted, neither Mr Beveridge's trustees nor Mr Heron had in contemplation any other possible loss than the difference between the par value of the stock and the price paid for it, namely, £102, and that the letter of guarantee was intended to cover only that loss. The clause of obligation, it is true, is ambiguous, but I think it is capable of being read as limited to the loss I have just referred to; and the intention of the parties being, as I think, evident from the rest of the letter of guarantee, as well as from the facts agreed on in the case, I think the second question ought to be answered in the negative.

382. Lindsay v. Stewart M'Glashen & Son Limited.

Workmen's Compensation Act 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. cap. 37), sect. 7 (2)—Dependants—Wife and Pupil Child Living Apart From Deceased—Deceased Not Contributing to Support of Wife and Child—Circumstances Where Held Wife and Child Not Dependent on Deceased's Earnings at the Time of His Death.

Stated Case under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897.

This was an arbitration in the Sheriff Court at Edinburgh under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897, in which compensation was claimed from Stewart M'Glashen & Son Ltd., sculptors, Warriston Road, Edinburgh, on account of the death of William Jamieson Lindsay, 15 Cumberland Street, Edinburgh. The claimant was Mrs Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay, his widow, for herself, and as tutor and administrator in law for their pupil child, Isabella Walker Lindsay.

Lindsay v. Stewart M'Glashen & Son Ltd.

The Sheriff-Substitute (Guy) refused compensation, and, at the request of the claimant, stated a case.

The case stated:

(1) On 13th June 1907 the said William Jamieson Lindsay was a workman in the employment of the respondents, and on that day he met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment with them at their yard at Warriston Road, Edinburgh, which is a factory within the meaning of said Act, by being crushed against a wall of the yard by a block of stone which was being raised by a crane, and he died almost instantaneously; (2) the appellant, Mrs Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay, is the widow of the said William Jamieson Lindsay, and her pupil child, the said Isabella Walker Lindsay, who was born on 8th January 1896, is the only child of the deceased and her . . . .; (4) the deceased and the appellant, the said Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay, were married on 26th August 1895; (5) that in December 1895, and shortly before the birth of the said Isabella Walker Lindsay, the said Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay left her husband, and went to reside with her mother and brothers in Dundee; (6) that the said Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay stated her reason for leaving her husband to be his cruelty, but she led no evidence corroborative of this, and she took no proceedings against her husband; (7) since leaving her husband the appellant has worked as a weaver, and by this means, and with assistance from her mother and brothers, has maintained herself and her said pupil child, born on 8th January 1896, and an illegitimate child, to which she gave birth on or about 30th January 1903; (8) that since the separation neither the said Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay nor her daughter, Isabella Walker Lindsay, received any aliment or support from the deceased; (9) that at the date of the said William Jamieson Lindsay's death neither the said Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay nor her child, the said Isabella Walker Lindsay, was in fact dependent, either wholly or partially, upon his earnings

On 27th December 1907 I issued my award refusing the claim for compensation by the said Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay and her pupil child, Isabella Walker Lindsay, with expenses against the former; and I found in law that, according to the facts before stated, the appellants were not dependants within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897.

The Question of Law for the opinion of the Court was: Whether the said Mrs Alexandrina Allan M'Inroy or Lindsay and her pupil child, or either of them, were wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the deceased at the time of his death, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897?

Argued for the Appellant: A husband was under a legal obligation to support his wife (Main Colliery Co. Ltd. v. Davies [1900], A.C. 358. There was a presumption of law that a wife was dependent on her husband's earnings (Cunningham v. M'Gregor & Co., 1901, 3 F. 775; Sneddon v. Addie & Sons' Collieries Ltd. 1904, 6 F. 992; Coulthard v. Consett Iron Co. Ltd. [1905], 2 K.B. 869; Williams v. Ocean Coal Co. Ltd. [1907], 2 K.B. 422; Queen v. Clarke [1906], 2 I.R. 135). The dictum of the Lord President in Baird & Co. Ltd. v. Birsztan (1906, 8 F. 438), was inconsistent with the other authorities, and was unsound. In the present case the presumption was not overcome. It was not enough that the wife was living apart, that the deceased had not, in fact, contributed to her support, and that the wife had picked up a livelihood by casual labour eked out by the charity of her relatives (Cunningham v. M'Gregor & Co., cit.; Sneddon v. Addie & Sons' Collieries Ltd., cit.; Williams v. Ocean Coal Co. Ltd., cit.). To overcome the presumption it was necessary that the wife should have ceased to rely on her husband for support, as in the case of Turners Ltd. v. Whitefield (1904, 6 F. 822). There was no such element in the present case, and accordingly the wife was entitled to compensation. Addie & Sons' Collieries Ltd. v. Trainer (1904, 7 F. 115) was distinguishable. In any view, the child was entitled to compensation. While the wife might discharge her claim by looking elsewhere for support, a pupil child could not discharge its claim. The case of the child was therefore even stronger than that of the wife.

Argued for the Respondents: The question was whether the wife was in fact dependent on her husband's earnings at the time of his death (Moyes v. William Dixon Ltd., 1905, 7 F. 386). There was no presumption of law requiring to be rebutted by evidence (Baird & Co. Ltd. v. Birsztan, cit.). No doubt it was not necessary that the husband should have been supporting his wife at the precise date of his death. But the wife must at least be looking to her husband for support, and here it was plain that she was not looking to her husband. So far as one case could be ruled by another, the present case was ruled by Turners Ltd. v. Whitefield (cit.). The cases relied on by the appellant (Cunningham v. M'Gregor & Co., cit.; Sneddon v. Addie & Sons' Collieries Ltd., cit.; Coulthard v. Consett Iron Co. Ltd., cit.; Williams v. Ocean Coal Co. Ltd., cit.) were distinguishable. They were all cases where the wife was in fact relying on her husband for support. There was no distinction between the case of the child and the case of the wife (Addie & Sons' Collieries Ltd. v. Trainer, cit.; Rees v. Penrikyber Navigation Colliery Co. [1903], 1 K.B. 259). The question was exactly the same—whether the child was dependent on the deceased's earnings at the time of the death.

Here it was plain that the child was not dependent.

The Court answered the question of law in the negative.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—So far as one case can be an authority for the decision of another, I think that the nearest case to the present is the case of Turners Limited v. Whitefield (6 F. 822). In that case a wife had been living apart from her husband for fourteen years, and was not, in fact, supported by him at the time of his death, but by an illegitimate son. In these circumstances it was held that she was not dependent on her husband's earnings, and was not entitled to compensation. Mr Orr has pointed out that in that case there was no formal severing of the family tie such as by a deed of separation; but neither is there here. In fact, the separation took place by the wife leaving the husband and going to reside with her mother and brothers in Dundee about four months after the marriage, and about eleven years and a half before the husband met with his fatal accident in the respondents' works in Edinburgh, which occurred on 13th June 1907. The Sheriff does not say that the wife was in desertion. She stated her reason for leaving her husband to be his cruelty, but she led no evidence corroborative of this, and she took no proceedings against her husband. The Sheriff had therefore no means of judging whether her reasons were good or bad. But whatever they were, all we know is that she left him voluntarily, and that at the time of his death they had been living apart since December 1895, a period of time nearly corresponding to the period of separation in Turners Limited v. Whitefield. That being so, I take the case simply upon the footing that the wife's action in leaving her husband was voluntary and unexplained. Shortly after the separation she gave birth to a child by the husband, and on 30th January 1903 she gave birth to an illegitimate child. Since leaving her husband the appellant has worked as a weaver, and by this means, and with the assistance of her mother and brothers, she has maintained herself and her two children.

The Sheriff has found that since the separation neither the wife nor the child has received any aliment or support from the deceased, and that at the date of his death neither the wife nor the child was in fact dependent on his earnings. Now the question which the Sheriff has decided by the first of these findings was a question purely of fact, but the question on which the second finding was pronounced was a question of mixed fact and law, and I quite concede that that question can be brought before this Court, because it is ultimately a question on the construction of the Act, and therefore a question of law. The Sheriff seems to have been satisfied that the claimants were persons who would have been entitled to sue for solatium and damages in respect of the death of the workman. But he had also to consider the question whether they were wholly or in part dependent on the earnings of the deceased, and he has decided that question by holding that they were not so dependent at the time of his death. There I am of opinion that the Sheriff is right, or, to put the matter as it would be put in England, that he has properly directed himself. I think that there is no flaw in the conclusion which he has drawn from the facts he has found.

A number of cases were cited to us which I do not propose to go over. I proceed on the broad facts of the case—on the fact that the spouses voluntarily separated nearly twelve years ago, on the fact that the husband was never made liable (because, as I gather, he was never asked) to support his wife and child, and on the further fact that he did not contribute a single penny to their support down to the day of his death. Now, in these circumstances, can it be said that the Sheriff was wrong in the conclusion to which he has come? I think not.

It was argued by Mr Orr that the husband was liable in law to support his wife. Now it is true that he might, in certain circumstances, have been called on. But does the husband's legal obligation affect the matter at all? I agree with the opinions expressed by Lord Adam and Lord Kinnear in the case of Turners Limited v. Whitefield, that the fact of the husband being under a legal obligation to support his wife does not alter the fact that she was not dependent on him at the time of his death. Lord Adam says: "The facts found shew that she separated from her husband some fourteen years ago, when she cast in her lot with some illegitimate children of her own, by whom, and partially by her own exertions, she was being maintained at the time of the death. I do not think that the fact that the husband was under a legal obligation to support her makes any difference. It does not alter the fact that she was not dependent on his earnings at the time of his death." Lord Kinnear agrees with Lord Adam, for he says: "I agree with what has been said by Lord Adam, that the question does not depend merely upon the legal liability of a husband to support his wife, because the section in question requires that two conditions shall have been satisfied. In the first place, it is provided that the person said to be a dependant shall be a person 'entitled, according to the law of Scotland, to sue the employer for damages or solatium in respect of the death of the workman.' That condition is satisfied when the woman claiming compensation is in the position of a wife who is legally entitled to be supported by her husband. But then the statute goes on to prescribe as a second condition that the claimant must be such a person among those already described as was 'wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death.' I do not think it necessary to define the word 'dependent' more exactly than the statute defines it. But I am not prepared to say that its meaning is exhausted when it is said to cover those who were in fact supported by the deceased workman up to the time of his death." I agree with every word of that; I think that the Sheriff was right in holding that while the claimants here answer the description of persons "entitled, according to the law of Scotland, to sue the employer for damages or solatium in respect of the death of the workman," they do not, either of them, answer the description of persons dependent on the earnings of the deceased at the time of his death.

Lord Low.—The deceased William Lindsay was in the employment of Stewart M'Glashen & Son Ltd., sculptors, and on 13th June 1907 he met with an accident, arising out of and in the course of his employment, which resulted in his death. In consequence of that his widow, for herself and for their pupil child, claims compensation, and whether they are entitled to compensation or not depends upon whether, in the language of the seventh section of the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897, they were wholly or in part dependent on the earnings of the deceased at the time of his death. The material facts are these. The claimant Mrs Lindsay and the deceased were married in August 1895. She voluntarily, whether for good reason or not we do not know, left her husband in December 1895, and has never lived with him since. After she left him, namely, in January 1896, the child for which she now claims compensation was born, and, as I have said, Lindsay was not killed till June 1907. The Sheriff-Substitute tells us that when Mrs Lindsay left her husband in December 1895 she went to reside with her mother and brothers in Dundee, and that since leaving her husband she has worked as a weaver, and by that means, and with the assistance of her mother and brothers, with whom she was living in family, she has maintained herself and her pupil child. Further, since the separation neither she nor her daughter have received any aliment or support from the deceased. Now I think that as regards the widow the case is a very plain one. As I have said, she voluntarily left her husband some eleven years before his death. She never received, or apparently asked, any aliment from him during that period, but supported herself. Now I think if a wife voluntarily leaves her husband and chooses her own line of life, and supports herself by her own earnings, it is impossible to say that in any reasonable sense she is either wholly or partially dependent on his earnings at the time of his death, so I have no doubt that the Sheriff-Substitute is right in his view about the widow.

The case of the child is more difficult, because a pupil child cannot choose his own line of life, and cannot earn his own livelihood, and there is no doubt that in one sense every pupil child may be said to be dependent on its father, because the father is under an obligation to support it. Now if a father deserted a pupil child and refused to support it, and if that child were kept from starvation only by charity from others, I would have no hesitation in saying that although the father was not in fact supporting it at the time of his death, yet the child was, within the meaning of the statute, dependent on the earnings of the father. That, however, is an extreme case in one direction, and I think an equally extreme case in the other direction might be supposed; for instance, if a child had independent means which were administered by trustees, and which were ample for his support, and by which he was in fact supported, it is plain that he would not be dependent on the earnings of his father. But between such extreme cases there may be a great variety of circumstances where the question whether or not a pupil child was dependent on the earnings of the father at the time of his death would be attended with considerable difficulty. It is perhaps impossible to lay down a rule which will be applicable to every case, but I am inclined to think that as good a test as can be found is that given by Lord Moncreiff in the case of Cunninghan v. Macgregor & Co. (3 F. 775). That was the case of a wife, but I think the case of a child is substantially the same, and what Lord Moncreiff said was that the question whether a wife was or was not entitled to claim compensation depended on whether she had at her husband's death means of support of a more or less permanent and substantial character. Now, applying that test here, we find that this pupil child had been supported by his mother for very nearly eleven years prior to the father's death, which gives the support the character of substantial permanency, and there is nothing to suggest that at the time of the father's death the support which the pupil child was receiving had come to be of a precarious character. I am therefore of opinion that in the case of the child, as in the case of the mother, the determination of the Sheriff-Substitute was right, and accordingly I concur that the question of law should be answered in the negative.

Lord Ardwall.—I concur with both your Lordships. This is a Compensation Act, and its purpose is to give compensation to workmen and also to dependants of workmen who may have suffered by their deaths or disability. Now, that being the purpose of the Act, we must start with this, that it is only actual loss for which compensation is to be awarded and not prospective or possible loss, and accordingly the Act provides that the dependants who are to be entitled to compensation are such of the persons entitled according to the law of Scotland to sue the employer for damages or solatium in respect of the death of the workman "as were wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death." Now it appears to me that that definition excludes altogether the idea that a legal right to support from a person killed by an accident on the part of a person surviving him can by itself constitute the latter a dependant of the deceased in the sense of the Act; it concentrates the attention of any Court which has to decide a case like the present on these points: first, whether the person claiming compensation was in fact dependent upon the earnings of the workman; and second, whether he or she was so at the time of the workman's death. Now it has been decided in the case of the Main Coal Company in the House of Lords, and in the cases of Turner, Baird, and Moyes in the First Division of this Court, that the question raised by this definition is primarily one of fact, and if I may humbly say so, I think that that is the true view of the matter. Of course every question of fact under a statute may become a question of law in so far as a question may arise whether certain circumstances bring a person within a certain category laid down in the statute; for instance, whether certain facts render or do not render a person a dependant within the meaning of the Act, and so far that may be said to be a question of mixed fact and law, but being so, it is primarily a matter of fact that has to be decided. Now after what your Lordships have said, I do not think I need to say more, except that I desire to express my concurrence with what was said by the Lord President on the construction of this Act in the case of Baird (8 F. 438), and in particular I concur in his criticism of Lord Young's judgment in the case of Sneddon v. Addie.

I accordingly agree with your Lordships that we should affirm the judgment of the Sheriff-Substitute.—14*th March* 1908.

Expenses—Payment a Condition of Proceeding — Petition Incompetent Under Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. cap. 79), sect. 86—Dismissed With Expenses—New Petition Presented—Consideration Superseded Until Expenses in Former Petition Paid.

Bill Chamber. Lord Guthrie. Somervell v. Tait and Others.

(See report of former petition, supra, p. 588.)

In October 1907 James Somervell of Sorn, an undischarged bankrupt, brought a petition under section 86 of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1856, in which he prayed the Court to ordain the Trustee and Commissioners in his bankruptcy, and also certain other parties, whom he alleged to be identified with the Commissioners and responsible for their actings, to account for their intromissions with his estate and to make payment to him of "a sum of £150,000, or such other sum as may be ascertained in the proceedings to follow hereon to be the true sum due to the petitioner."

Section 86 of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. cap. 79) enacts as follows:

> The judicial factor, the trustee and commissioners, shall be amenable to the Lord Ordinary . . . . at the instance of any party interested, to account for their intromissions and management by petition served on them.

The Lord Ordinary held that this petition was incompetent, in so far as concluding for a payment to the petitioner. The petitioner was given an opportunity to amend, but refused to do so. The Lord Ordinary therefore dismissed the petition and found the petitioner liable in expenses. The Lord Ordinary indicated in his note the opinion that the petition was incompetent in so far as directed against other parties than the Trustee and Commissioners in bankruptcy, although it was unnecessary to decide the point.

The petitioner did not pay the expenses awarded against him, but brought the present petition, which was in identical terms to the former, but omitted the crave for payment to himself, and was only directed against the Trustee and Commissioners. The respondents in their third plea in law maintained, inter alia, that this petition should not be heard until the expenses awarded in the former petition were paid. The arguments of parties appear sufficiently from the Lord Ordinary's note.

His Lordship sustained the contention of the respondents, and therefore superseded consideration of the petition until the expenses awarded in the former petition were paid.

Lord Guthrie.—The respondents, the petitioner's trustee and the commissioners on his sequestrated estate, plead that the petitioner is not entitled to proceed with this petition until the expenses found due to them in a previous petition brought by the petitioner against them and certain others have been paid.

That previous petition was brought under the same section of the Bankruptcy Act 1856, namely, sect. 86, as the present petition; the averments were substantially the same; but certain persons were sought to be made liable who are now only called for their interest, and the prayer contained a crave for payment of sums of money to the petitioner which is omitted in the prayer of the present petition.

In these circumstances I am of opinion that the respondents' third plea, so far as it refers to the expenses found due in the previous petition to them, is well founded. I am unable to distinguish the present case from the case of Irvine v. Kinloch, 1885, 13 R. 172, and M'Murchy v. M'Lullich, 1889, 16 R. 678, relied on by the respondents. The petitioner pointed out four distinctions: first, in these cases the pursuers were solvent; second, the actions were against third parties, not, as here, against the trustee of the person complaining; third, the condescendences in the second action contained additional matter, and did not, as here, differ from the actions first instituted merely in omissions; and fourth, in these cases the parties concluded against were identical in both sets of proceedings. I do not think there is any substance in these distinctions. The determining points are: first, that the respondents are in no way responsible for the failure of the petitioner's first petition; second, that they cannot be made to bear the cost of the petitioner's petition being licked into relevancy, either now or in the future, should the petitioner find it necessary to bring a series of petitions with the same parties and variously modified averments and prayers; and third, that the petitioner had an opportunity in the previous petition of curing the defect on account of which it was thrown out, and declined to do so.—6*th March* 1908.

INTERNATIONAL LAW—DOMICILE—JURISDICTION—HUSBAND AND WIFE—DIVORCE.

A man whose domicile of origin was Irish, came to Glasgow at the age of eighteen, and after seven years' residence there as a journeyman tailor he married a Scotswoman, the daughter of parents in whose house he had lodged for five years. He had been back to Ireland only on one occasion, namely, when he went for a week to visit his mother. The spouses lived together in Glasgow for over two years, partly in houses which they rented and partly with the wife's parents. The husband, who worked irregularly, disappeared on two occasions for periods of several weeks, and eventually deserted his wife. She stated in evidence that he always considered Scotland to be his home. During the five years following the desertion he was seen from time to time in Glasgow and the neighbourhood, and he served in a Scottish militia regiment. He then returned to Ireland, and had been living there for five years when the summons of divorce was served upon him personally. The action was undefended.

At the hearing the following cases were cited by counsel: Pabst v. Pabst, 1898, 6 S.L.T. 117; Vincent v. Earl of Buchan, 1889, 16 R. 637 [645]; Carswell, 1881, 8 R. 901; Dombrowitzki, 1895, 22 R. 906.

The Lord Ordinary found desertion proved, and sustained the jurisdiction on the ground that the defender had acquired a Scots domicile which he had not abandoned when the four years of desertion were completed.—14*th March* 1908.

385. Ritchie v. Duke of Richmond and Gordon.

EXPENSES—ACTION IN ENGLISH COURTS—ADVOCATE ACTING AS ADVISER AND AS EXPERT WITNESS—ADVOCATE'S CLERK'S FEES.

This was an action at the instance of Mr J. R. S. Ritchie, clerk to Mr J. Avon Clyde, K.C., against the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, for payment of clerk's fees on fees amounting to two hundred guineas and fifty guineas paid to Mr Clyde for attendance in the Court of the King's Bench in London on behalf of the defender. Evidence was led, and the facts and arguments of parties sufficiently appear from the Sheriff-Substitute's opinion.

Sheriff Guy, in granting decree, said:—Part of the difficulty in this case arises from the fact that the Attorney-General for England saw fit, because he had personal jurisdiction over the Duke of Richmond and Gordon in England, to sue his Lordship in an English Court on a question which depended largely upon the construction of the entail statutes which are peculiarly Scottish. In these circumstances it is not to be wondered at that the noble defender in the action should apply to his Scottish solicitors, and that they in turn should go to eminent counsel of the Scottish Bar to assist the English agents and counsel whom he had necessarily to instruct in the action. From the beginning of the case it was a necessity that the Duke of Richmond and Gordon should have skilled advice in Scots law, and it was also a necessity of the case that the English judge who tried it should have the assistance of Scottish counsel in the witness-box to instruct him in the intracacies of these difficult points of Scots law. Mr Clyde, along with Mr Chree, was instructed in the ordinary way to advise and make suggestions for revisal of papers and pleadings in connection with the case, and so long as he was instructed and consulted here, it was not disputed that his clerk was entitled to have his fee in the ordinary course as if he had been instructed as Scottish counsel to give his opinion or to appear and conduct a case in the Courts of Scotland. Mr Ritchie was paid his ordinary fees in relation to the fees of counsel in all consultations, etc., which preceded the hearing of the case in London. When the hearing of the case was imminent, it was thought right that Mr Clyde, along with the junior counsel who had been with him in the prior consultations, should go to London. Accordingly the defender's agents, through their Parliament House clerk, arranged for Mr Clyde's attendance in London through the agency of his clerk here (the pursuer in this action), and between these two the fees were arranged that should be sent to Mr Clyde. The letter instructing Mr Clyde to attend in London was sent to him by Mr Mounsey, W.S., the agent in Scotland for the defender, and he informed Mr Clyde that the case would be heard in the King's Bench Division on 8th July 1907, and stated, "I shall be obliged for your attending as arranged." The question now arises as to whether the fee in this case is not a fee sent to Mr Clyde in his capacity as a lawyer. As to this there can be no doubt. It is quite true that a W.S. or an S.S.C., or a law agent, or any other person skilled in the law of Scotland, might have attended and deponed on oath as to the law of Scotland. But the Duke of Richmond wished Mr Clyde to go. Mr Clyde went as a lawyer, and as a lawyer in the only proper sense of the old use of that word, namely, an advocate of the Scottish Bar, and it was as such that the Duke of Richmond and Gordon wished his services. Mr Clyde was instructed to go to London and give his assistance as an advocate of the Scottish Bar. As to the relation of the advocate and his clerk, it is to be remembered that from a very early period these two have been constantly associated with each other. An advocate, the very day he becomes a member of the Faculty, appoints his clerk, and although it may be years before he gets a guinea, he has his clerk, who will earn half a crown whenever he gets his first guinea. In England the same arrangement does not obtain. The two countries are alike in this, that in both counsel are supposed to have a clerk, but in England counsel does not always have a clerk. In England fees are sent direct to counsel, and these fees include clerk's fees. It is common in England for counsel to appoint a clerk on a salary and to obtain the benefit, if he has a large practice, of the difference between clerk's fees and the salary he pays to his clerk. That practice does not obtain in Scotland. In Scotland clerks are not paid by counsel, nor do counsel receive clerk's fees. Counsel receive only their own fees, and when they receive a fee there is set up immediately a contractual relation between counsel's clerk and the client and his agent under which the counsel's clerk is entitled to a fee in proportion to the fee sent to counsel, and so much is this a matter of implied contract that the agent is liable personally and may be sued for the fee. It is well known that opinions not connected with judicial proceedings at all carry with them in practice a fee to the counsel's clerk, and the fee is based upon a scale laid down in the Act of Sederunt, and is regulated by the amount of the fee sent for the opinion, an additional fee for writings being also provided for. If a fee is due to counsel's clerk for a written extra-judicial opinion as an advocate, it would be an extraordinary thing if that fee were to be held not payable for the reason that the opinion was deponed to on oath. It would be different altogether if the advocate were deponing on oath merely to a fact and not to an opinion as an expert in law. The view I take in this case is, however, that Mr Clyde was sent to London in a case in which the services of some person eminently skilled in the law of Scotland were required. Mr Clyde had been instructed in all the earlier stages of the case as counsel. When he was instructed to go to the trial of the case in London he went as an advocate, got his fee as an advocate, and the relation between him and his clerk was not disturbed by the fact that he was made a witness in the case. Without deciding the point, I am of opinion that if an advocate were called simply as a witness in his capacity as an expert in law, even in that case the clerk would be entitled to his fee, but in this case Mr Clyde was instructed from the outset as advisor and consultor. I think the case should be treated in the same way as if Mr Clyde had been sent as an advocate to plead in the House of Lords, and accordingly I find for pursuer with expenses.—9th March 1908.

Thomson v. The Fife Coal Co. Ltd.

NOT BEEN PREJUDICED IN THEIR DEFENCE BY THE DELAY ON THE PART OF THE PURSUER IN GIVING NOTICE.

This was an action under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897 at the instance of the widow of the deceased Michael Thomson, who, while employed by defenders as a miner at their Benarty pit in the county of Fife, sustained, on 28th December 1906, severe injuries which incapacitated him for work until 9th January 1907, when he resumed work with the defenders. Thomson, however, died on 24th April 1907, and as the result of a post-mortem examination the pursuer alleged that his death was the result of the accident he had sustained on 28th December 1906. The defenders were not represented at the post-mortem examination, and their defence was that Thomson's death was not the result of the injuries he sustained on 28th December 1906.

Sect. 2 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act 1897, after declaring that notice shall be given by the workman injured to his employer, provided that "the want of or any defect or inaccuracy in such notice shall not be a bar to the maintenance of such proceedings if it is found in the proceedings for settling the claim that the employer is not prejudiced in his defence by the want, defect, or inaccuracy, or that such want, defect, or inaccuracy was occasioned by mistake or other reasonable cause." The Workmen's Compensation Act 1906, sect. 2 (1) (a), contains a similar proviso.

The Sheriff-Substitute, after proof, by interlocutor dated 5th December 1907, found in fact, inter alia, ". . . . (6) The cause of Thomson's death was suppurative meningitis, due to septic poisoning from the wound on the head received on 28th December 1906, and Thomson's death was the result of the accident on that date. (7) Thomson never gave notice of the accident to defenders. He did not associate his illness with the accident, and although he was urged to claim compensation, he was too independent to do so. Defenders first received notice of the accident when the claim was intimated to them by pursuer's agent on 2nd May 1907—eight days after the death. Pursuer's agent, on being consulted on the evening of 26th April, the day before the funeral, instructed Dr Carment and Dr Craig to make a post-mortem examination of the deceased, but he did not inform defenders of this at the time. It did not occur to him to do so. Pursuer herself stated that she was too much put about to think of giving notice. (8) The want of notice has not deprived defenders of any essential evidence relating to the accident itself. It deprived them of the opportunity of satisfying themselves at the post-mortem examination as to the cause of death. The terms of the post-mortem report have misled defenders into stating a defence which they would probably not have done if they had been represented at the post-mortem examination."

On these facts the Sheriff-Substitute found in law, inter alia, ". . . . (2) that the defenders were not prejudiced in their defence by the want of notice of the accident." He added a note in which he, inter alia, dealt with the alleged want of notice as follows: "My great difficulty in the case has been on the question of notice. So far as Thomson himself is concerned the case of Rankine v. Alloa Coal Co. Ltd., 16th February 1904, 6 F. 375, is sufficient to justify me in holding that his failure to give notice was occasioned by mistake But I must say I can see no reasonable cause for the omission of pursuer's agent to give notice on 26th April, when the post-mortem examination was instructed, or for the delay till 2nd May. It was of great importance to defenders to have the opportunity of being represented at the post-mortem examination. Taking this view, I am bound to consider whether it is proved that defenders were not 'prejudiced in their defence' by the want of notice. I take these words to mean that there has been caused by the lapse of time some difficulty in establishing the defence—e.g., through loss of evidence. If, for instance, the cause of death here was doubtful, and I had to balance probabilities, it might reasonably be argued that there would have been no such difficulty, if defenders had had the opportunity of clearing it up at the post-mortem examination. But in this case the cause of death is so clearly shewn that it seems to me unreasonable to conjecture that defenders' doctors might have discovered another cause at the post mortem examination. I am satisfied that defenders were 'prejudiced' in this sense that they would probably never have resisted pursuer's claim if they had been represented at that examination. But the words of the Act are 'prejudiced in his defence.' One must find some meaning for the words 'prejudiced in his defence,' and it is the necessity for doing so that leads me to the conclusion that the prejudice referred to is of the character above indicated. The prejudice to defenders was that they were deprived of information which would have been of importance to them when they were considering whether they should state a defence or not. Notice on 26th April would in fact have disabled defenders from stating a defence at all. The proper way to deal with such prejudice as defenders here received is to allow them expenses. But I have only allowed these down to and including the first day of proof, because defenders were responsible for the adjournment to a second day." —5th December 1907.

Patent — Infringement — Anticipation — New Invention or New Mode Merely — Driving Aprons — "Protection Combined with Freedom."

Appeal against an Interlocutor of the First Division (The Lord President (Lord Dunedin), Lords Adam and Kinnear), reversing judgment of the Lord Ordinary (Kyllachy).

In this action by Robert Arnot against the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. Ltd., the Lord Ordinary (Kyllachy), on 1st December 1904, found that the defenders had infringed certain letters-patent, and granted interdict against the defenders in certain terms (see Vol. XII. p. 496). On 22nd June 1905 the First Division recalled the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and assoilzied the defenders. The following is the opinion of the Lord President, which was concurred in by Lords Adam and Kinnear:—

The Lord President.—This case turns on a very small point. The action is one brought by those in right of letters-patent granted in favour of David Lenson, and they seek to prevent the defenders from infringing those letters-patent by the manufacture of certain driving aprons alleged to be made according to the specification annexed to the letters-patent. As regards the infringement there cannot be doubt. You have only got to look at the articles to see that there is really no difference, and that being so, I think there was nothing in the argument of the defenders that the pursuer was the user of a particular way of making a gusset which forms a projecting foothold, and the defenders here employ another method of making that gusset projection. I think that it is not a fair construction of the specification. I think what he has done was quite what a patentee ought to do. While not tying himself down to a particular method, he has shewn one way in which it could be done. On that point I agree with the pursuer. But the point on which I am constrained to differ with the Lord Ordinary is the point which arises on the prior specification of Parnall, because if the prior specification of Parnall really disclosed the so-called invention of Lenson, for which he got his letters-patent, then, of course, the case must be at an end, because the patent is bad. I am of the opinion that the invention, such as it is, was entirely disclosed by the prior specification of Parnall, and that anyone having Parnall's specification before him could construct what I may term the Lenson covering without the addition of any inventive faculty at all. They are both coverings for the feet, legs and knees, and are meant for the purposes of warmth and for use in travelling of whatsoever description. They have both got the peculiarity which really constitutes the only possibility of any patent in this matter at all, of these projecting footholds which have a double purpose, although one of them is not particularly specified by either inventor—the one I allude to in that matter being for the purpose of allowing the foot to be more or less free, and to be used as a foot, while at the same time not exposed to the weather. The other purpose is that by this foothold they assist in keeping the covering down, preventing its being blown off their lower limbs. The pursuer here says that the discriminating distinction between what is disclosed in Parnall's specification and what is shewn in Lenson's is that Parnall's is a sack formation and Lenson's is a rug. It is noticeable that Parnall does not mention the word sack from beginning to end. What Parnall says is this: "We form of thick woollen or other suitable fabric or material a covering for the lower part of the body and knees."

That is just as applicable to what you call a rug as to what you call a sack. Parnall further says: "It is continued down to the feet, where it is adapted to receive and enclose them, opening thence above the heels on the under side upwards, yet so that the parts may meet and overlap, and be held together by elastic or other loops." It is true that in his drawing he shews that particular opening as not beginning exactly at the heel, but opening at a place which one would guess, from looking at the print, is about the middle of the calf. But that is just an illustration of how it would be carried out, and I cannot doubt that anyone looking at the specification would have had the right to make his covering exactly as carried out in the specification—that is to say, immediately above the heels. If it is made opening immediately above the heels, then the whole difference between the two garments is gone, with this sole exception, that in Parnall's case there is, from the way in which it is described, an underneath platform—that is to say, the two feet are connected not only in the front by the piece of material which extends between the ankles and shins, but also underneath by the material which is underneath the soles of the feet. In Lenson's case that underneath platform does not exist, although, of course, there is the same underneath material extending between the shins and the ankles. I cannot think there was patentable material in, so to speak, cutting that away. In everything else the two garments are exactly the same. Parnall's garment is not in any necessary sense of the word a sack. It is a sack-like projection in which you put the feet, but so to a very appreciable extent is Lenson's, because there you put the feet into a projection, and that projection is an embryo sack with which you are wrapped round, like you are by Parnall's covering. If that is so, I do not think there is any invention on which to found letters-patent for Lenson, and I think the defenders are entitled to be assoilzied.

The pursuer appealed.

The House, without calling on counsel for the respondents, dismissed the appeal.

The Lord Chancellor.—My Lords, this case has been presented to your Lordships with most commendable brevity and clearness, but I think that there is no ground at all for this appeal.

Poor Law—Settlement—Deserted Wife—Capacity to Lose Derivative Residential Settlement — Husband with Residential Settlement in Row Parish Deserts Wife—Wife Removes to Paisley Parish, where She Became and Remained for More than Three Years Continuously Chargeable—Husband Unheard of—Held that Parish of Row Did Not at End of Three Years From Desertion Cease to be Liable.

Appeal from the Sheriff Court of Lanarkshire at Glasgow.

(Reported ante, Vol. XIV. p. 853.)

This was an action at the instance of the Parish Council of Paisley, to whom a pauper, Mrs Wright, and her three children, were chargeable, for relief against one or other of the Parish Councils of Row and Glasgow.

The facts, which were not in dispute, were stated by the Sheriff-Substitute (Fyfe) as follows:—

Daniel Wright was born in Glasgow in 1859, but he resided at Shandon for thirteen years prior to October 1901, thereby acquiring a residential settlement in Row Parish. In October 1901 he disappeared, and has not since been heard of. He left his wife and family at Shandon. The deserted wife and three dependent children went to Paisley, where they seemed to have struggled along without parish aid till April 1902. The wife then applied to Paisley parish, and, she being a proper subject for relief, Paisley, on 22nd April 1902, granted her relief. Paisley parish gave statutory relief notice to Row parish on 14th May 1902, and Row recognised liability. Row reimbursed Paisley down to January 1905. Row then declined to pay, upon the ground that the settlement of the wife in Row was only a derivative settlement following that of her husband, and that the husband's settlement in Row (which was only a residential settlement) had lapsed in October 1904, that is, when he had ceased to reside in the parish for three years, the wife's settlement lapsing with it.

Paisley then, in January 1905, gave statutory notice of chargeability to Glasgow, the parish of the husband's birth.

It is clear that Paisley must be relieved, and the question is whether liability rests with Row or Glasgow.

The Sheriff-Substitute held the Parish Council of Row liable in relief, and dismissed the action quoad the Parish Council of Glasgow.

On appeal the Sheriff (Guthrie) adhered.

The Parish Council of Row appealed to the Court of Session.

The First Division appointed the case to be heard before Seven Judges.

Argued for the Parish Council of Row: Although a person with a residential settlement of his own and in receipt of relief might not acquire a settlement, that rule had no application to a person who was a member of a family of one who had a settlement, and who was dependent on him, in fact, to the case of a derivative settlement. If the husband here had died when he deserted, the wife would have taken his settlement in Row, and, having that settlement when she became chargeable, would have retained it, because she never ceased to be chargeable (Rutherglen v. Glasgow, 1902, 4 F. (H.L.) 19, [1902], A.C. 360). But though chargeability continued, the settlement might change if the settlement was derivative, and, if it did, the liability transmitted (Wallace v. Turnbull, 1872, 10 M. 675, per Lord Justice-Clerk (Moncreiff) at 677). Palmer v. Russell, 1871, 10 M. 185, was distinguished in this respect, that the wife was a lunatic, and a provision in the Lunacy Act applied. The dictum of the Lord President Inglis in that case (p. 189) supported the contention for Row. Counsel also cited Hunter v. Henderson, 1895, 22 R. 331; Anderson v. Paterson, 1878, 5 R. 904. Beattie v. Adamson, 1866, 5 M. 47, was the authority for the proposition that a settlement did not change during chargeability. But that case was decided on the ground of the health of the person relieved. Had it not been for the state of her health she would not have been a pauper. It proceeded on a minute and the construction which the Lord Justice-Clerk put on that minute (vide p. 52).

The Parish of Row did not need to produce the husband and shew he was alive. The ordinary presumption was for life, not death; and if he was said to be dead, that should be averred and proved by the Parish of Glasgow. Glasgow could only get free from Paisley by shewing that Row was liable, and therefore the onus was on Glasgow. To make Row liable the Court must come to the conclusion that within the statutory period of leaving Row the husband had died. And there must be evidence of that. Otherwise it must be assumed that he was alive (Dickson on Evidence, I. 116). In answer to the Lord President, the Dean of Faculty stated that according to his contention the wife was the pauper, not the deserting husband.

Argued for the Parish Council of Glasgow: The wife's settlement, although derivative, was her own. The real question was not whether a settlement in Row was lost, but whether a settlement in Glasgow was obtained. It must be shewn that the wife's settlement was changed. Hunter v. Henderson, cit. supra, was consistent with Beattie v. Adamson, cit. supra, because Prestonpans shewed that the husband had settled in Ormiston, and was able-bodied. It was not enough to shew that the husband had lost his settlement in Row. [Lord Stormonth-Darling referred to Gray v. Fowlie, 1847, 9 D. 811; and the Dean of Faculty said that under the old poor law one could not lose a residential settlement by mere absence.] The matter depended on who was the pauper. If the husband turned up and was able to support his wife and family, the question of pauperism disappeared. If he was not so able, then he became the pauper, and his dependants were only pauper derivatively. There was a change in the person who was the pauper. But so long as a person was a pauper, his settlement could not change (Beattie v. Adamson, cit. supra). It could only change on him ceasing to be a pauper, and this might be through his pauperism shifting to some one else on whom he was dependent. The only thing which could change the wife's settlement was by Row shewing that the husband had become pauperised. Presumption of life had nothing to do with the question. There was no room for considering any presumption at all (Greig v. Simpson & Craig, 1876, 3 R. 642, per Lord Deas at 644). The onus of proving loss of settlement was on the parish of settlement; there was no onus on the birth parish at all (Greig v. M'Leod, 1860, Poor Law Magazine, Vol. II. p. 593; Graham's Poor Law, p. 98). Therefore the onus lay on the parish which proposed to make the change.

The Court affirmed the judgments of the Sheriffs.

The Lord President.—In April 1902 Daniel Wright, who was by trade a gardener, and was living in Paisley with his wife and three dependent children, deserted his family, who thereupon became chargeable to the parish. His birth parish was Glasgow, where he was born on 11th July 1859. He had, however, acquired a settlement by residence in the parish of Row, when he left it in October 1901, to take up house in Paisley. In these circumstances Paisley sent notice to Row, claiming relief from that parish in respect of the settlement by residence. Row admitted liability, and continued to maintain the widow and children down to January 1905. At that date Row notified Paisley that the deserting husband had lost his settlement in Row by non-residence, repudiated liability for further advances, and called upon Paisley to claim against Glasgow, the husband's birth parish. Paisley notified Glasgow accordingly, but was by them referred back to Row as the parish still liable. It is matter of admission that liability is upon one or other of the defenders. It is further admitted (1) that there has been no break in the chargeability of the wife since relief was first given by Paisley in 1902; and (2) that from the date of his leaving Row in October 1901 the husband has not been back in that parish. It is not admitted that no settlement has meantime been acquired by him in any other parish; and the case must be decided on the footing that he has simply not been heard of since he deserted his family in 1902.

Court of Seven Judges.

The Parish Council of Paisley v. The Parish Councils of Row and Glasgow.

The Lord President.

Had this case come up for decision before the case of Rutherglen (4 F. (H.L.) 19) was decided in the House of Lords, the solution would have been easy. The deserted wife had no husband, for desertion was equivalent to death. Being therefore the pauper there could obviously be no change in her settlement during the continuance or chargeability. But the Rutherglen case destroyed the doctrine of desertion being equivalent to death, and the real question argued in this case is whether the House of Lords judgment carries as a corollary the deciding of this case in favour of Row. Technically speaking, the House of Lords decided no more than this, that a deserted wife whose husband was still known to be alive could not acquire an industrial settlement for herself, and that consequently on her relapse into pauperism her settlement was as it had always been, i.e. her husband's settlement. But I need scarcely say that if I thought the opinions of the noble and learned Lords, or the logical deduction to be drawn from these opinions, lead to a certain conclusion, I should hold myself bound to follow them. I am, however, of opinion that the House of Lords judgment in the Rutherglen case does not really touch the considerations on which this case must be decided. The whole difficulty, I think, arises from not distinguishing between derivative pauperism (if I may coin an expression to make my meaning clear) which is one thing, and derivative settlement, which is another. It is necessary for me to press this point, because the learned Sheriff-Substitute whose judgment, affirmed by the Sheriff, is under appeal, and whose conclusions I agree with, begins his opinion with a proposition which, if true, would, I think, entirely vitiate the conclusions which follow. He says in his interlocutor: "It is important to observe that the wife never was a pauper in her own right." If she was not, then her husband was the pauper at the moment she became chargeable. And just as by working elsewhere he can acquire a new residential settlement although his wife is getting relief (Wallace v. Turnbull, 10 M. 675), so also by his absence merely he can (the doctrine of desertion as equivalent to death being exploded) lose the residential settlement he acquired, and revert to his birth settlement. Indeed, it would come to this, that unless you could presume him dead (for which upon the dates there is certainly no ground) he might have a settlement in any parish in Scotland except only Row, where alone it is positively known he has not been for the last three years. This argument, upon the assumption made, seems to me irresistible. But, my Lords, I think the assumption is clearly wrong. When a wife is found deserted and unable to support herself, it is she who is a proper object of parochial relief, and it is she who is the pauper. If this were not so, then Wallace v. Turnbull would be bad law, because a man cannot be a pauper and at the same time acquire a residential settlement. Then comes the question: What is her settlement? Being a wife, her settlement is necessarily derivative from her husband—it is a mere accident whether at the moment when the wife's settlement has to be sought for the husband's settlement is his birth settlement or a residential settlement. In either case it fixes the settlement of the pauper, the deserted wife. Nothing after that can, I think, happen until there is a change of circumstances. Putting out of view the possibility of some extraneous aid being given to the wife, which of course would put an end de facto to her chargeability, the only change of circumstances must consist in the discovery of the husband alive, for, if he is dead, it is clear that the settlement of the widow, as she now is, continues what it has been all through the period of chargeability. If the husband is discovered alive, then, if he is able-bodied, it is he who is bound to support his wife, and if he is not, then he becomes the pauper, and the wife a dependant on him, her relief being his relief, and the parish ultimately liable being the parish of the settlement of the pauper, the husband, as that settlement is then discovered to be. All this seems to me really decided in terms by the case of Beattie v. Adamson, 5 M. 47. There a pupil child subject to fits was held in fact to be a proper object of relief in its own right. Its settlement was necessarily the settlement of its father, which happened at the time of the inception of relief to be a residential settlement. The father subsequently lost that residential settlement. The child received continuous relief. It was held that the parish of the residential settlement was still liable notwithstanding that the father, from whom the settlement was originally derived, had admittedly lost his own settlement therein, and had either acquired a new residential settlement, or reverted to his birth settlement. I can see no difference in principle between that case and this. The effect of the discovery of the father alive is different because, although able-bodied, he was poor and was not liable to support a child in the state of health that this one was. Whereas in this case, the husband, if able-bodied, however poor, is liable to support the wife. But in that case, if the father had been in affluent circumstances the child would have ceased to be in a position de jure to receive relief, the chargeability would have ended, and the settlement of the child would then have followed the settlement of the father, just as here the settlement of the wife would follow that of the husband if discovered.

Court of Seven Judges.

The Parish Council of Paisley v. The Parish Councils of Row and Glasgow.

The Lord President.

The fallacy of the opposite argument may, I think, be tested in another way. It is said that the husband has certainly lost his settlement in Row. Now that is necessarily based on the assumption that he lived for three years after he disappeared, for, if he died within the three years, then his settlement in Row remains a historic fact unaltered, and the case comes to be the ordinary one of a widow who at the moment of pauperism still retains the derivative residential settlement of her husband, and it is well settled that so long as she remains a pauper no change takes place. Now while I agree that there is no presumption that the disappeared man is dead, yet, if Erskine's view be the true one (see Inst., 4, 2, 36), the presumption of life would not be available where the person pleading it did not do so in defence but needed it positivé whereon to found his plea. In one of the cases Lord Deas, although he does not express it in the same words, seems to have held the same opinion, because he said he did not think the presumption of life was applicable to poor law cases (Greig v. Simpson & Craig, 16th May 1876, 3 R. 642 at p. 644).

For these reasons I am of opinion, though on grounds differently expressed, that the decision of the Sheriffs is right and should be affirmed.

The Lord Justice-Clerk.—I concur.

Lord M'Laren.—I concur in your Lordship's opinion. I will only add that the first principle to be applied to cases of this kind is that every pauper who has a claim for relief must continue to be supported by the parish of settlement until that parish can establish a claim against some other parish. If the husband of this woman could be traced, it would either be found that he had acquired a settlement in some other parish, or that he had not. If he had another settlement, then of course the woman would be entitled to relief from that quarter, and the new settlement would be liable on exactly the same ground as Row is at present liable, viz. the ground of derivative settlement. But the case is that nothing whatever is known about the deserting husband, and it cannot be assumed that he has acquired a new settlement, or that he has reverted to his birth settlement, or that he has any settlement in this world at all. He may be dead for anything we know to the contrary.

While I agree with your Lordship that this is a case of a pauper receiving relief in her own right because her husband is not a pauper—has never applied for relief—that does not seem to me really to be decisive of the question, which I think depends upon the principle that Row must continue to be liable until it is able to show that there is another parish against whom a preferable claim can be made.

Lord Kinnear.—I agree with the Lord President.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—I am of the same opinion.

Lord Ardwall.—I concur.

COURT OF SEVEN JUDGES.

(First Division.)

(The Lord President, the Lord Justice-Clerk, Lords M'Laren, Kinnear, Stormonth-Darling, Ardwall and Guthrie.)

389. M'Arthur's Executors v. Guild and Others.

Succession — Legacy — Ademption — Bequest of Licensed Premises—Contract Made by Testator for Sale of Premises—Contract Subject to Condition as to Transfer of License Not Purified at Date of Death—Held No Ademption—Pollock's Trustees v. Anderson, 1902, 4 F. 455, Approved.

Special Case.

This was a special case presented for the opinion of the Court on a question as to the ademption of a legacy of licensed premises bequeathed by the late Peter M'Arthur to his daughter, Mrs Guild.

Court of Seven Judges.

M'Arthur's Executors v. Guild and Others.

The facts were set forth in the special case as follows:

1. On 16th April 1906 Peter M'Arthur died in Perth, leaving a trust disposition and settlement dated 28th July with two relative codicils. Under the said trust disposition and settlement two of the testator's sons, James Fenton M'Arthur and John Duncan M'Arthur, were appointed his executors, and after various special bequests the testator conveyed to them the whole residue of his means and estate, with power to realise and divide the same among the parties therein mentioned. By one of the codicils William Neil M'Arthur, another son of the testator, was appointed an executor to act along with James Fenton M'Arthur and John Duncan M'Arthur. William Neil M'Arthur has since resigned office. James Fenton M'Arthur and John Duncan M'Arthur, as executors foresaid, are the first parties to this case.

2. James Fenton M'Arthur, John Duncan M'Arthur, and William Neil M'Arthur are the whole surviving sons, and are also residuary legatees of the testator, and as such they are the second parties to this case. Mrs Margaret Anderson [M'Arthur or Guild, wife of James Guild, spirit dealer, Perth, is the only daughter, and is also one of the residuary legatees of the testator. She is the third party to this case. Eleanor Margaret M'Arthur is the daughter and only child of the late Alexander Simpson M'Arthur, another son of the testator. The said Eleanor Margaret M'Arthur, who is in pupillarity, is one of the residuary legatees, and her mother, Mrs M'Arthur, as her guardian, is the fourth party to this case.

3. By article third of his said trust disposition and settlement the testator bequeathed to his daughter, the said Mrs Guild, whom failing, to her child or children in equal right, inter alia, "the property in Strathmiglo, consisting of the Royal Hotel and premises therewith connected, with the pertinents and the writs and title-deeds thereof."

4. By Minute of Sale dated 5th March 1906 the testator sold to William Steven, Kinross, the said property known as the Royal Hotel, Strathmiglo, with stabling, outhouses, garden ground, and other premises thereto belonging, together with the whole grates, gasfittings, and bar fittings ("exclusive of the beer pumps, which belong to Mrs Guild, the present tenant"), at the price of £1400 sterling, with entry at Whitsunday (15th May) 1906, at which date the price was declared payable. It was declared to be a condition of the agreement of sale that the said William Steven should apply for and obtain a transfer of the licence certificate for the said hotel. It was also provided that the said William Steven, the purchaser, should, within seven days from the date of the Minute of Sale, consign £400 in the Bank of Scotland in Perth on deposit receipt in the joint names of the testator and himself, in part payment of the purchase price. The said Minute of Sale is signed by the said William Steven and the testator. The said sum of £400 was consigned in said bank upon 12th March 1906, "to await the settlement of the price of the Royal Hotel, Strathmiglo, repayable on the joint endorsement of the said William Steven, Esq., and Peter M'Arthur, Esq. A transfer of the licence certificate in favour of Mr Steven was obtained at the Licensing Court held on 17th April 1906, and a formal conveyance of the property was thereafter executed in his favour.

Court of Seven Judges.

M'Arthur's Executors v. Guild and Others.

6. The first, second and fourth parties maintain that the bequest of the said Royal Hotel to the third party was adeemed by the sale thereof concluded between the testator and the said purchaser thereof under and by virtue of the said Minute of Sale and consignation of part of the price, and that the said £400 consigned in the bank as aforesaid, together with the balance of the said price of £1400, forms part of the residue estate of the testator. The third party, on the other hand, contends that the said bequest was not adeemed, in respect that the testator had executed no conveyance thereof prior to his death, in favour of the purchaser, and was then still feudally vest therein as proprietor thereof.

The Question of Law for the opinion of the Court was:

Was the bequest by the testator to the third party of the said heritable property known as the Royal Hotel, Strathmiglo, adeemed?

Argued for the First, Second and Fourth Parties: If an owner of heritage sold it and died before executing the conveyance, he left only moveable property. (Bell. Com. II. 6; M'Farlane v. Greig, 1895, 22 R. 405 per Lord M'Laren; Chiesley v. his Sisters, 1704, M. 5531; Wilson v. Wilson, 29th November 1808, F.C.; Heron v. Espie, 1856, 18 D. 917; Ramsay v. Ramsay, 1887, 15 R. 25). In Heron the only question was whether the fact of the sale being compulsory made any difference; and all the judges accepted the law laid down in Chiesley that when the sale was voluntary the testator only left a claim to the price which was moveable. Where a special legacy was bequeathed, if the subject ceased to exist before the testator's death, or was converted, the legacy was adeemed (Jack v. Lauder, 1742, M. 11357; Pagan v. Pagan, 1838, 16 S. 383; Chalmers v. Chalmers, 1851, 14 D. 57, per L.J.C. Hope at 60; Congreve's Exrs. v. Congreve, 1874, 1 R. 1102 per Lord Ormidale at 1106; Anderson v. Thomson, 1877, 4 R. 1101). The testator's intention was to be gathered solely from what he did and not from anything else. There must be no speculating as to intention. Pollock's Trs. v. Anderson, 1902, 4 F. 455, could not stand with Heron v. Espie, cit. supra. A legatee of a specific property never could have the price of that property paid to him if it was sold before the testator's death, because it was the property, not the money, which was specifically bequeathed. At this testator's death, he owned, not the property, but a claim to the price. That being so, the condition in the contract of sale was immaterial. It was a resolutive, not a suspensive condition. Counsel also quoted Watts v. Watts, 1873, L.R. 17 Eq. 217; Farrar v. Earl of Winterton, 1842, 5 Beavan 1; Currie v. Bowyer, 5 Beavan 6, note, as supporting the contention that there had been ademption, and that this must be decided by what the testator had actually done, not what he seemed to have intended.

Argued for the Third Party: The question in the case was decided in Pollock's Trs. v. Anderson, cit. supra, the only difference being that in that case there were trustees, while here there were none, and here the sale was conditional while there it was unconditional. The law of conversion, which was here the basis of argument of the other side, was there founded on and rejected. Chiesley was a case of intestate succession, and it appears from the argument (although little was said in the judgment about it) the question was solely one as to intention. Wilson's case proceeded entirely on this, that questions of the kind were questions of intention. Ramsay was a case of intestate succession of the purchaser, and the question was whether the heir was to get the price. Cases of conversion had no bearing on the question of ademption. Heron v. Espie, cit. supra, was not trenched on by Pollock's Trs., because the former of these cases was one of conversion, and these cases were decided in Pollock's Trs. not to be applicable. Ademption had regard only to the state of the property at the actual time of death. If it was then in bonis of the testator, it was not competent to refer to extrinsic obligations of the testator to determine whether the bequest had been adeemed. The condition here was not purified till after death. It was a suspensive condition, and at his death the testator was still owner of the property. By the common law of Scotland, as in England by the Wills Act of 1837, a testament spoke as from the date of death, although it was made some time prior thereto (Bell, Prin., sect. 1864; Hyslop v. Maxwell's Trs., 1834, 12 S. 413; Nimmo v. Murray's Trs., 1864, 2 M. 1144; Denholm's Trs. v. Denholm, 1907, 15 S.L.T. 429). This will must be read as if made after the contract of sale. As to the principle of ademption, counsel referred to M'Laren on Wills, I. 406, sects. 738–40. The criterion was—Had the testator property of that description? If he had, it was carried by the will. The question whether he had the property could not be determined by enquiring what obligations he had entered into with regard to it (Emslie v. Grote, 1817, Hume 197). Jack v. Lauder, cit. supra, was a legacy of a bill, and the thing had ceased to exist altogether. In Pagan v. Pagan, cit. supra, a conveyance had been granted, and the property was away. Similarly in Chalmers v. Chalmers, cit. supra, the house had been conveyed and the price paid. In Heron v. Espie the deceased left a settlement which did not mention the subject; it was a general conveyance, not a specific bequest. There might be conversion here, but that did not matter. Conversion depended on intention (Ersk. II. 2, 14, and 17; Anderson v. Thomson, 1877, 4 R. 1101, per L.J.C. Moncreiff): ademption had nothing to do with intention. That shewed that conversion had nothing to do with ademption. Ademption was based on a passage in Justinian's Institutes (II. 20, 12). Bell's Trs. v. Bell, 1884, 12 R. 85. The English cases were of no value in this connection. By English law a contract of sale passed the property (Inglis v. Mansfield, 1835, 1 S. and M'L. 203, per Lord Brougham at 338; In re Bridle, 1879, 4 C.P.D. 336). That distinction was brought out in Chalmers v. Chalmers, cit. supra. As to the effect of intention in cases of conversion, counsel referred to M'Laren on Wills, p. 228, sect. 428, and Buchanan v. Angus, 1862, 4 Macq. 374, where the effect of a conditional sale was dealt with.

The Court answered the question in the negative.

The Lord President.—The late Mr M'Arthur, of Perth, left a trust disposition and settlement in which he disposed of the whole of his property, and by the third head of his will provided as follows:—"Thirdly, I dispone to my daughter, Mrs Margaret Anderson M'Arthur or Guild, (first) the property in Strathmiglo consisting of the Royal Hotel and premises therewith connected, with the pertinents and the writs and title deeds thereof." He afterwards went on to make other bequests, and left a residuary clause. Accordingly, there was no doubt that the Royal Hotel was a special bequest. Shortly before his death he executed a minute of sale with a Mr Steven, of Kinross, under the terms of which he sold to Steven the said hotel at the price of £1400, and by the 7th article of the deed provided that "it is to be a condition of this agreement being binding on both parties that Mr Steven applies for and obtains a transfer of the licence certificate for the said Royal Hotel, Strathmiglo." Mr Steven accordingly made the application for the transfer of the licence to the licensing authority, but the day before the Court met Mr M'Arthur died. The Court met and granted the transfer of the licence, and accordingly there is no doubt that Mr Steven is entitled to a conveyance, and he has consigned the £1400. The question arising in this special case is whether the £1400 belongs—as representing the hotel—to the special legatee, or whether it falls into residue, the special legacy having been adeemed. At one time or another there has been a good deal of discussion as to what amounts to proof of ademption, but the leading authority is the judgment of Lord Thurlow in the case of Ashburton v. Macguire, 2 Br. C.C. 108, repeated in the subsequent case of Stanley v. Potter, 2 Cox 182, where, after remarking that the test of ademption was whether the thing remained at the testator's death, he continued, "the idea of proceeding on the animus ademendi has introduced a degree of confusion into the cases which is inexplicable, and I can make out no precise rule from them upon that ground. It will be a safer and clearer way to adhere to the plain rule before mentioned, which is to enquire whether the specific thing given remains or not." That doctrine has been fully adopted in the law of Scotland, and there is no clearer proof of this than is given by the case of Anderson v. Thomson, 17th July 1877, 4 R. 1101, where the late Lord Justice-Clerk Moncreiff acknowledges that doctrine, and says that, although in his opinion it is utterly at variance with any principle of jurisprudence, it is so firmly established that he has no alternative but to apply it. I need scarcely say that no more striking proof can be given of the authority of a rule than its acceptance by a judge who, personally, is convinced that it is a bad rule. Now, taking that doctrine as settled, it seems to me that the decision of this case is not doubtful. We have to look to see whether the trustees at the moment of death could find the thing in the truster's estate. I think it is quite clear here that at the moment of death the truster was still the proprietor of the subject. He had entered into an agreement that if a certain condition were purified he would be bound to sell the subject, but at the moment no one could know whether the condition would be purified. I think the condition was purely suspensive. Upon that simple ground I think there can be no doubt that there was no ademption of this legacy. The property accordingly, when it came to be sold, was the property of the legatee, and consequently the price belongs to her because it was her property that was sold.

Court of Seven Judges.

M'Arthur's Executors v Guild and Others.

The Lord President.

But I do not want to stop here, although this is enough for the decision of the case, for there is no doubt that this case was taken to test whether the decision of the Second Division in Pollock's Trs. v. Anderson, 22nd January 1902, 4 F. 455, really conflicts with the decision of the whole Court in Heron v. Espie, 3rd June 1856, 18 D. 917. Pollock's Trs. was not the same as this case, as it did not involve the question of a suspensive condition. It was the case of a voluntary sale, where missives had been signed, but the testator had died without having executed a conveyance to the purchaser. The Second Division found that the property belonged to the testator at the time of his death, and that the legacy had not been adeemed. It is argued that this decision cannot stand with Heron v. Espie. At the first hearing of this case I was inclined to agree with this, but I have now come to be clearly of opinion that Pollock's Trs. was quite rightly decided, and that Heron, so far from being in opposition, really supports the views upon which Pollock's Trs. was decided. In Heron v. Espie a property had been taken by means of compulsory notice by a railway company. The company had consigned a sum and entered into possession. An arbitration had taken place and the actual price had been fixed, and all that remained to be done was to grant a conveyance. In that position of matters the quondam owner of the property died and left a general settlement covering both his heritable

Court of Seven Judges.

The Lord President.

and moveable property. This settlement was reduced ex capite lecti quoad the heritable property and the point was whether the heir or the executor took the consigned price. Now, had it been a voluntary sale there could have been no question. There would have been conversion, upon the authority of Chiesley, 1704, M. 5531, and all the cases that have followed since. But here there was no conversion by the act of the owner, and accordingly the doctrine was pressed that the infeftment of the quondam owner was still undisturbed by any new infeftment in favour of the company. The minority held that the price ought to go to the heir, and the majority only came to the opposite conclusion because they held that the effect of what had happened was to effect a statutory transference which transferred the land without infeftment, and left the right in the quondam owner, as not a right of property, but only a right to receive the price, which, being moveable in se, could not go to the heir. As the Lord Justice-Clerk expressed it, p. 922: "I hold that to be real corporal and complete possession of the lands, as much as if infeftment had been taken." Lord Wood says, p. 939, "The seller was dispossessed of the lands, and had no interest in them remaining in him, his right having been absolutely converted into a direct right to payment of a fixed price only." The contrary view, that there was no such divestiture, and that consequently the subject remained heritable in the hereditas of the seller, is developed by Lord Deas. Now, it matters not for the moment which of the conflicting views was right. Either it remained heritable, or if it did not, it did not because something had occurred which transferred the property in the land itself in spite of the standing infeftment in the quondam owner, a result which could not have occurred in a voluntary sale. If it had been a voluntary sale, of course the property would have been moveable, but only on the principle of conversion, which depends on the will of the owner and testator. It seems to me that the moment that you settle that intention is neither here nor there in a question of ademption, Heron v. Espie becomes really an authority, not at variance with, but in favour of Pollock's Trs. v. Anderson.

I would further add that the English authorities quoted to us do not seem to me to touch the question, for the simple reason that by English law the contract of sale passes the property—the exact opposite being true by the law of Scotland, and the law not having been altered as to heritable property, though it has been as to moveable.

I am therefore for answering the question of law in the negative.

The Lord Justice-Clerk.—I concur.

Lord M'Laren.—If this had been an unconditional sale I should have been disposed to say that the legacy was adeemed, for though this is heritable property I think the question properly falls to be tested by the doctrine of ademption, because that doctrine comes from the Roman law, which recognised no difference between moveable and immoveable estate. Both are covered by the same principle, viz. that if the testator after making a special legacy by will has parted with the subject, it is no longer in the power of the testamentary representatives to make over the property, and therefore the legacy ceases to have effect. The only difference in the case of a conditional sale is that there is no sale until the condition is purified. There might be cases in which a personal right to the land effeired to the purchaser from the moment the contract of sale was made, subject to a resolutive condition, and in such a case I might be disposed to think that the personal right was a sufficient withdrawal of the property from the testator's estate so as to lead to the conclusion that the legacy had been adeemed. But it is not necessary to consider that question, which might come to be important in reference to the peculiarity of our law as to heritable and moveable estate. For the decision of this case I think it is enough to say that it was a conditional sale, and that there was not even a personal right in the purchaser to the property at the date of the testator's death. The testator was the undivested owner of the subject of a contract, which contract his representatives would be bound to fulfil. So I think the legatee took the property subject of course to the terms of the contract.

Lord Kinnear.—I am of the same opinion. I agree with what your Lordship has said in reference to the case of Pollock, which we are directly invited to reconsider. But for my own part I think that even if that case had been decided differently I should still have come to the same conclusion upon the question now before us, because there was a much more plausible argument for ademption in the case of Pollock than in the present. In Pollock the testator had directed his trustees to convey certain subjects to certain persons, but before his death he had sold them with entry at a certain term. He died before a conveyance was executed, but undoubtedly under an absolute obligation to convey, which neither he nor his representatives could have refused to implement. But the present testator was under no absolute obligation to convey the subjects. He had entered into a contract for the sale of the subjects, subject to a condition that the intending purchaser should apply for and obtain a licence certificate. The testator died before the application was made, and therefore at the date of his death it was quite uncertain whether the contract would become binding or not. I think that constitutes a material distinction between the two cases. For similar reason I think the case of Heron v. Espie has no application. In that case a railway mpany had taken possession of lands under atutory powers, and had consigned a sum of oney to meet the price. The true amount of e price had been ascertained by arbitration, d the proprietor of the land died before the sposition to the Railway Company had been gned. There is a great deal of learned discus-on in the opinions of the judges, but I ink the material point is that throughout e discussion the assumption was that the ansaction of purchase and sale had come to end, and that there was no question as to y right in the lands but only with reference the money. This is clearly brought out in e terms of the interlocutor, because the judg-ent of the Court "finds that the right to mand payment of the price due by the Railway mpany for the strip of ground referred to was personal right in the person of the deceased illiam Simpson, and was part of his moveable tate." The result of the whole discussion, erefore, was to find that the price of land sold as personal and not heritable property. For e actual decision of the present case I agree th your Lordship in the chair that we must ok to the doctrine of ademption as laid down Lord Thurlow in the case of Ashburton v. acquire, and repeated in the case of Stanley v. otter. The principle is that when a particular ing has been specifically bequeathed the claim the special legatee will be defeated if the thing question is not in existence or not within reach the testator's executors at his death. The ason is, as his Lordship expressed it in the cond of the two cases mentioned above, that one must consider it in the same manner as if estator had given a particular horse to A B; if at horse died in the testator's lifetime or was sposed of by him, then there is nothing on which e bequest can operate." And then he goes to say that the idea of proceeding upon the sup-sed animus adimendi leads to confusion, and that rule can be safely adopted except to enquire whether there is a special legacy; and (2) hether the thing bequeathed remained at the stator's death. I think that doctrine has been llowed too consistently to be called in question w, and I cannot say that my reliance on it is aken even by the criticism of so very eminent judge as Lord Justice-Clerk Moncreiff in the se of Anderson. His Lordship thought the ctrine contrary to principle, because it dis-aced what ought to be the sole rule in the con-ruction of wills, viz., to ascertain and give fect to the intention of the testator. But I nnot see that the case of Ashburton throws any ubt on this cardinal rule of construction, or fects it in any way. For the doctrine comes to operation only after the will has been con-rued. The first question, and the question hich Lord Thurlow thought was generally the question of difficulty is whether there is a special legacy, and that is a question of construction in which the intention of the testator is the proper subject for enquiry. The question whether the thing bequeathed remains or not, is a question of fact, not a question of intention. Applying that rule in the present case it appears to me that the testamentary gift of the hotel was a bequest of a specific subject, and the only question which we have to consider is whether that subject remained a part of the deceased's estate at his death. For the reasons given by your Lordship, I think it did remain. It remained subject to a contract which bound the testator, but at the date of the death it was a contract which was still in suspense; when it did come into operation the legatee was bound also as a gratuitous taker under her father's will, but her obligation was to complete the sale by conveying the property in return for payment of the price.

M'ARTHUR'S EXECUTORS v. GUILD AND OTHERS.

Lord Kinnear.

Lord Stormonth-Darling. — I concur in the opinion of your Lordship in the chair.

Lord Ardwall.—I am of opinion that the bequest of the Royal Hotel, Strathmiglo, in favour of the party of the third part did not, in the circumstances set forth in the special case, suffer ademption.

Any apparent difficulties that arise on the authorities can, I think, be satisfactorily explained if care is taken to distinguish between cases of conversion and cases of ademption. Heron v. Espie, 18 D. 917, does not appear to me to conflict with the decision which it is proposed to pronounce; and the case of Chalmers, 14 D. 57, which was a case of ademption, was very different from the present, for in that case the house bequeathed to the pursuer had been taken by a railway company, the price thereof paid, and a disposition thereof in favour of the railway company granted two months before the testator's death. Accordingly, at that date the testator had been absolutely divested of all right to the house in question. The case of Pollock's Trs. v. Anderson, 4 F. 455, is an authority directly applicable to the present case, but the present case is, I think, a fortiori of that one. The question whether or not ademption of a bequest of a specific subject has taken place depends solely upon this other question, whether or not the subject of the bequest was at the date of the testator's death in existence, and formed part of his estate? In the present case, although a minute of sale had been entered into between the testator and a person of the name of William Steven, yet the contract thereby concluded was subject to a suspensive condition, and was not binding upon both parties unless and until (1) the purchaser applied for and (2) obtained a transfer of the licence for the hotel, the second of these conditions depending upon third parties for its fulfilment. The testator died on 16th April 1906, and at that date the transfer of the licence had not been granted, and of course the price had not been paid, nor had a conveyance of the subjects been executed. Accordingly, the subject of the bequest formed part of the testator's estate at the time of his death, and was carried by his settlement directly to the party of the third part, subject to her obligation to carry out the contract of sale and her right to receive the stipulated price in return for a conveyance of the property.

390. Sime v. The Merchant Banking Company Limited.

Company — Capital — Memorandum and Articles of Association — Ordinary and Deferred Shares—Winding Up—Claim by Deferred Shareholders to Pari Passu Ranking With Ordinary Shareholders in Distribution of Company's Assets—Circumstances in which Claim Disallowed, Although No Preference in Favour of Ordinary Shareholders Provided for in Memorandum of Association.

This was an application by Mr W. Sime, C.A., the liquidator of the Humboldt Redwood Co. Ltd., under sect. 138 of the Companies Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. cap. 89), for the directions of the Court as to the distribution of the assets of the Company.

The Memorandum of Association of the Company provided:

Article 5. The capital of the Company is £250,000 divided into 139,092 ordinary shares of £1 each, and 110,908 deferred shares of £1 each.

The capital of the Company was subsequently increased by special resolution to £260,000, 10,000 preference shares of £1 each being created, such shares to rank for dividend immediately before the ordinary shares of the Company, to be preferable as regards repayment of capital to all existing shares and entitled to a cumulative preferential dividend of 10 per cent.

The capital of the Company actually issued was as follows:

Preferred shares . .	5,498
Ordinary shares . .	83,998
Deferred shares . .	105,908

These shares were fully paid up.

The Articles of Association provided as follows:

Article 43. The holders of ordinary shares of the Company shall be entitled to receive out of the profits of each year a cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum on the amount for the time being paid up on the ordinary shares held by them respectively, and the surplus profits in each year shall belong to the holders of the deferred shares.

Article 137. In the event of the Company being dissolved and wound up, the different shares or stocks of the Company shall be repaid out of the assets of the Company as realised, in the order in which the shares or stocks are entitled to rank for payment of dividend.

The Company having passed a resolution for voluntary winding up, appointed the petitioner as liquidator. After realisation of the whole assets of the Company and paying all debts due, there remained in the hands of the liquidator a balance of £14,653, 14s. 1d. An ultimate balance of £9000 remained for distribution after payment of the preference shareholders in full.

It was as to this balance that the present question arose, the ordinary shareholders maintaining that they were entitled to payment in preference to any payment to the deferred shareholders, the latter claiming a pari passu ranking with the former.

The question put to the Court was: Whether the ordinary shareholders are entitled to receive payment of their capital in full before the deferred shareholders receive anything on account of their capital or not?

Answers were lodged for Archibald Coats and others, holders of both ordinary and deferred shares, who supported the contention of the ordinary shareholders, and by the liquidators of the Merchant Banking Co. Ltd., holders of some 30,000 deferred shares, who supported the opposite contention.

It was argued for the ordinary shareholders: The ordinary shareholders were entitled to a preferential ranking in terms of Article 137 of the Articles of Association. This article was good, despite the fact that no provision on the subject was contained in the Memorandum of Association. It was competent to regulate the conditions of the repayment of capital by provision in the Articles of Association alone (Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., L.R. [1897], 1 Ch 361; Bangor Slab Co., 1875, 20 Eq. Ca. 59).

Argued for the deferred shareholders: The Articles of Association were not valid so far as they were inconsistent with the provisions of the Memorandum (Guiness v. Land Corporation of Ireland, 1882, 22 Ch. Div. 349). Here there was no provision in the Memorandum for any preference in the matter of distribution of capital; under Article 5 the two classes of shares were submitted to equal treatment quoad capital. Articles 43 and 137 might validly create a pre erence in regard to dividends, but could not be iven effect to as regulating the repayment of apital in conflict with Article 5.

The Court answered the question in the ffirmative.

The Lord President.—The first matter that is efore your Lordships in this case is the deter-ination of a question which has arisen in the inding up of the Humboldt Redwood Company, nd which is brought before your Lordships by Ir Sime, the liquidator in the voluntary winding p of that Company. The question as put by he liquidator is this: "Whether the ordinary hareholders are entitled to receive payment of heir capital in full before the deferred share-olders receive anything on account of their apital or not?" That question is one of the implest, and must be solved by reference to the onstituting documents of the Company. The Memorandum of Association provides in Article that "The capital of the Company is £250,000, ivided into 139,092 ordinary shares of £1 each, nd 110,908 deferred shares of £1 each." The rticles of Association provide by Article 137 hat "in the event of the Company being issolved and wound up, the different shares or tocks of the Company shall be repaid out of the ssets of the Company as realised, in the order in hich the shares or stocks are entitled to rank or payment of dividend." And by the 43rd rticle it is provided that "the holders of ordinary hares of the Company shall be entitled to receive ut of the profits of each year a cumulative referential dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. er annum on the amount for the time being aid up on the ordinary shares held by them espectively, and the surplus profits in each year hall belong to the holders of the deferred hares."

Now there can only be one meaning to these ords. It is too clear to admit of argument that he ordinary shareholders are to be paid in full efore the deferred shareholders get anything. But the argument is that these provisions in he Articles of Association are bad, as being ontrary to the terms of the Memorandum, and he well-known doctrine is invoked that the Memorandum is the ruling document and over-ides anything in the Articles of Association hat may be contrary to its provisions.

As far as I can see there is no inconsistency etween the two documents here. The Memo-andum only states that the capital of the Company is to be divided in certain proportions etween two classes of shares. Mr Hunter says he inference from that is that these shares are to ank equally both as to dividend and as to livision of assets. There is no authority for hat proposition, and I think the matter is letermined by the decision in Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., L.R. [1897], 1 Ch. 361, where Lord Justice Lindley says: "These decisions turned upon the principle that although by sect. 8 of the Act the memorandum is to state the amount of the original capital and the number of shares into which it is to be divided, yet in other respects the rights of the shareholders in respect of their shares and the terms on which additional capital may be raised are matters to be regulated by the Articles of Association rather than by the Memorandum, and are therefore matters which (unless provided for by the memorandum as in Ashbury v. Watson, 30 Ch. Div. 376) may be determined by the Company from time to time by special resolution pursuant to sect. 50 of the Act. This view, however, clearly negatives the doctrine that there is a condition in the Memorandum of Association that all shareholders are to be on an equality unless the Memorandum itself shews the contrary. That proposition is, in our opinion, unsound. Its unsoundness was distinctly pointed out by Lord Macnaghten in British and American Trustee and Finance Corporation v. Couper, L.R. [1894], A.C. 416, 417." To all there said I respectfully subscribe. All that the Memorandum does here is to say that there shall be two classes of shareholders, but it leaves it to the Articles of Association to prescribe their respective rights. The answer therefore to the question put by the liquidator must be in the affirmative.

[His Lordship then proceeded to deal with the second matter before the Court, which is not now reported.]

cerned For in Decree of Aliment Against Deceased — Held That Act Does Not Prescribe Award of Maximum Sum Available in Every Case—Circumstances in which Remitted to Sheriff to Put a Value on the Prospective Contributions Which Deceased Would Probably have made had he Lived.

II. Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 58), Schedule I, 1 (a) (1) —Funeral Expenses—Father, Though Not Dependent on Earnings of Deceased, Found Entitled to Repayment of Funeral Expenses out of Fund Available for Compensation.

Appeal from the Sheriff Court of Forfarshire at Arbroath.

Stated Case under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906.

This was a stated case on an arbitration in which Margaret Ann Murray, the pupil and illegitimate child of and residing with her mother Helen Murray, in Arbroath, and of John Farquharson Murray, sought to have determined the compensation payable to her on account of the death of her father the said John Farquharson Murray, who was killed whilst in the employment of Gourlay, the appellant, and the joint arbitration at the instance of James Murray, the father of the deceased, who claimed compensation for the death of his son.

The Workmen's Compensation Act provides, First Schedule:

(1) The amount of compensation under this Act shall be (a) where death results from the injury— (1) If the workman leaves any dependants wholly dependent upon his earnings, ... [a sum defined by the provisions of that sub-section] and (ii) If the workman does not leave any such dependants, but leaves any dependants in part dependent upon his earnings, such sum, not exceeding in any case the amount payable under the foregoing provisions, as may be agreed upon, or, in default of agreement, may be determined, on arbitration under this Act, to be reasonable and proportionate to the injury to the said dependants. . . .

The facts as stated were as follows:

The Sheriff-Substitute, as arbitrator, in his award of date 23rd December 1907, found in fact that it is admitted that the deceased John Farquharson Murray was killed on 9th August 1907 by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and that his average weekly earnings were 18s. 6d. Found further in fact that the claimant Margaret Ann Murray is the illegitimate daughter of the said deceased, conform to extract decree of affiliation and aliment obtained on 17th July 1907, and that she was at the time of his death partially dependent upon his earnings; that the deceased for some time immediately preceding his decease boarded with his father, the claimant James Murray; that he paid his said father at the rate of 12s. per week; that the said weekly sum was not fixed under any definite arrangement as to the price payable by the decease for his board; that 12s. is a full but not an unusu sum for a person in the deceased's position to pay f his weekly board; that the said claimant Jam Murray is an able-bodied labourer in receipt regular wages, and that he was not, at the time deceased's death, either wholly or partially d pendent upon the deceased's earnings. Foun further, in fact that the deceased's funeral expense amounting to £5, 10s. or thereby, have been paid t the claimant James Murray. Found that the su available for compensation in terms of the Workmer Compensation Act 1906 is £150. Found in law th the claimant James Murray, not having been d pendent on the deceased, had no claim to compens tion under the Act, but is entitled, out of the su available for compensation, to repayment of th amount paid by him for funeral expenses; and th the claimant Margaret Ann Murray, having bee partially dependent on the deceased, is entitled to reasonable sum proportionate to the injury to h through the deceased's death as compensation therefo Assessed the compensation due to the said claima at £144, 10s.

Found the defender and the claimant Jam Murray each liable to the claimant Margaret An Murray in £5, 11s. of expenses.

The Question of Law submitted to the Cou was:

Whether the sum assessed is reasonable and pr portionate to the injury to the claimant Ma garet Ann Murray in so far that it exceeds amount the aggregate of the alimentary co tributions in which the deceased workma would have been liable had he lived?

Argued for the Appellant: The Sheriff was wro in awarding the total sum available as compens tion under the Act in a case where admitted there was only partial dependency. He w bound to take into consideration the amount aliment due to the respondent by her mothe (2) The measure of the respondent's dependen upon her father was fixed by the decree of alime already pronounced. The capitalised value the sum due, according to the terms of th decree, was, at the time of the father's death, £7 The Sheriff was wrong in so far as he had award a sum in excess of this amount.

Argued for the Respondent: The Sheriff w entitled in his discretion to award any su which he considered reasonable and proportiona to the respondent's injury up to the limit allow by the Act (Bevan v. Crawshay Brothers [190 1 K.B. 25, per Collins, M.R., at p. 29; Baird Co. v. Birsztan, 1906, 8 F. 438). The amount aliment as fixed by previous decree did not nec sarily rule the amount to be considered reas able and proportionate to the injury at the ti of the death. The Sheriff was entitled to co sider all the circumstances which might affe the father's liability for aliment at any ti (Oncken's Factor v. Reimers, 1892, 19 R. 51 A. B. v. C. D., 1900, 2 F. 610).

The Court remitted back to the Sher

Substitute with instructions to him to put a value on the prospective contributions which if he had lived the deceased John Murray would probably have made towards the support of his illegitimate child, and found it unnecessary further to answer the question of law.

Lord M'Laren.—In this case the important facts are that the deceased John Murray was killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and that he left an illegitimate child, Margaret Ann Murray, who was partially dependent on his earnings. The Sheriff-Substitute, acting as arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906, has found that the sum available for compensation is £150, and he has awarded this sum, less £5, 10s. for funeral expenses, as the compensation due to the child. I may here notice that it has been held in England (Bevan, [1902], 1 K.B. 25) that in such a case reasonable funeral expenses are a proper charge on the available fund, and I propose that we should follow this decision. The question then remains, whether the Sheriff-Substitute was right in awarding the balance of the available fund to the child as compensation?

The Act of 1906 puts illegitimate children and grandchildren into the category of dependants, and in their case, just as in the case of lawful children, the question must be, What is the measure of the parent's obligation to maintain the child?

According to the judgment of the House of Lords in Main Colliery Co. v. Davies [1900], A.C. 358, this is a question of fact in each case, to be determined neither by strictly legal considerations nor by any supposed standard of living in the class to which the workman belongs, but by taking into consideration the extent to which the applicant was in fact dependent on the injured workman, and putting a value upon the benefit which the applicant derived from being so dependent.

In the question put to us it is stated (inferentially) that the sum assessed "exceeds in amount the aggregate of the alimentary contributions in which the deceased workman would have been liable had he lived." Now, it is evident that the deceased was not a willing contributor to the support of his illegitimate child, because he allowed a decree of affiliation and aliment to go out against him, and no facts are stated which warrant the inference that the deceased would have contributed anything in excess of what he could be compelled by law to pay. If there are grounds for holding that the deceased voluntarily recognised an obligation to contribute to a larger extent than he was legally bound to do, the arbitrator would be right in taking such evidence into account. But I think that in awarding the whole available fund, less funeral expenses, the Sheriff-Substitute has proceeded on a wrong principle, because the Act of Parliament does not prescribe that the maximum sum available for compensation should be awarded in every case, but only that reasonable compensation within that limit should be paid. We cannot in this Court determine the amount, because we are not judges of the issue of fact in such cases, though we may in some cases be under the necessity of determining such subordinate facts as raise a question of law for our decision. All that we can do in this case is to remit to the Sheriff, with instructions to put a value on the prospective contributions which the deceased would probably have made, if he had lived, keeping in mind that an exact estimate of the deceased's responsibility is seldom possible, and is not required by the statute.

Appeal from the Sheriff Court of Perthshire at Perth.

This was an action brought by James M. Sinclair, residing in the parish of Moulin, Perthshire, against the School Board of Moulin, and also against William MacGowan, schoolmaster, Pitlochry. The pursuer prayed the Court—

"To interdict, prohibit and discharge the defenders, and each of them, and all persons acting under the authority or upon the instructions of them, or either of them, from refusing to enrol the pursuer as a pupil at Pitlochry Public School, and from preventing him entering, or excluding or expelling him from, said school, or in any other way obstructing his attendance as a pupil at said school during school hours; and to grant interim interdict, or otherwise; and alternatively to decern and ordain the defenders the School Board of the parish of Moulin to make sufficient and available provision elsewhere for the efficient education of the pursuer."

The pursuer averred:

COND. 1. The pursuer is an illegitimate child, and resides with his grandfather, James Sinclair, at Cloichard Cottages, Pitlochry, in the parish of Moulin, Perthshire. He was born in Pitlochry on 5th June 1896. The defender William MacGowan is headmaster of Pitlochry Public School, which is vested in and is under the control and management of the defenders the School Board of the parish of Moulin.

COND. 2. Since he was six years of age the pursuer has attended Pitlochry Public School. On or about December 1906 the defender William MacGowan, without assigning any reason, turned him out of school, and told him to go home and stay there.

COND. 4. On 12th January 1907 the pursuer was examined by Dr Robert Stirling, Perth, who granted a certificate in the following terms:—"James Sinclair is a backward child, but not, in my opinion, unfit for education, though probably unfit to keep pace with the average schoolboy. He requires special consideration on account of physical weakness."

COND. 5. Subsequently, on the suggestion of the Scotch Education Department, the pursuer was examined on behalf of the School Board by Dr Ash, medical adviser to the Carnegie Trust, Dunfermline, who reported of date 6th May 1907 that the pursuer not being imbecile, is by reason of mental defect incapable of receiving proper benefit from the instruction in ordinary schools, but capable of receiving instruction in special classes. The pursuer denies that he is incapable of receiving benefit from the instruction in Pitlochry Public School. The defenders the School Board have not tendered him instruction in special classes, and he believes and avers that they have not provided any such classes. Denied that Dr Ash was accepted by the pursuer or on his behalf as medical referee.

In a statement of facts, the defenders the School Board of Moulin stated:

STAT. 2. In September 1906 the pursuer was transferred to the junior department of the school, not as in the usual course because he was qualified to leave the infant department, but because it was thought unreasonable that he should remain any longer in the infant department to associate with children much younger than himself, and to continue to be a source of annoyance to class after class.

STAT. 3. The pursuer attended school most irregularly because of frequent illnesses, chiefly violent headaches. Great difficulty was found in teaching him. He had no power of concentration, and was very restless. Lessons caused him cerebral excitement, bringing on violent headaches and vomiting, and his frequent illnesses were really the result of attempting to teach him. He could repeat words or figures after a teacher, but could not recognise them when written or printed. His restlessness disturbed the teaching of the other pupils, and he could not be punished, as he was not mentally or physically fit. The efficiency of the school suffered from his disturbing influence.

STAT. 4. Little or no improvement resulted from the long-continued efforts to educate the pursuer in school, and in December 1906 these defenders, having fully considered the circumstances, deemed it unreasonable and inexpedient that he should be longer received as a pupil in school.

The pursuer denied the statements as to his conduct and as to his physical and mental condition.

The defenders the School Board pleaded inter alia: "1.: No title to sue."

On 13th August 1907 the Sheriff-Substitute (Sym) repelled the first plea in law for the defenders the School Board, and dismissed the action so far as laid against the defender MacGowan.

On 28th October 1907 the Sheriff-Substitute allowed a proof.

The defenders the School Board appealed to the Sheriff (Johnston), who on 6th December 1907 recalled the interlocutor of 28th October 1907, found in law that the defenders were not bound to admit the pursuer as an ordinary pupil at Pitlochry school, or to provide special arrangements for his instruction, and dismissed the action.

The Education (Scotland) Act 1901 (1 Edw. VII. cap. 9) provides:

Sect. 1. It shall be the duty of every parent to provide efficient elementary education in reading, writing and arithmetic for his children who are between five and fourteen years of age.

The Education of Defective Children (Scotland) Act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. cap. 10) provides:

Sect. 1. From and after the commencement of this Act it shall be lawful for a school board in Scotland, if they think fit, either alone or in combination with one or more school boards, to make special provision for the education, medical inspection, and, where required, for the conveyance to and from school of epileptic or crippled or defective children between five and sixteen years of age, within their education district, and to defray the cost thereof out of the school rate.

Sect. 2. The expression "defective children" means children who, not being imbecile, and not being merely dull or backward, are, by reason of mental or physical defect, incapable of receiving proper benefit from the instruction in the ordinary schools.

The Pursuer appealed and argued: Every child resident in a parish, not being a lunatic, had an absolute right to be educated in the public school (Barr v. Smith, 1903, 5 F. J.C. 24, per Lord Young). This was a necessary corollary of the provisions which imposed on parents the duty of providing elementary education (Education (Scotland) Act 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. cap. 62, sects. 69, 70; Education (Scotland) Act 1883, 46 & 47 Vict. cap. 56, sect. 4; Education (Scotland) Act 1901, 1 Edw. VII., cap. 9, sects. 1, 4). The scheme of the Education Acts was that every child in the country should be educated (Education (Scotland) Act 1878, 41 & 42 Vict. cap. 78, sect. 22; Education (Scotland) Act 1883, sects. 6, 9; Education of Blind and Deaf-mute Children (Scotland) Act 1890, 53 & 54 Vict. cap. 43, sect. 3; Education of Defective Children (Scotland) Act 1906, 6 Edw. VII. cap. 10, sect. 1). The duties of the School Board were to provide sufficient school accommodation, to maintain the schools in an efficient condition, to appoint and dismiss teachers, and to safeguard the interest of the ratepayers (Education (Scotland) Act 1872, sect. 36; Kelso School Board v. Hunter, 1874, 2 R. 228, per L. P. Inglis at p. 230; Morison v. Glenshiel School Board, 1875, 2 R. 715, per Lord Young, Ordinary, at pp. 718 and 719). But they had no jurisdiction to exclude from the public school any child whose parent was bound to provide elementary education. If they attempted to do so, they went outwith their statutory powers and might be set right by the Court. The argument that the pursuer must be excluded in the interests of efficiency was unsound, because the defenders had the alternative of exercising their powers to make special provision in the case of defective children (Education of Defective Children Act 1906, sect. 1). The defenders were not bound to make special provision, but if they did not do so they must admit the pursuer into the public school. Haddow v. Glasgow School Board (1898, 25 R. 988) was distinguishable. It was held there that the Board might exclude a child whose parents refused to provide books. The decision must have been different if the parents had been unable to pay for books, and that was the case which would be truly analogous to the present. Accordingly the pursuer was entitled to decree de plano. Alternatively he was entitled to a proof, because it was averred that he was not defective, but only dull and backward. If that averment were true it was clear that he could not be excluded. The pursuer had a title to sue. Title to sue depended mainly on interest, and the pursuer had plainly an interest in receiving education.

Argued for the Defenders: There was no absolute obligation on the defenders to admit the pursuer into the public school (Haddow v. Glasgow School Board, cit.; M'Fadzean v. Kilmalcolm School Board, 1903, 5 F. 600). The defenders had a statutory duty to keep the school efficient (Education Act 1872, sect. 36), and were entitled to exclude the pursuer if they thought it necessary to do so in the interests of efficiency. In the present case it was necessary, because it was plain that the pursuer was not fit to attend school, and that his presence was inconsistent with the maintenance of discipline. The question whether the pursuer should be admitted or excluded was a question for the defenders, who had been entrusted with the administration of the Education Acts in the district in question. The defenders were subject only to the control of the Education Department, and their decision on an administrative question could not be reviewed by the Court (M'Fadzean v. Kilmalcolm School Board, cit.; Lord Advocate v. Stow School Board, 1876, 3 R. 469; Barr v. Smith, cit.). The defenders were not bound to make special provision for the pursuer. The Education of 2nd Div. Sinclair v. Moulin School Board.

Defective Children Act 1906 was permissive. The pursuer had no title to sue. The duty of providing education was laid upon the parent or guardian of the child (Education Act 1872, sect. 69, Education Act 1901, sect. 1), and it was for the parent, not for the child, to select the place of education (Education Act 1883, sect. 9). The title to sue, therefore, was not in the child but in the parent or guardian.

The Court recalled the interlocutors of the Sheriff and the Sheriff-Substitute, sustained the first plea in law for the defenders the School Board, dismissed the action, and found the defenders entitled to the expenses of the appeal.

The Lord Justice-Clerk.—The pursuer in this case is a child, and the purpose of the case is at the instance of the child to interdict the Moulin School Board from preventing him from attending their school, and from obstructing his attendance at school, and alternatively to ordain the School Board to make sufficient provision elsewhere for his efficient education. I have no doubt that such an action by a child is incompetent. The duty of education lies upon the parent or the person who is in loco parentis, and he has the right to demand education. It is not a right given to the child to demand education in its own name. I do not enlarge upon this, as I concur in Lord Stormonth-Darling's opinion, which I have seen. But even if the action were competent in the form in which it is laid, I am of opinion that the Sheriff has rightly decided the case.

The facts are that the School Board have decided that the child is "mentally incapable of receiving instruction in a Board School"—giving great trouble, and being incapable of learning anything and interfering by his conduct with the proper conducting of the class in which he was. They accordingly decided that until they received a certificate of improvement in his condition from a medical man he could not be allowed to attend the school. A medical man who was consulted gave a certificate, that special requirements being attended to, the child might be taught. The Board having considered the matter, held that this could not be done with justice to the school as a whole. Accordingly the matter was brought before the Board of Education, which obtained a report from a skilled physician of their own choice. His report was quite decided as to the unfitness of the child to receive education in the Board School. This child is thus certified to be a "defective child" in the sense of the Education Act.

These being the facts, they seem to me to be conclusive. To allow a proof whether the Board's discretion has been rightly exercised, I hold to be quite out of the question. They are the proper tribunal, subject to review of the Education Department, and without some relevant allegation of mala fides there is no room for further judicial enquiry.

Finally, as to the demand that they shall find another place for the child's education, it is sufficient to say that the statute lays no obligation upon the Board in the case of such a child. It confers a power on the Board "if they see fit" to make special arrangements. It is obvious that in some circumstances such action may be reasonably feasible, and in other circumstances it may be impracticable. Of this they must judge. There is nothing in this case which tends towards the conclusion that they have not exercised their judgment fairly and reasonably.

I would therefore move your Lordships to affirm the Sheriff's judgment.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—This is an action at the instance of a pupil child (of the age of eleven at the date when the action was raised) against the School Board of the parish of Moulin in Perthshire, to have the defenders interdicted from excluding the pursuer from the public school of Pitlochry, and alternatively to have the School Board ordained to make sufficient and available provision elsewhere for the efficient education of the pursuer. Pupillarity being, in contemplation of the law, a state of absolute incapacity, it was clear that the action could not proceed as it stood; and the pursuer being illegitimate, and having no legal guardian, the Sheriff-Substitute adopted the expedient of appointing Mr Gordon, a solicitor in Perth, to be curator ad litem to the pursuer, and by a later interlocutor repelled the plea of "no title to sue." It seems to me that, however unobjectionable the course adopted by the Sheriff-Substitute would have been in an ordinary action, it was not the proper course to take when it was brought under his notice by both parties that the pursuer resided with his grandfather, who had the actual custody of the child and was therefore undeniably his "parent" within the meaning of section 1 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1872. In such a case as this I hold that the plea of "no title to sue" should have been sustained and not repelled, for the proper person to raise any question as to the duty of a School Board to receive any particular child is, in my opinion, not the child himself, but the parent of the child, or the person having the actual custody of the child, on whom the duty of providing efficient elementary education in reading, writing and arithmetic for children between five and fourteen years of age was laid by section 1 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1901. And it is to be observed that the definition which I have quoted above from the Act of 1872 is read into the Act of 1901, because by section 7 all the Education Acts from 1872 to 1901 are to be construed as one Act. In short, there are only two legal personae—the School Board and the parent as defined in the Act of 1872—standing towards each other with correlative rights and duties. It is said that the child himself has an interest; and I admit that he will ultimately have the highest interest of all. But for the time being he has no interest, because he has no duty, except the passive one of imbibing the instruction which he receives. Certainly he has no interest on which, even apart from his status of pupillarity, he can sue, and no rights which he can enforce.

I therefore think that we ought to sustain the plea of "no title to sue" which the Sheriff-Substitute repelled by the interlocutor of 13th August 1907. But since we had an interesting argument on the question whether even the grandfather, having the actual custody of the child, could insist on the child being received by the School Board into the public school, or else on their making sufficient provision elsewhere for his efficient education, it is, I think, desirable to take the case upon the footing that the action had been brought at his instance, and not at the child's. Now, the whole difficulty here is personal to the boy. After doing their best for his education since he was six years of age the School Board, through their clerk, intimated to the boy's grandfather that he was mentally incapable of receiving instruction in a board school, that he was a source of great trouble in the class, as he was quite incapable of learning anything, and could not sit still, but wandered about the room, thus distracting the attention of the class; and for other reasons which are fully set out in their letter of 27th December 1906, they concluded by intimating that the boy could not be permitted to enter Pitlochry school unless the grandfather produced a certificate from a duly qualified medical man that the boy was so far improved mentally as to be capable of receiving instruction at a Board school in the usual way. The grandfather then had him examined by Dr Stirling of Perth (a medical practioner of good standing) who granted a rather inconclusive certificate. This certificate was intimated to and considered by the School Board, and their reply was that, as they had no school staff sufficient to have the boy specially taught, and as the teacher could not neglect the other children in the class in order to give special teaching to this boy, they must adhere to their former determination not to admit him to Pitlochry school.

The matter then seems to have been brought under the notice of the Scotch Education Department, at the instance of the boy's legal adviser. But I am quite willing to accept the view taken by the Sheriff-Substitute that the pursuer and his advisers had done nothing to justify what might be called a "reference" of the child's capacity to attend school to Dr Ash of Dunfermline; but it is certain that Dr Ash was selected on the suggestion of the Department. That gentleman visited Pitlochry and examined the boy in the presence of his grandparents and his legal adviser on 3rd May 1907. Three days afterwards he made a careful and detailed report, which was forwarded to the Department by the School Board. The practical conclusion of it was that "in any case instruction could only be carried out in special schools. In my opinion, therefore, the boy, not being imbecile, is by reason of mental defect incapable of receiving proper benefit from the instruction in ordinary schools, but capable of receiving instruction in special classes." These words are an echo of sect. 2 of the Education of Defective Children (Scotland) Act 1906, which defines defective children thus:—"The expression 'defective children' means children who, not being imbecile, and not being merely dull and backward, are, by reason of mental or physical defect, incapable of receiving proper benefit from the instruction in the ordinary schools." And by sect. 3 of the same Act it is enacted that "this Act shall be construed as one with the Education (Scotland) Acts 1872 to 1906." To complete the narrative of this correspondence (which is all admitted and referred to), it is proper to add that it ended with a letter from the Department of 10th May 1907, saying that "the boy in question would appear to belong to the category of 'defective children,' for whom special provisions may be made by a school board in terms of the Education of Defective Children (Scotland) Act 1906." And it is important to note that the power to make this "special provision" is all qualified by the words "if they think fit."

Accordingly the question comes to be, Has the grandfather, as the actual custodier of the boy, and therefore as being, for the purposes of the Education Acts from 1872 downwards, in the position of his parent, any right in the circumstances to insist in either alternative of this petition? He is not bound to send him to a public school; his duty is discharged if he has him efficiently educated in reading, writing and arithmetic, in any school of his selection. If the boy is, "by reason of mental defect, incapable of receiving proper benefit from the instruction in ordinary schools," as Dr Ash's report and the letter of the Department says he is, it would undoubtedly be unfortunate for the poor boy that he should be debarred from receiving the little instruction of which he is capable. But, on the other hand, why should the whole order and discipline of the school and the efficient education of the other children in the school, for which the School Board are responsible, be upset by the presence of this hapless lad? It is no question of mere dulness and backwardness. For the exclusion of a case of that kind from its provisions the statute of 1906 makes careful provision, no doubt for the reason that there would be a certain danger in allowing such a case to come within the category of mental defect. But, literally, the only averment in the condescendence of which the proof allowed by the Sheriff-Substitute (though rather unwillingly, as I gather) could take note is the averment in Cond. 5: "The pursuer denies that he is incapable of receiving benefit from the instructions in Pitlochry public school." Is that a kind of averment which a court of law can be asked to send to proof? It is always within the competency and duty of a court of law to enquire whether a public body to which has been committed a certain duty of enquiring into facts, have acted reasonably and within the powers entrusted to them, or capriciously and in disregard of those powers (see observations of Lord President Inglis in Lord Advocate v. Stow School Board, 1876, 3 R. at p. 473). But here it is not suggested that any such disregard of statutory powers has occurred, either on the part of the School Board or the Education Department. And if these two public bodies have acted within their powers, can it be said that they are not, each in its own sphere, the proper judges of this boy's fitness for receiving benefit from the ordinary instruction in a public school, and next whether the School Board can be called upon, in justice to the other interests involved, to make special provision for the efficient education of the particular boy? If this latter demand is to be open to any parent, or person in loco parentis, I confess I do not see why the legislature was careful, after referring to a School Board in Scotland, to insert the words "if they think fit."

It therefore seems to me that the Sheriff has decided the case upon perfectly right grounds (except only, as I have explained, that he ought to have sustained the plea of "no title to sue"). He has found no expenses due to or by either party in the Sheriff Court, and as this was an action against a public body on the construction of a recent statute, I think this may pass. But I also think that the pursuer and his advisers, having got a sound judgment against them from the Sheriff, were not entitled to carry the case further, except on penalty of bearing the expenses of the appeal, and I am therefore in favour of finding the School Board entitled to the expenses of this appeal.

Lord Ardwall.—I concur in the opinion which has just been delivered by Lord Stormonth-Darling. I am of opinion that the Sheriff-Substitute erred in repelling the plea of no title to sue. Under the Education Acts the two parties concerned in attending to the education of a child are, on the one hand, the parent, and on the other hand the School Board, the parent being bound to see to it that the child goes to school, and the School Board, under sect. 26 of the Education Act of 1872, being bound to provide efficient schools. "Parent" is defined by sect. 1 of the said Act to include "guardian, and any person who is liable to maintain or has the actual custody of any child." In the present case the parent in the sense of the Act is the pupil's grandfather, in whose custody he is and with whom he resides, and he was the proper person to raise an action against the School Board regarding the education of the pursuer if such action were justifiable. A pupil child does not appear to me to have, under the Education Acts or at common law, any title to sue an action of this kind, and it would be exposing School Boards to a risk of vexatious litigation were they liable to have actions raised against them nominally at the instance of pupil children but of course at the instigation of older people, who might be possibly moved thereto by motives not of the best description.

In the next place, and supposing that the action had been at the instance of the pursuer's grandfather, I am of opinion that the Sheriff-Substitute made a mistake in allowing a proof, I suppose with the object of enabling himself to determine the question whether the defenders were justified in excluding the pursuer from their school owing to his mental condition; and it seems to have been in the contemplation of the Sheriff-Substitute that after evidence of the kind usually given in cases involving enquiries of this kind, which as every one knows is generally lengthy and conflicting, he should then decide whether the pursuer was entitled to be educated at the Pitlochry Public School or elsewhere. Now it appears to me that under the Education Acts School Boards are the proper judges of questions of this kind, and that their actings ought not to be interfered with unless, as the Sheriff puts it, their decision is capricious or unconscionable, or founded on an erroneous view of the law, and I might add, or if their conduct has been oppressive. But there is no suggestion in the whole proceedings in this matter that the School Board have acted otherwise than regularly and fairly; and not only have they, after careful investigation, determined this question in the way they have done, but the matter has been investigated by the Scotch Education Department with the assistance of an able expert in such matters, and I think it is out of the question to propose that there should now be a proof, and that the Sheriff-Substitute should upon that proof review the resolution that has been come to by the School Board and has been approved of by the Board of Education.

By sect. 26 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1872, it is provided that all public schools shall be under the management of the School Board of the parish or burgh in which they are situated. The exercise of their discretion in regard to the management of the school, including of course the question of the exclusion or admission of any pupil, forms part of the functions of the School Board as managers of the school; and resolutions arrived at by them with regard to such matters ought not, in my opinion, to be interfered with except on very weighty grounds, and none such exist here.

As I agree with what has been said by the Lord Justice-Clerk, by Lord Stormonth-Darling, and by the Sheriff in his note, it is unnecessary for me to add more.—17*th March* 1908.

395. Robert Muir & Company Limited v. United Collieries Limited.

Expenses — Arrestment Used on Dependence of Action—Motion for Recal of Arrestments Made by Defenders Prior to Lodging of Defences—Motion Refused by Lord Ordinary as Incompetent—Pursuers Found Entitled to Expenses of Action—Held Pursuers Entitled to Expenses of Opposing Motion for Recal of Arrestments.

Note of Objections to Auditor's Report.

Robert Muir & Co. Ltd. brought an action against the United Collieries Ltd. and used arrestments on the dependence.

Before defences were lodged, the defenders, without presenting a petition under the Personal Diligence Act 1838, sect. 20, moved the Lord Ordinary (Low) to recal the arrestments. The pursuers resisted the motion, on the ground that it was incompetent, and also on the merits. The Lord Ordinary refused the motion as incompetent.

The pursuers were ultimately successful in the action, and were found entitled to expenses.

On taxation the Auditor disallowed the expense of opposing the motion for the recal of the arrestments. The pursuers lodged a note of objections to the Auditor's report, in which they objected to, inter alia, this disallowance.

The Personal Diligence Act 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. cap. 114) provides:

> Sect. 20. And be it enacted, that . . . . it shall be competent to the Lord Ordinary in the Court of Session before whom any summons containing warrant of arrestment shall be enrolled as judge therein, or before whom any action on the dependence whereof letters of arrestment have been executed has been or shall be enrolled as judge therein, and to the Lord Ordinary on the bills in time of vacation, on the application of the debtor or defender by petition duly intimated to the creditor or pursuer, to which answers may be ordered, to recal or to restrict such arrestment, on caution or without caution, and to dispose of the question of expenses, as shall appear just. . . .

2nd Div.

Robert Muir & Co. Ltd. v. United Collieries Ltd.

Argued for the Pursuers: No doubt where there was a petition for recal of arrestments that was a separate process, and the question of expenses must be decided or reserved in that process. But here the application was made by motion before the Lord Ordinary. That was a part of the process in which the pursuers had been found entitled to expenses, and, moreover, a part of the case in which the pursuers had been completely successful. The objection should therefore be sustained.

Argued for the Defenders: Prior to the Personal Diligence Act 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. cap. 114), arrestments could be recalled only by bill or petition in the Inner House. Under sect. 20 of the Personal Diligence Act arrestments could be recalled by petition presented to the Lord Ordinary, and that had in practice been held to include a motion before the Lord Ordinary. But a petition was necessarily a separate process, and as a motion to the Lord Ordinary was competent only because it was covered by the word petition, the motion must also be deemed to be a separate process, and if expenses were to be recovered the question must be disposed of or reserved at the time (Graham Stewart, Diligence, p. 213).

The Court sustained the objection to the extent of £3, 3s.—17*th March* 1908.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

(The Lord Justice-Clerk, Lords Low and Ardwall.)

396. Turnbull v. H.M. Advocate.

Justiciary Cases—Appeal—Merchandise Marks Act 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. cap. 28), sects. 1 (5) and 21—Held that There is No Appeal from the Sheriff Court to a Court of Quarter Sessions under the Merchandise Marks Act 1887.

Bill of Suspension and Liberation.

This was a bill of suspension and liberation for John Turnbull, residing at 110 Houston Street, Glasgow, in which he sought to suspend a conviction dated on or about 16th March 1908, whereby the Sheriff (Chisholm) of Roxburgh, Berwick, and Selkirk found the complainer guilty of a contravention of the Merchandise Marks Act 1887.

The complainer stated various objections to the regularity of the conviction, but the only question now reported was whether he was entitled to interim liberation pending an appeal to a Court of Quarter Sessions.

The complainer prayed the Court to suspend the said pretended conviction and sentence simpliciter; and to ordain the complainer to be immediately set at liberty, if not already liberated, ad interim.

The Merchandise Marks Act 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. cap. 28) provides:

Sect. 1 (5). If any person feels aggrieved by any conviction made by a Court of Summary Jurisdiction, he may appeal therefrom to a Court of Quarter Sessions.

Sect. 21. In the application of this Act to Scotland the following modifications shall be made:—

The expression "Court of Summary Jurisdiction" means the Sheriff Court, and all jurisdiction necessary for the purpose of this Act is hereby conferred on Sheriffs.

Argued for the Complainer: The complainer was entitled to appeal from the Sheriff to a Court of Quarter Sessions (Merchandise Marks Act 1887, 50 & 51 Vict. cap. 28, sects. 1 (5) and 21). Pending the appeal the Court would grant interim liberation. It was clear on the terms of the Act that the appeal was competent, but in any view the question should be decided in the first instance by the tribunal to which the appeal was taken (Pirrie v. List, 1867, 5 Irvine 433).

Argued for the Respondent: Even if an appeal to a Court of Quarter Sessions were competent, no appeal had been taken in the present case. Therefore there could be no liberation pending appeal. But in truth such an appeal was not competent. Appeal from the Sheriff to a Court of Quarter Sessions was unknown in Scots practice, and sect. 1 (5) of the Merchandise Marks Act applied only to England (Dunbar v. Johnstone, 1904, 4 Adam 505). Appeal was competent by way of Stated Case under sect. 3 of the Summary Prosecutions Appeals Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. cap. 62).

The Court refused the prayer of the bill of suspension and liberation.

The Lord Justice-Clerk.—The complainer here asks for interim liberation, pending an appeal to a Court of Quarter Sessions of a case which was tried before the Sheriff. Such an appeal would be an absolute novelty in procedure. In a case in which jurisdiction is committed to the Sheriff, it is absurd to say that he should have his decision reviewed by a Court of Quarter Sessions, and not by this Court, which usually has the power of review. This Act of Parliament was originally framed as an English Act, in which the original proceedings were before the justices, and gives an appeal to Quarter Sessions, which is the usual court of appeal in that country. But the Legislature, in applying the Act to Scotland, saw fit to exclude the jurisdiction of the justices, and to give the jurisdiction to the Sheriff. I think the sound view is, that if the justices are not to try the case in the first instance, the Court of Quarter Sessions cannot be the court of review. It must be borne in mind that a proceeding before a Court of Quarter Sessions is not a process of review, but a new trial from the beginning, the proceedings before the justices in Petty Sessions being nullified by the appeal. It is inconceivable if the Legislature had intended to bring about this extraordinary result of a new trial by justices of a case dealt with by the Sheriff, that they should do it by a side wind, and should have left open two alternative modes of review—first, an appeal to a Court of Quarter Sessions; and second, an appeal by way of stated case to the High Court of Justiciary under sect. 3 of the Summary Appeals Act 1875. If the complainer here had brought an appeal by way of stated case instead of a suspension, he would have been in a more favourable position, for he would then have been heard on the merits. I hold that the suggestion of an appeal to a Court of Quarter Sessions is quite out of the question. I adopt what Lord Kinnear says in the following passage from his judgment in the case of Dunbar v. Johnston (4 Adam 505): "There are Summary Jurisdiction Acts in England and also in Scotland. Trial in the manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts means trial in the manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts in force in either country according as the trial takes place in the one or the other." [His Lordship then adverted to points not now reported]. I am of opinion that the suspension should be refused.

Justiciary Cases — Sale of Food and Drugs—Prosecution at Instance of Officer of Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland—Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. cap. 51), sects. 2 and 3—Samples—Notice to Local Authority — Procedure Under Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. cap. 63), Followed—Held Conviction Valid Although Procedure Prescribed by Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1899, sect. 2, Not Followed.

Bill of Suspension.

This was a bill of suspension in which Patrick Falconer, provision merchant, Gorbals, Glasgow, prayed the Court to suspend a sentence dated on or about the 21st day of November 1907, whereby the Sheriff-Substitute of Lanarkshire at Glasgow (Mackenzie) found the complainer guilty of selling, in his shop at 70 Main Street, Gorbals, Glasgow, on the 24th day of August 1907, to the prejudice of the respondent, half a pound of Irish butter which was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the respondent, in respect that the respondent demanded Irish butter, and that the article sold to him did not consist of genuine Irish butter, in respect that it contained foreign fat to the extent of 74·30 per cent. or thereby, contrary to the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts 1875 to 1899, particularly the Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1875, sect. 6, and adjudged him to forfeit and pay the sum of £10 of penalty.

The complainer stated:

STAT. II. The oral evidence at the trial consisted solely of the evidence of the respondent and of a man named Frank David Doyle. The respondent is Chief Inspector for Great Britain, employed by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, and part of his duties as such inspector is to look after the sale of Irish produce in Great Britain and to see that it is sold as such. Some months before the date of the prosecution he was instructed by the Irish Department of Agriculture to go to Glasgow and make investigations about the sale of Irish produce there, and as the result of these investigations he received further instructions to again visit Glasgow and make purchases with the object of prosecuting the sellers. Those instructions were given by the said Board in the interest of the consumer and of agriculture in the United Kingdom. On 24th August last, in fulfilment of these instructions, he made four purchases of Irish butter, including the purchase from the complainer. When making said purchases, and, in particular, the purchase from the complainer, upon which the prosecution was instituted, the respondent stated he was making such purchase on behalf of the Irish Board of Agriculture for analysis.

STAT. V. After purchasing said butter from the complainer the respondent divided it into three parts: one of which he kept for himself, another of which he gave to the complainer, and the third part he sent to be analysed by Mr F. W. Harris, one of the city analysts for Glasgow. When the respondent received the analyst's certificate he handed it to Lord Ikerrin, the British Commissioner upon the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland. The said certificate was considered by Lord Ikerrin and by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland.

STAT. VI. . . . . No communication was sent to the Local Authority in Glasgow with regard to the purchase of said butter by respondent or by the said Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland or with regard to the analysis of it by Mr Harris, and no request was made by the respondent or by or on behalf of the said Board to the said Local Authority that they should enforce the provisions of the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts.

STAT. VIII. The respondent when procuring the sample did not divide the same into four parts, and did not deal with the same in the manner provided by the sub-sect. A of sub-sect. 1 of sect. 2 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1899, in respect that no fourth part was transmitted by him to the Board under whose instructions he was acting.

STAT. IX. In convicting the complainer the Sheriff-Substitute stated that he held it proved that the respondent had been instructed to prosecute, and did prosecute by direction of the Board of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, but that nevertheless he was in the same position as any other private person who made a purchase on his own behalf and for his own purposes in a Glasgow shop and submitted the same for analysis. The contention of the complainer, on the other hand, is that the respondent having prosecuted as an Inspector of and by direction, and for and on behalf of the Board of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, the provisions of the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts applicable to a prosecution by said Board ought to have been observed [infra]. In point of fact they were not.

The complainer pleaded, inter alia:

"1. The conviction and sentence complained of having been obtained upon a complaint brought by the respondent on behalf and by direction of the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, and said complaint having been brought without an analysis of the butter complained of and a request to prosecute having first been communicated to the Local Authority at Glasgow, said conviction and sentence are invalid and ought to be suspended.

2. The conviction and sentence complained of having been obtained upon a complaint brought by the respondent on behalf and by direction of the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, and the butter referred to in said complaint having been divided into three instead of into four parts, contrary to the provisions of the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts relative to a prosecution on behalf of said Department, said conviction and sentence are invalid, and ought to be suspended with expenses.

The Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. cap. 63) provides:

Sect. 6. No person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser, under a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds. . . .

Sect. 12. Any purchaser of an article of food or of a drug in any place being a district, county, city or burgh where there is any analyst appointed under this or any Act hereby repealed shall be entitled, on payment to such analyst of a sum not exceeding ten shillings and sixpence, or if there be no such analyst then acting for such place, to the analyst of another place of such sum as may be agreed upon between such person and the analyst, to have such article analysed by such analyst and to receive from him a certificate of the result of his analysis.

Sect. 14 (as amended by sect. 13 of the Sale of

High Court of Justiciary

Falconer v. Whyte.

Food and Drugs Act 1899). The person purchasing any article with the intention of submitting the same to analysis shall, after the purchase shall have been completed, forthwith notify to the seller or his agent selling the article his intention to have the same analysed by the public analyst, and shall divide the article into three parts to be then and there separated, and each part to be marked and sealed or fastened up in such manner as its nature will permit, and shall, if required to do so, deliver one of the parts to the seller or his agent.

He shall afterwards retain one of the said parts for future comparison and submit the third part, if he deems it right to have the article analysed, to the analyst.

The Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. cap. 51) provides:

Sect. 2. (1) The Local Government Board may in relation to any matter appearing to that Board to affect the general interest of the consumer, and the Board of Agriculture may in relation to any matter appearing to that Board to affect the general interests of agriculture in the United Kingdom, direct an officer of the Board to procure for analysis samples of any article of food, and thereupon the officer shall have all the powers of procuring samples conferred by the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, and those Acts shall apply as if the officer were an officer authorised to procure samples under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1875, except that (a) the officer procuring the sample shall divide the same into four parts and shall deal with three of such parts in the manner directed by sect. 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1875, as amended by this Act, and shall send the fourth part to the Board, and (b) the fee for analysis shall be payable to the analyst by the local authority of the place where the sample is procured.

(2) The Board shall communicate the result of the analysis of any such sample to the local authority, and thereupon there shall be the like duty and power on the part of the local authority to cause proceedings to be taken as if the local authority had caused the analysis to be made.

Sect. 3. (1) It shall be the duty of every local authority entrusted with the execution of the laws relating to the Sale of Food and Drugs to appoint a public analyst, and put in force from time to time, as occasion may arise, the powers with which they are invested, so as to provide proper securities for the Sale of Food and Drugs in a pure and genuine condition, and in particular to direct their officers to take samples for analysis.

(2) If the Local Government Board or Board of Agriculture, after communication with the local authority, are of opinion that the local authority have failed to execute or enforce any of the provisions of the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts in relation to any article of food, and that their failure affects the general interest of the consumer or the general interest of agriculture in the United Kingdom as the case may be, the Board concerned may, by order, empower an officer of the Board to execute and enforce these provisions or to procure the execution and enforcement thereof in relation to any article of food mentioned in the order.

Sect. 24. This Act shall apply to Ireland with the substitution for "The Board of Agriculture" of "The Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland," and for "The Local Government Board" of "The Local Government Board of Ireland. . . ."

Argued for Complainer: Under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts there were three different classes of prosecutors: (1) private purchasers; (2) officers of the Local Authority, who must adopt the procedure prescribed by the 1875 Act (sects. 13 and 14); and (3) officers of the Board of Agriculture, etc., who must adopt the procedure prescribed by the Act of 1899 (sects. 2 and 3). Here the prosecutor was acting on behalf of the Department of Agriculture in Ireland. He must therefore comply with the requirements of the Act of 1899. Now this had not been done, because the Department had not communicated with the Local Authority, and the sample had been divided into three instead of into four parts. The conviction was therefore bad.

Argued for Respondent: The Act of 1899 did not apply. The complaint proceeded under the Act of 1875. Any member of the public was entitled to make use of the procedure set out in sect. 14 of that Act. It followed that the respondent as a member of the public was entitled to use that procedure. It was admitted that all the formalities prescribed by the Act of 1875 had been complied with. It followed that the conviction was valid under the 1875 Act. The fact that an enabling Act had been passed in 1899 could not affect the question.

The Court refused the prayer of the bill of suspension.

The Lord Justice-Clerk.—My Lords, it has been frankly admitted by Mr Morton that if the Act of 1875 had stood by itself then he could not have made any objection to this complaint on any ground which he has now stated. Under that Act a person purchasing any article, no matter who he is, is entitled to state, after he gets the article, that he intends to use that article for analysis in order to test whether it is genuine or not. And if he does that—if he announces that he is to take that specific course—he must divide the sample that he takes into three parts, one of which he hands to the seller, another of which he keeps to himself, and the third of which he must submit to a public analyst. If he gets a certificate from the public analyst, which is to be evidence under the Act, he is entitled to prosecute the person who sold him the article if he finds cause. A difficulty thereafter arose as to whether or not a public official going to buy an article of that kind could prosecute in respect that he was not bona fide purchasing the article for his own consumption, but specially and solely for the purposes of analysis. That difficulty was put right by special enactment which prohibited the sellers from refusing to sell a specimen of any of the goods they had falling under the Act to a person coming officially and asking for it.

Now, therefore, we are in this position. Mr Whyte, who comes from Ireland in the interests of the Local Government Board, purchased a sample of butter, taking the course prescribed by the Act of 1875 and dividing it into three parts and distributing them as he was required to do by the Act. He proceeded to get an analysis from the public analyst, which justified a prosecution. He instituted his prosecution, and he was successful in obtaining a conviction. In that I can see nothing that was in the least degree irregular. Mr Morton says that since the Act of 1899 Mr Whyte, being an Inspector of the Department in Ireland, could no longer proceed under the Act of 1875, and he founded upon sect. 3 of the Act of 1899, which gives the Board of Agriculture in Ireland certain powers which it had not before; inter alia, that where the Board is not satisfied that the Act has been carried out efficiently by the local authority the Board can, after certain procedure, empower one of its own officers to execute and enforce the provisions of the Act, and, if necessary, prosecute at the local authority's expense.

Now, there can be no doubt that, if the Board avails itself of the special powers conferred by the Act, it must also carry out its other provisions, including the division of the sample taken into four parts (a proceeding which seems to be solely for its own information), or possibly to keep a sample for the local authority on which the expense of the proceeding is to be put. If, however, the Board does not think it feasible or necessary to avail itself of these special powers, but instead chooses itself to use the machinery provided by the Act of 1875, as it has done in the present case, at its own expense, I can see nothing in the Act of 1899 to forbid it to do so. What it could have done before, it can do still. It has, it is true, certain additional advantages under the Act of 1899, but it may consider that in certain circumstances it is better not to make use of these advantages but to proceed in the ordinary way. My Lords, I have no difficulty in holding that this suspension must be refused.

Lord Low.—My Lords, I am of the same opinion. It is conceded, and is clear, that if it was competent for the respondent in this suspension (the complainer in the Sheriff Court) to proceed under the Act of 1875, the whole proceedings were regular and cannot be objected to. But it was argued that, the respondent being the Chief Inspector for Great Britain of the Board of Agriculture for Ireland, and having acted under the instructions of that Board, proceedings could only be taken in terms of the provisions of the 2nd and 3rd sections of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act of 1899. I confess that I was at first impressed by that argument upon reading the parts of these sections which alone are set forth in the case, because if that were all that these sections contained, it would look very like a code regulating the procedure which must be followed if the Board in Ireland chose to raise questions in Scotland through one of their inspectors. But I think that, when the whole sections are read, it becomes plain what the object of these enactments was. It was to enable the Board in Ireland to carry through proceedings in Scotland at the expense of the local authority within whose jurisdiction the offence had been committed, and that explains why there are all these careful provisions. That being so, if the Board in Ireland choose to bear their own expenses, I see no reason why their inspector should not proceed as an ordinary purchaser under the Act of 1875. And therefore I have no doubt that the Sheriff was right here.

Lord Ardwall.—My Lords, when I learned at a very early stage in this debate that the complainer in the suspension had no objections to the instance of the original complaint, I at once came to the conclusion that this suspension must fail, because the first and second pleas in law are founded upon this, that certain procedure prescribed by the Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1899, when proceedings are initiated by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, had not been followed, that was all. Now, that Act was passed for the purpose of giving additional powers to central authorities, and did not in the least detract from remedies provided by the Act of 1875; and Mr Morton's argument resolved into this amazing series of propositions: he argued that the respondent, instead of proceeding as if this complaint were at his own instance, which it is, ought to have proceeded under the powers and privileges given to the Department of Agriculture in Ireland under the Act of 1899; and in the next place, that if he had done so he would have required to have done certain things which he has not done; and therefore the whole of the proceedings complained of must be quashed. Now, it is very considerate of an accused person in a case of this sort to suggest the procedure the prosecutor ought to have followed, but a complainer can adopt what procedure he likes provided he keeps within the terms of the statutes, and the procedure in this case was properly conducted under the Act of 1875. Respondent was under no obligation whatever to take advantage of the Act of 1899. I am accordingly of opinion that this bill of suspension should be refused.—20*th March* 1908.

Forbes v. Main.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

(The Lord Justice-Clerk, Lords Low and Ardwall.)

398. Forbes v. Main.

Justiciary Cases—Suspension—Warrant to Examine Witnesses In Precognition on Oath—Alleged Contravention of Lotteries Act 1823 (4 Geo. IV. cap. 60)—No Averment That Any Person Arrested or Suspected of Contravention—Circumstances Where Warrant Suspended — Observations per Lord Justice-Clerk as to Circumstances in Which Procedure by Warrant Should be Resorted To.

Bill of Suspension.

This was a bill of suspension for Alexander Forbes, road surveyor, Linlithgow, in which he prayed the Court to suspend a warrant granted by the Sheriff-Substitute (Macleod) at Linlithgow, at the instance of John Main, Procurator-Fiscal for the county of Linlithgow, and also a citation and charge following thereon.

The complainer stated:

1. Upon 3rd December 1907 the respondent, as Procurator-Fiscal of Court for the public interest, presented a petition to the Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles at Linlithgow, craving warrant to cite witnesses to be examined in precognition on oath if considered necessary, at the respondent's instance, anent contravention of the Lotteries Act 1823, at the Masonic Bazaar, Linlithgow, on 3rd, 4th and 5th October 1907; and upon the same date, the said Sheriff granted warrant on said petition as craved. . . .

2. No previous notice of said application was given to the complainer, and no copy thereof has been served upon him. Immediately after the respondent had obtained the said warrant, the complainer was, by his instructions, served with a citation and charge in the following terms:—

"County of Linlithgow.

"I, William Ingram, constable, in name and authority and by warrant of the Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles, hereby lawfully summon, warn, and charge you, Alexander Forbes, road surveyor, Royal Terrace, Linlithgow, to compear within the Sheriff-Court House, Linlithgow, upon the sixth day of December 1907 years, at ten o'clock forenoon, to be examined in precognition on oath if considered necessary, at the instance of the Procurator-Fiscal of Court for the public interest, anent contraventions of the Lotteries Act 1823 at the Masonic Bazaar, Linlithgow, on 3rd, 4th, and 5th October 1907, with certification. This I do upon the third day of December 1907 years.

"Witnesses who fail to appear may be apprehended, and if they refuse to speak out, or prevaricate on oath, may be committed to prison.

"William Ingram,
"Constable."

3. The said application does not set forth that any person has been arrested, or is suspected of any offence or contravention of any statute, or that any charge of any kind has been made against any person whatsoever. It further does not state what provisions, if any, of the said Lotteries Act have been contravened.

4. It is believed and averred that the sole object of the respondent is illegally and unwarrantably to endeavour to coerce the complainer into making statements on oath, in the hope that he may thereby obtain information to enable him to take proceedings against some person or persons unknown, and the complainer is under the necessity of applying to your Lordships for redress.

Counsel for the complainer moved the Court to suspend the proceedings complained of.

Counsel for the respondent did not oppose the motion.

The Court suspended the warrant, citation and charge complained of.

The Lord Justice-Clerk.—There is no doubt whatever that these warrants ought to be quashed. I can conceive that in very serious cases what was done here might be resorted to, and might be useful, but it is quite inapplicable to such a case as that with which we are dealing. This is certainly a proceeding which has not been taken before in our time in ordinary cases, and I think it might tend to a very evil practice on the part of those investigating crime, to sanction it in such a case as this.

BILL CHAMBER.

(Lord Guthrie.)

399. Gilligan's Curator.

Curator — Minor — Curator Chosen — Powers—Petition For Power to Sell Heritage—Competency—Curator Under Supervision of Accountant of Court—Petition Held Competent, and Powers Granted.

In October 1900, in a process of choosing curators, the petitioner was nominated by the ward Miss Wilhelmina Gilligan to be her curator during her minority, and the nomination was duly sustained by the Court. By minute lodged in the process the petitioner craved the Court to authorise the Accountant of Court to audit the curatorial accounts of the petitioner annually in the manner provided by the Pupils Protection Act 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. cap. 51), and warrant was granted by the Court accordingly (reported ante, 8 S.L.T. 187). The petitioner's accounts were thereafter regularly audited by the Accountant of Court.

In the present petition the curator asked power, inter alia, to sell certain heritable properties belonging to the ward. The Lord Ordinary, on 2nd July 1907, remitted the petition to the Accountant of Court to report as to the special powers craved.

On 14th November 1907 the Accountant of Court reported that in his opinion the powers craved should be refused—"(1) As the powers craved are to the curator himself and the petition is at his own instance; and (2) as the ward, with his consent and approval, has power to do what is craved without obtaining special powers from the Court."

The Accountant of Court referred to the powers of a ward with consent of a curator chosen as laid down in Bell's Principles, sect. 2096; Thoms on Judicial Factors, 2nd edition, VIII. (1) 13, p. 251; and Fraser on Parent and Child, 3rd edition, p. 483; and maintained that sect. 6 of the Judicial Factors (Scotland) Act 1889 (52 & 53, Vict. cap. 39), which enacts—

". . . . the Accountant shall superintend the conduct of all other factors and persons already appointed or to be appointed by the Court of Session, or any of the Lords Ordinary in the said Court . . . . to hold, administer, or protect any property or funds belonging to persons or estates in Scotland," did not apply to a "curator chosen." In a former application by the petitioner in the same curatory in December 1905 for authority to apply income of the trust, the Accountant of Court took similar objections to the competency of the application, in spite of which the Lord Ordinary on the Bills, Lord Mackenzie, granted the powers craved, and authorised the petitioner to charge the expenses of the application against the estate.

For the petitioner it was argued that the terms of the interlocutor of Court sustaining his nomination as curator, and the fact that his accounts were placed under the supervision of the Accountant of Court, put him in the position of a factor appointed by the Court within the meaning of sect. 6 of the Judicial Factors (Scotland) Act 1889. The petition was therefore competent and necessary. It was in the interest of the ward that the power craved should be granted, as any doubt as to her title to sell would affect the value of the property in the market.

The Lord Ordinary granted the powers craved, and pronounced the following interlocutor:

"The Lord Ordinary having resumed consideration of the petition and proceedings, together with the report by the Accountant of Court, No. 18 of process, authorises the curator to expose the heritable subjects . . . . for sale by public roup in Glasgow . . . .; and upon a sale and payment of the price, to grant a disposition or dispositions to the purchaser or purchasers, and to execute all deeds usual and necessary; and decerns; . . . ."

Bill Chamber. Lord Guthrie. — Gillam's Curator.

400. Gillam's Curator.

Curator — Minor — Curator Chosen — Powers—Petition for Power to Sell Heritage—Curator Not Under Supervision of Accountant of Court—Petition Dismissed as Unnecessary.

In October 1906, in a process of choosing curators, the petitioner was nominated by the wards Mary Jane Gillam and Robert Gillam, residing in New York, U.S.A., and Helene Gillam, residing in Edinburgh, all minors, to be their curator during their respective minorities, and the nomination was duly sustained by the Court. The wards desired to sell certain heritable subjects in Berlin. The German purchasers would not accept a conveyance without the authority of an interlocutor of the Scottish Court which would satisfy them that the curator could give them a title.

The petitioner therefore made this application for authority to sell. The petitioner in this case had not been placed under the supervision of the Accountant of Court as in the case of Gilligan's Curator (reported supra). The Lord Ordinary remitted to a man of business to enquire into the facts and report.

The reporter considered that the petition was unnecessary, as the wards, with consent of their curator, had power to sell at common law.

The Lord Ordinary agreed with the reporter, and pronounced the following interlocutor: "The Lord Ordinary having resumed consideration of the petition and proceedings, with the report by Mr Alexander Wallace, W.S., No. 9 of process, finds the petition unnecessary, in respect the wards, with consent and concurrence of the petitioner, have at common law the power craved in the petition, and decerns."—21st February 1908.

Process — Sheriff Court — Appeal — Suspension of Charge on Sheriff Court Undefended Decree — Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act 1907 (7 Edw. VII. cap. 51), sect. 7—Value of Cause Not Exceeding £50—Suspension Held Incompetent.

This was a note of suspension and interdict in which the complainer prayed the Court to suspend

Bill Chamber. Lord Guthrie.

Bryson v. The Belhaven Engineering and Motors Ltd.

a decree of the Sheriff Court of Ayrshire at Ayr and charge thereon, and to interdict the respondents from following forth a poinding and a petition for cessio in respect of said decree and charge.

The decree complained of was a decree in absence in the Sheriff Court for £39, 18s. 5d., with interest and expenses.

The respondents maintained that the suspension was incompetent and excluded by sect. 7 of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act 1907 (7 Edw. VII. cap. 51), which enacts as follows: "Subject to the provisions of this Act and of the Small Debt Acts, all causes not exceeding fifty pounds in value, exclusive of interest and expenses competent in the Sheriff Court, shall be brought and followed forth in the Sheriff Court only, and shall not be subject to review by the Court of Session."

The Respondent argued that this section had the same effect as sect. 22 of the Sheriff Court Act 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. cap. 80), which excluded review in any cause not exceeding £25 in value by "advocation, appeal, suspension or reduction, or in any other manner of way," and pointed out that the Legislature had provided for the case in question by Rule 123 in the First Schedule to the Sheriff Courts Act 1907, which enacts: "Where a charge has been given on a decree of Court granted by the Sheriff . . . . for payment of any sum of money not exceeding fifty pounds sterling, exclusive of interest and expenses, the person so charged may apply in the Sheriff Court of his domicile for suspension on caution of such charge and diligence."

The Complainer argued that the statute did not expressly exclude review by suspension in the Court of Session, and therefore could not be extended to do so.

The Lord Ordinary, without delivering any opinion, refused the note, with expenses.—17*th March* 1908.

(Lord Salvesen.)

402. Lindoe v. Reid and Another, and Lindoe v. Geddes and Another.

Process—Competency of Two Actions For Wrongs Arising out of the Same Fault—Collision Between Two Fishing Boats and a Steamer—Actions Against Each of Fishing Boat Owners—Harbour Trustees Made Defenders in Each Action, on the Ground That They Were Also Responsible for the Collision.

The following statement of the circumstances under which these two actions were raised is taken from the opinion of the Lord Ordinary.

"These two actions arise in the following circumstances: The s.s. 'Adria,' belonging to the pursuer, was leaving Peterhead on 26th June 1907, and was engaged in swinging round, preparatory to leaving the harbour. To aid her in doing so a rope had been run from her port bow to the east end of the lighthouse quay. While so engaged she was run into successively by two fishing boats, the 'Elsie Reid' and the 'Strathlene.'

"The pursuer accordingly, on 31st October 1907, raised separate actions against the owners of the two fishing boats, concluding for the amount of damage done by each respectively to his vessel. It was conceded that as the fishing boats belonged to different owners, the pursuer could not competently have called them in one action.

"In their defences both defenders suggested that they were not to blame for entering the harbour at the time when the 'Adria' was swinging, on the ground that it was the duty of the harbour authorities to prevent fishing boats from entering when the entrance to the harbour was blocked, there being recognised signals for the purpose. The pursuer accordingly amended his record, and called the Trustees of the Harbour of Peterhead as additional defenders in each action."

The record in each action as amended was served on the Peterhead Harbour Trustees. They lodged defences in each action and pleaded, inter alia:

"2. The action so far as directed against these defenders is incompetent, in respect the pursuer has elected to sue these defenders in another action for damages arising out of the same allegations of fault as are made in the present case."

On 15th January 1908 the Lord Ordinary in each action of new closed the record, and on the motion of the defenders the Trustees of the Harbour of Peterhead, appointed the cause to be put to the Procedure Roll.

After debate, the Lord Ordinary in each action repelled the second plea in law for these defenders, and allowed the parties a proof of their respective averments on record.

Lord Salvesen.—The pursuer seeks decree against the defenders jointly and severally, or against one or other of them. The Peterhead Trustees now maintain that one of the actions is incompetent, in respect that it was the duty of the pursuer, as in a question with them, to raise only one action, as the damages for which they are sought to be made liable in each action arose out of the same allegations of fault. I am unable to sustain this plea. I do not see how, in the circumstances, the pursuer could have adopted any other course than the one he has taken. There were two wrongs caused by two different vessels, and it is the misfortune of the Peterhead Trustees that they are concerned in both. No doubt if they had been the only defenders, one action would have served to try the question of their liability to the pursuer for both wrongs; and in such a case I should have deprecated two actions being raised where one would have sufficed. Even in that case, however, I do not think there would have been any incompetency in raising two actions; but the Court would have taken care that the defenders should not be subjected in more expenses, in the event of their being unsuccessful, than if only one action had been raised. Here, however, the case is complicated by the fact that the pursuer still holds the fishing boats responsible to him as well as the Harbour Trustees; and in these circumstances the only competent procedure is by means of two separate actions. I shall accordingly repel the second plea in law for the Peterhead Trustees, and allow parties a proof of their averments.—30*th January* 1908.

John Lunn was sole surviving trustee under a trust disposition in which the clause constituting the trust was in the following terms: "I, Thomas Scott, formerly game dealer, and now or lately residing at High Street, Jedburgh, do hereby give, grant, assign, dispone, convey and make over to and in favour of Alexander Wilson, farmer, Hundale Mill, Roxburghshire; John Lunn, farmer, Cowbog, Roxburghshire; and Boswell Colthert, farmer, Dolphinstone, Roxburghshire, two a quorum, and such other person or persons as may be assumed to act in the trust hereby created, and the acceptors and acceptor, survivors and survivor of the persons above named or assumed as aforesaid (the said persons and their foresaids being hereafter denominated 'said trustees') of the sum of eleven hundred pounds sterling."

Outer House. Lord Guthrie. Scott v. Lunn.

This was a petition by Mrs Rachel Huggan or Scott and her daughter, the principal beneficiaries under the said trust, for the appointment of new trustees to act in place of or along with the said John Lunn. The petitioners brought the petition under sect. 12 of the Trusts (Scotland) Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. cap. 97), which enacts as follows:

> When trustees cannot be assumed under any trust deed . . . . the Court may, upon the application of any party having interest in the trust estate, after such intimation and enquiry as may be thought necessary, appoint a trustee or trustees under such trust deed, with all the powers incident to that office. . . .

The petitioners maintained that two being declared a quorum of the trustees, Mr Lunn could not lawfully carry on the trust or assume new trustees, and therefore the petition was competent and necessary.

The respondent, Mr Lunn, maintained that the clause in the trust deed above quoted did not deprive him of the right to carry on the trust or assume new trustees; therefore the right and the duty to do so rested entirely with him, and the petition was incompetent under the section of the statute founded on.

The Lord Ordinary found that the petition was unnecessary, and therefore dismissed the same, but did not find expenses due by the petitioner to the trustee.

Lord Guthrie.—The petitioner's case, as explained at the bar, is that the respondent Mr Lunn, the sole surviving trustee, has no power by himself to assume new trustees or to perform any other act of trust administration. If he has power to assume new trustees, then no case is presented of refusal to assume new trustees, such as would warrant the Court's interference.

I am of opinion that Mr Lunn has power to assume new trustees. The opposite view is founded on the words "two a quorum" contained in the following clause of the trust disposition in question. [His Lordship quoted the clause as given above, and went on to say:]

I do not read the words "two a quorum" as of universal application. The truster contemplated that only one of the persons nominated might accept, and that, even if more accepted or were assumed, the trust might come to be in the hands of one of these persons as the survivor. I cannot suppose that, in these cases, he meant the acceptor or survivor to be a trustee unable to discharge any part of a trustee's duties—to be, in short, a trustee only in name. The words are "two a quorum," not "two always a quorum"; and I read them as applicable only to the immediately preceding part of the clause, and therefore limited in their application to the case of the three persons named accepting and acting.

Scott v. Lunn.

But the question seems to me not free from difficulty, and, keeping in view that the probable result of the petition will be to secure the assumption of new trustees, I do not think it a case where the petitioner should be subjected in expenses.—17*th March* 1908.

Husband and Wife—Marriage Contract—Provision to Wife — Annuity Payable After Husband's Death—Real Burden—Divorce of Husband by Wife—Effect of Divorce Against Singular Successor in Lands Burdened With Annuity—Lands Not Chargeable With Annuity Till Husband's Decease—Somervell's Tr. v. Dawes, 1903, 5 F. 1065, Followed.

The Opinion of the Lord Ordinary sufficiently reports this case.

Lord Salvesen.—The pursuer was married to Mr Adam Brack-Boyd-Wilson on 22nd August 1889. On the day preceding the marriage she and her intended husband signed an antenuptial contract of marriage. By this contract Mr Wilson "provided and disponed to her in liferent, during all the days of her life after his decease, in case she should survive him, a free liferent annuity or jointure of three hundred and fifty pounds sterling per annum"; and he provided and disponed the lands of Otterburn, of which he was then proprietor, and the rights, rents, profits and duties of the same in so far as necessary to satisfy the said annuity as the same should fall due. He also bound and obliged himself and his heirs, executors, and successors in the lands and successors in the lands and estate, and subsidiariæ his other heirs, successors and representatives whomsoever, to make payment of the said annuity to the pursuer; commencing the first term's payment at the term of Whitsunday or Martinmas which should first happen after the decease of the husband. The pursuer was duly infeft in said lands in security of her said annuity.

On 14th May 1896 Mr Wilson disponed the lands of Otterburn to the late William Scott Pearson, and the defender has now succeeded to these lands. He admits that on the death of Mr Wilson the pursuer's annuity becomes payable out of the rents of the lands conveyed to her. The question in the case is whether, in a question with him, the divorce which the pursuer obtained against her husband on 21st December 1907 is to be held as equivalent to his death.

In my opinion, this question has already been decided adversely to the pursuer in the case of Somervell's Tr. v. Dawes, 1903, 5 F. 1065. It is quite true that, as between the husband and wife, the divorce of the husband has the same effect as his death, so far as the provisions granted by the marriage contract in her favour are concerned. The personal obligation which the husband undertook in the marriage contract could therefore, I presume, now be enforced against his general estate if he had any. But it is an entirely different question whether a real security can be enlarged or extended in this way. In Somervell's case Lord Kinnear, who gave the leading judgment, held that it could not, and pointed out that it is a fundamental and elementary rule of the law affecting rights in land that a real burden must be fixed and definite. As against the defender the pursuer's right rests upon the infeftment, and must be measured by its terms; and the lands of Otterburn are not charged with an annuity until the death of the husband. If I have interpreted the decision correctly, it follows that the pursuer is not entitled to the decree which she seeks; and the claim in the present action is an excellent illustration of the injustice which a purchaser of a heritable estate would suffer if any other rule were adopted. The pursuer must therefore wait till her husband's death before she can make any valid claim upon the defender in virtue of her infeftment in security. On any other view the obligation which the purchaser undertook would be entirely uncertain in amount, and would depend, not upon a contingency against which he could ensure, but on the conduct and relations of the spouses to each other, and would therefore be neither fixed nor definite.—4*th March* 1908.

Process—Mandatory—Defender—Party Leaving Country—Discretion of Court—Ordained to Sist a Mandatory.

The pursuers were shipowners in Copenhagen and owners of the s.s. "Dansborg." In January 1907 the said vessel had been chartered to load a cargo of ore at Aguilas, in Spain, for West Hartlepool. In connection with the loading of he vessel the pursuers employed the defender o act as the ship's agent. His duties included he checking and paying of the various accounts ncurred in connection with the loading and learing of the ship. The defender's account ncurred on the pursuers' behalf amounted in English money to £192, 7s. 1d., and in terms f the charter-party this was deducted from the reight at the port of discharge, and received by he defender. The pursuers now sued the de- ender for the sum of £103, 13s. 2d., in respect hat to this amount the defender's account for isbursements and expenses for the ship was rossly overcharged.

Defences were lodged by the defender, in vhich, inter alia, he admitted he had been resi- lent in Scotland for forty days, but explained hat he was of Spanish nationality, and had been or many years, and was at present, carrying on usiness in Aguilas.

At the closing of the record counsel for the ursuers moved that the defender be ordained o sist a mandatory. The motion was opposed.

Argued for Pursuer: The defender had gone o Spain during the dependence of the action. There was nothing to take the case out of the rule hat a person abroad must sist a mandatory. The lefender had engaged in prior litigations in this Court both as pursuer and defender, and in the circumstances the motion should be granted (Sandilands, 1848, 10 D. 1091; D'Ernesti, 1882, 9 R. 655; Bracken v. Blasquez, 1891, 18 R. 819; Young v. Carter, 1906, 14 S.L.T. 411).

Argued for Defender: The matter was for dis- cretion of the Court, and the tendency has been not to ordain a defender to sist. It was not a sufficient reason that the defender had left the country. The pursuers were suing for a debt incurred in Spain, and defender's ordinary residence was in that country (Simla Bank, 1870, 8 M. 781; Morton v. Smith, 1902, 9 S.L.T. 396.)

The Lord Ordinary ordained the defender to sist a mandatory.

Lord Salvesen.—The defender was resident in this country at the time when the proceedings against him were raised, and while there is a plea that the forum is not a convenient one in which to try the action, there is no plea that the Court did not possess, at the date of the action, jurisdiction over the defender. In these circum- stances the defender leaves for Spain during the dependence of the action. Judging from the materials put before me, the defender seems to have divided his residence between Spain and Scotland for a good many years past. I do not know how long he has been resident in Scotland on the various occasions when he has either raised actions or been himself sued as a defender, but it is obvious, as the jurisdiction was sustained against him in the case where he was sued as defender, that he must have been resident for some time, and in the case in which he was pursuer he designed himself as carrying on a commission business in this country. Now when a defender has resided in this country, and is sued in this country, because apparently it is the only country in which he can be sued, and chooses to leave during the dependence of the action, I think the Court ought to ordain the defender to sist a mandatory. I am quite aware that it is always a matter of discretion, but I think the circumstances here point to the discretion being exercised in favour of ordaining the defender to sist a mandatory. If jurisdiction had been founded against the defender by arrestments of moveables which chanced to be within the juris- diction, different considerations would have been applicable, because there the forum has been selected by the alleged creditor, at his own hand, when the proper forum to have selected was the residence of the defender. I shall accordingly ordain the defender to sist a mandatory, but as he is in Spain I shall allow him to the second box day in the ensuing vacation in which to implement the order.—14*th March* 1908.

Parish Council of Dundonald and Others v. Board of Management of Cuninghame Combination Poorhouse and Others.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the Lord Ordinary's Opinion.

The Lord Ordinary assoilzied the defenders from the conclusions of the summons.

Lord Dundas.—The questions to be decided in this case relate principally to the proper construction to be put upon certain clauses in a contract and agreement, dated in 1857 and 1858, whereby eleven Parochial Boards agreed to erect, for the benefit and accommodation of all of them, a poorhouse to be designated "The Cuninghame Combination or Union Poor's House," under the powers contained in sects. 60 & 61 of the Poor Law (Scotland) Act 1845. Subsequently to the execution of the agreement, seven additional parishes joined the combination, under and in virtue of the fifteenth rule contained in the said deed. The pursuers of this action are four of the eighteen Parish Councils which form the constituent members of the combination. They call as defenders the whole members of the House Committee or Board of Management of the said poorhouse, and its secretary; and also the remaining fourteen Parish Councils. Declarator is sought to the effect (1) that the said Board of Management has no power under the said contract and agreement to combine the offices of house governor and medical officer of the said poorhouse, by appointing the same person to hold both of the said offices; and (2) that the said Board has no power to dismiss the medical officer of the said poorhouse without the sanction of the Local Government Board for Scotland and the General Board of Lunacy for Scotland previously had and obtained. Conclusions follow for reduction, "if need be," of Minutes of the Board purporting to record resolutions affirming the existence of these powers which the declaratory conclusions seek to negative. The summons further concludes for interdict.

Upon the first of the two questions thus raised I am of opinion that the defenders are entitled to succeed. I can find nothing in the Poor Law Act or in the agreement to prevent the Board from combining, if so advised, in one person the offices of house governor and medical officer. The fourth article, or "rule," of the agreement provides for the constitution of the Board of Management, "for the superintendence, conducting, management and control of the affairs of the poorhouse, and all matters and things connected therewith," and confers upon it power, inter alia, "to act in all matters falling under or proper to the province, and subject to the administration, of the House Committee or Board of Management." By the eleventh rule, more specific powers are conferred upon the Board as to the appointment of the various officials necessary for the establishment. The pursuers' counsel pointed out that in some instances power is expressly given to the Board to combine offices, viz. "a chaplain or teacher, or a chaplain and teacher . . . . a treasurer, a secretary, or a treasurer and secretary . . . . and the House Committee, if it see fit, may appoint the same person to the offices of governor and secretary"; and they argued that the expression of such power in certain cases negatived by implication its existence in any others, and in particular as regards the offices of governor and medical officer. My opinion is adverse to this argument, as matter of construction; and I think that the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, though sound enough within its proper limits, is one which can easily be pushed too far.

The second question in the case, viz. as to the Board's power to dismiss the medical officer without the sanction of the two authorities already referred to previously had and obtained, is, in my judgment, attended with more difficulty than that with which I have just dealt. But in regard to it also my opinion is in favour of the defenders and against the pursuers. The eleventh rule, already referred to, expressly gives the Board power "to remove all such officials or any one or more of them from time to time at the discretion of the said House Committee or Board of Management, and without being bound to assign any reason for such removals, and to supply all vacancies that may occur from time to time in any of the aforesaid offices, either by death, resignation, removal, or any other cause." But it was suggested that these powers, and indeed, I apprehend, the whole preceding portion of the eleventh rule, are controlled by the words which occur shortly after, viz. "and subject always to the approbation of the foresaid Board of Supervision." I do not agree with this view. I think the words just quoted relate exclusively to the power conferred (immediately before their occurrence) "to prescribe the duties and make rules for the government and guidance of the said several officials in their several departments, in terms of the foresaid statute," i.e. the Poor Law (Scotland) Act 1845, which by sect. 64 (expressly referred to in the same part of the said eleventh rule) ordains Parochial Boards to frame rules and regulations for the management of the poorhouse, which are to be submitted to the Board of Supervision "for approval." This is, I think, the proper construction of the eleventh rule, although it is not very artistically framed; and my impression is confirmed by looking at the twelfth rule, which gives power to the Visiting Committee of the Board "to suspend any one or more of the officials to be appointed under article eleventh, until the opinion of the House Committee or Board of Management can be obtained on the cause of such suspension." But the pursuers' counsel further relied upon the eighteenth rule as importing by implication into the language of the eleventh rule, in regard to the Board's power of dismissal, sect. 66 of the Poor Law (Scotland)

Act 1845. The argument does not, in my opinion, advance the pursuers' case; for that section, as I read it, merely confers upon the Board of Supervision power in certain cases to suspend or remove a medical man whom the Parochial Board had appointed in a poorhouse, but does not override or negative the power of that Board to dismiss, if they see fit, the man whom they themselves appointed. I should say that my attention was called to the view expressed by the Secretary to the Local Government Board in one of the letters produced, that "the medical officer of a poorhouse is appointed under statute, and cannot be dismissed at the will and pleasure of the directors of the poorhouse," and to the reference he makes to a Departmental Report in 1904. In that report the statement is made that "it is considered that medical officers of poorhouses have the same tenure of office as inspectors of poor; that is, they can be dismissed only by the Local Government Board." The authority for that statement is noted as sects. 56 and 66 of the Poor Law Act 1845, and the Old Monkland case, 1880, 7 R. 469. I am, with the greatest respect, unable to concur in the views thus indicated. The cases about inspectors, of which Clark, 1873, 1 R. 261, is one of the most important, seem to me scarcely to warrant the statement in question, and I observe that the Departmental Report, quoting from an earlier report in 1895–96, announces that "the claim," i.e. that such medical officers should not be removable without the sanction of the Local Government Board, "has been frequently preferred by the representatives of the parochial medical officers, and clauses have been introduced into Bills with the view of giving effect to the claim, but from one cause or another the Bills have failed to pass." This account of the matter accords with the view which I take of sect. 66 as it stands, and the construction I am disposed to put upon it; and seems to infer that, if medical officers of poorhouses are to be placed in the position desired, that end must be achieved by legislation. For the reasons I have now expressed, I do not think that there is any need for the Board of Management to obtain the sanction of the Local Government Board as a condition precedent to the dismissal of the medical officer. As regards the alleged necessity for obtaining the antecedent sanction of the General Board of Lunacy, it seems enough to observe (1) that the eighteenth rule, referring as it does only to the sanction of the Board of Supervision under the Poor Law Act of 1845, cannot, so far as I see, aid the pursuers upon the point in question; and (2) that I am unable to find upon the record any averments of fact by which the case is brought in any way within the scope of the third section of the Lunacy (Scotland) Act 1862, or the Rules and Conditions prescribed thereunder, particularly Rule XVI.

For these reasons I think the defenders are entitled to succeed in the action. I propose to repel the whole pleas in law stated for the pursuers, and to grant decree of absolvitor.—3rd March 1908.

The facts of the case appear from the previous report.

The House (dissenting the Earl of Halsbury, Lords Robertson and Collins) allowed the appeal, and reversed the judgments appealed against.

The Lord Chancellor.—My Lords, this case has been twice argued.

Mr Colquhoun, the appellant in this appeal, became a member of the Faculty of Procurators of Glasgow in 1870. Under an Act of Parliament then in force he was obliged to join, and did join, the Society of Contributors, which was a mutual insurance society for members of the Faculty, regulated by that Act. He paid a considerable entrance fee and an annual subscription down to the year 1899. Subsequently he was expelled from the Faculty for misconduct, and the Society claim that they also were entitled to expel him and to deprive him of all the benefits derived from his membership and past subscriptions. The question for your Lordships is whether this Society was so entitled; and that question must be solved by reference to the Act itself, which is the third of Will. IV. cap. lxiv.

To begin with, this much is clear, Mr Colquhoun cannot be deprived of these benefits as a punishment for his misconduct. There is not a word in the Act which, upon any construction, can authorise the Society to deprive on the ground of delinquency where they could not otherwise deprive. If Mr Colquhoun is to lose the fruit of his insurance, it must be on the ground that he is no longer a member of the Faculty, a ground which would apply whatsoever may have been the cause of his ceasing to be a member. And so it comes to this: Ought we to construe this Act of Parliament as meaning that whenever a member of the Faculty ceases to be a member he must necessarily also cease to be a member of and contributor to the insurance society?

It is a question of contract. What were the terms on which Mr Colquhoun became a contributor to this Society? I think this is to be settled by the Act alone, and that no help can be gained by referring to anything beyond it.

Under the scheme of the Act any Procurator who joins the Faculty is compelled to join the insurance society also, and thenceforward to subscribe to it as long as he lives, not, be it observed, for so long as he remains a member of the Faculty. He is allowed to renounce the benefits in due form, and will thereupon cease to have any interest in the fund. Also he may forfeit them by specified acts or omissions, all of which relate to some default relative to the fund itself. There is no provision that ceasing to be a member of the Faculty shall entail consequences so serious, and I cannot see any sufficient reason for implying such a provision.

It would operate very harshly upon those who had compounded for, or, to use the language of sect. 27, "redeemed" their annual contributions; also upon any member of the Faculty who, having for many years paid to this fund, desired to quit the Faculty for another profession.

Between two equally admissible interpretations the more reasonable should be preferred. And if an Act will read equally well whether or not an unexpressed condition be implied, a Court ought surely not to imply a condition that works hardship. In my view this Act set up a statutory contract of insurance. Even if I thought the Act admitted of it, I would not imply a condition most onerous to the assured unless the Act also required it. But in the present case I do not think there is an ambiguity.

I am of opinion that, according to the letter of the Act, any member of the Faculty who once becomes a contributor to the fund is entitled to continue a contributor, and is entitled to the benefits offered in exchange even though he ceases to be a member of the Faculty.

Under sect. 16, on payment of his entry money a member of the Faculty becomes a contributor to the fund "and entitled to the benefit thereof under the provisions of this Act." Under sect. 18, such person is bound to pay the Society an annual contribution "during his life." And under sect. 9, one of the purposes of the fund is "payment to the widows and children of the members of said Faculty who now are or may hereafter become entitled to the benefit of the fund under the provisions of this Act as hereinafter specified." All that is required is that the person entering the Society should be a member of the Faculty when he enters it. In my opinion, the position of any member of the Faculty who has paid his entry money is as follows: He may renounce; he may redeem; he may forfeit the benefits for some cause specified in the Act. But if none of these things happen he is required to keep up his annual contributions whether he remains a member of the Faculty or not, and is entitled in return to the benefits like any other contributor.

Accordingly, with the utmost respect, I am unable to agree with the judgment of the First Division.

The Earl of Halsbury.—My Lords, I think it is a very relevant consideration that the corporate body we are now dealing with has from its earliest institution been confined to a separate professional class, and that from the year 1796 till 1833 and 1875 it has continued to be so confined, and to the present day is undoubtedly so confined that no one can demand to be admitted within it unless he is a member of the class in question.

It is not denied that for entry into the Corporation and its ancillary charitable provisions a person must be a member of the Faculty of Procurators. If he is, he may take a part in its government and, among other things, has his chance of being entrusted with the management and distribution of its funds.

By the second section of the Act of 1833, which is described as an Act for the better establishing and securing a fund for providing annuities to the widows and children of the members of the Faculty of Procurators of Glasgow, a scheme for the election of its officers is enacted which is described to be for the proper administration of the funds of the Society and management of the affairs thereof, and it provides that any member of the Society may be re-elected, or any other member may be elected also by the 11th section; former regulations as to the fund are cancelled by the statute, and it is enacted that in future the funds shall be administered in pursuance of the new enactment. Up to the passing of the Act a person to be admitted was required to serve a regular apprenticeship for five years with one of the members of the Faculty, but by the 15th section of the Act the Faculty was authorised to receive and admit any person who should be found duly qualified "in terms of the original charter, and upon such terms as to payments as the said Faculty and the said Society hereby constituted shall from time to time appoint."

I presume doubt had been raised as to the lawfulness of some of the appropriations of a portion of the funds, since by the 8th section the appropriation of certain portions of "the funds of the said Faculty of Procurators" was declared to be lawful, and by the 9th section the declaration of the object of the trust, after providing for the necessary charges, goes on to declare what is relevant to the present questions before your Lordships for provision and payment of an annuity to the widows severally and children of deceased members of the said Faculty.

The concluding words of that section seem to me most important: "And in the last place, for provision and payment of an annuity to the widows severally and children of deceased members of the said Faculty contributors to the fund and Society hereby established, and for payment to the widows and children of the members of said Faculty who now are or may hereafter become entitled to the benefit of the fund under the provisions of this Act as hereinafter specified. And it shall not be lawful to apply the said fund to any other use or purpose whatsoever."

Now it will be observed that this is the section which defines the object of the trust and which prohibits any other disposition of its funds. That part of it which is relevant to the discussion defines the object as widows of members of the Faculty who were contributors, and must have been both members and contributors—in the latter part of the section it says: "Members of the said Faculty contributors to the fund and Society hereby established."

It seems to me impossible to construe the words here used as if it permitted the qualification for an annuity to cover the case of a widow who did not fill the character of a widow who became a widow by the death of her husband while he was a member of the Faculty, and besides being a member of the Faculty had also been a contributor to the fund.

I do not think the question of forfeiture or loss of money comes into the question of construction. It is a question of what this definition of the object of the trust means, and with all respect for those who think differently I cannot doubt what the true construction is, much as I respect the views of those who differ. It may, of course, present a case calculated to raise a feeling that some injustice is being done when a man who has paid this contribution for nineteen years is refused permission to continue his contributions and thus loses for his wife and children a provision intended for them; but upon the question of construction it is immaterial whether it was nineteen years or nineteen days. If the contributor died within the first year and was a detected thief the day after his entry the construction must be the same.

For my own part I cannot understand why such a Society, which means to confine those who enter it to those possessing a particular professional qualification, is not supposed to possess throughout the qualification without which he could not have entered the Society.

Neither am I much impressed by the absence of a distinct provision that where such a qualification is taken away by the person being detected as a thief, and as I understand the argument, it is not now denied that, quite apart from the express power by later legislation, it was quite within the powers of the governing body to deprive the appellant of his character of procurator, yet because of his having contributed to the Society, which is simply ancillary to it, it is argued he is still entitled to become a contributor.

I am not quite certain that I understand Lord M'Laren's objection to that power which every corporation possesses both of disfranchisement and amotion for heinous crimes, such as embezzlement undoubtedly is (see Lord Mansfield's Judgment in 2 Burrows, 723), and though the loss of pecuniary profit may follow as a consequence, it seems to me fallacious to treat as itself a penalty what is the consequence of a loss of qualification; and the whole question seems to me to depend upon whether being a Glasgow procurator is, or is not, a qualification for joining in the Society for providing funds for the widows and children of Glasgow procurators.

I have hitherto referred to the section which declares the object of the trust, but there is nothing in the rest of the Act which seems to me to militate against the construction I put upon that section. On the contrary, the title and preamble of the Act of 1833 seem to me to disclose with some distinctness the purpose of the Act, and certainly I should not suppose from the language used it was contemplated to erect two different societies, since the objects sought to be attained are to be "the objects of the said Incorporation." The charter granted, and the Act referred to, or said to be the Act, is said to be for the better and more convenient distribution of the funds thereof; still, be it observed, it is assumed to be the same Corporation, and the Act is for the better and more convenient distribution of the funds thereof.

The preamble proceeds to recite that the said Faculty appropriated certain sums of money from the said funds, and other contributions from the then present members and future members of the said Faculty, for establishing a fund or scheme for members and widows and children of the said Faculty contributors—observe it is still members who are within this description, but they must also be contributors.

Colquhoun and Others v. The Society of Contributors to the Widows' Fund of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow and Others.

Earl of Halsbury.

It goes on to mention that at a meeting of the members on the 5th of February 1827 amended regulations were made and approved of by the said Faculty at the time.

It then recites several alterations and amendments in the said scheme that members of the said Faculty made—certain alterations for the better management and distribution of the said fund. It then recites the great increase of the said fund by the contribution of the members of the said Faculty. It declares that it is expedient, without prejudice to what has been done, that the said Faculty should be enabled more effectually to manage the said fund, and to extend the usefulness thereof by making provision for more ample annuities to the widows and children of the members of the said Faculty who may be willing to contribute for that purpose, and to adopt certain regulations for the more sure establishment and better administration of the said fund, and for the continuance of the benefits thereof, but which objects cannot be carried into effect without the authority of Parliament.

It then proceeds to enact that all and each of the members of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow, and every other person who shall hereafter become members of and contributors to the said fund in manner after mentioned, shall be and are hereby declared to be members of and contributors to such fund established under the provisions of this Act, and shall be called the Society of Contributors to the Widows' Fund of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow.

It is an old observation that in construing an Act of this character it is not the language of the legislature itself, but the language which the promoters have used and to which the legislature has assented.

I say this because the words I have quoted are, in some respects, slipshod and inaccurate. I do not know, speaking accurately, what is the meaning of the words "members of a fund," but it is impossible not to see what the draftsman intended. He has throughout referred to the Faculty and its members in respect of the greatly increased contributions by the Faculty, the enabling of the said Faculty effectively to manage and to extend its usefulness, and for giving more ample annuities to widows and children of "the members of the said Faculty who may be willing to contribute for that purpose."

From first to last I can find no trace of any intention to establish a fund independent of and not for the benefit of the profession of the Faculty of Procurators. That some words were necessary when the rule of compulsory contribution was abolished is plain enough, and that they only should be entitled who contributed is one thing, but that people who were not members of the Faculty should be entitled to contribute is another and a very different thing.

I do not think it is very relevant to the matter now in hand to consider the cases where by voluntary retirement the contributions should cease; they are provided for.

The very last words of the first section quoted by some of your Lordships describes the Widows' Fund of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow.

It is in view of the preamble and the enacting part of the 1st section that I think the 29th and 30th sections so important. It does not appear to me that there was ever any intention to alter the constitution of the Society, but the abolition of the compulsory contribution rendered appropriate an alteration of the phraseology, which, however, has not throughout been observed with strict accuracy, but the language appears to me to be sufficiently plain that while only the contributory members of the Society should receive the benefit, it is assumed all through that they must be members of the Faculty.

I am afraid I do not follow the argument derived from the statement that the relations between the Corporation and its members is that of contract. There is no other contract than that of becoming a member of the Corporation, and as such liable to all the incidents which belong to an individual corporator.

Lord Mansfield said the causes of the amotion of a corporator are, first, offences against the duties of his office as a corporator; second, crimes in their own nature heinous and against the offender's general duty as a subject, yet not particularly relating to his corporate office as a duty.

It can hardly be doubted that the offence of embezzlement comes within Lord Mansfield's second category, and requires no express contract that he should be removeable for such a cause.

It would be intolerable that because a man was once a corporator, the non-criminal corporators should be compelled to associate with and take part in the business of the Corporation with a person who had been convicted of theft and suffered the punishment of penal servitude.

It is by the act of the person thus guilty that what is called his loss is incurred, and, indeed, it is not quite accurate to describe it as if his investment was entirely lost. During the nineteen years he had the security of his investment for his wife and children, if at any time he had died during the period, and if in the end the pension has been lost, it is because he has committed a crime which involved the loss of his qualification when he was found out.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment below was right and ought to be affirmed.

Lord Macnaghten.—My Lords, in 1870 the appellant, James Colquhoun, became a member of "The Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow"—a Corporation established in 1796 by Royal Charter. At the same time he became a member of a mutual insurance society styled "The Society of the Contributors to the Widows' Fund of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow." This Society was constituted by Act of Parliament in 1833. The Act provides in sect. 16 that no person shall be admitted a member of the Faculty of Procurators without first paying entry money to the Widows' Fund, and that after such payment the person admitted as a member of Faculty of Procurators shall be "held and deemed a contributor to or member of the fund and entitled to the benefits thereof under the provisions of this Act."

In March 1900 Colquhoun having been convicted of embezzlement was struck off the roll of the Faculty. The trustees of the insurance society then removed his name from the list of the Society. It is not suggested that their action was justified by the crime which Colquhoun had committed. Misconduct has nothing whatever to do with the position taken up by the respondents. Their attitude apparently would have been just the same if Colquhoun had left the Faculty with an unblemished character and of his own free will. Their contention is that if a person becomes a member of the Society and so by statute entitled to the benefits of its fund, and afterwards, from any cause or for any reason, ceases to be a member of the Faculty of Procurators, his statutory rights as member of the insurance society are at once extinguished, and all his contributions confiscated for the benefit of the Society. Is that contention sound?

The question, as it seems to me, depends on the meaning and effect of the Act of 1833 and on nothing else. Except so far as may be gathered from the recitals in the Act, the charter of 1796 and the regulations in force under it are, in my opinion, irrelevant. Equally irrelevant, I think, is any reference to a subsequent Act passed in 1875 for winding up the affairs of the Society. The question is simply a question of contract, and the contract is to be found within the four corners of the Act of 1833.

The Widows' Fund had its origin in certain provisions made by the Faculty of Procurators for the benefit of the widows and children of members. Before the Act of 1833 everything was in the hands of the Faculty. The allocation and distribution of its funds was a matter of domestic arrangement and regulation. By the Act of 1833 the condition of things was altered. The old Widows' Fund with its existing liabilities was handed over to the insurance society, which was to have no claim on the Faculty fund in respect of new members. The Society from its inception was a body separate and distinct from the Faculty. Even the members were not identical, for no one who became a member of the Faculty after reaching a certain age could enter the Society, and members of the Society might leave that body and still continue members of the Faculty. The Society had its own treasurer and was under the control of its own officers. It had no disciplinary powers. It had no function but that of an insurance society. It was a purely business association of a common type intended to be conducted on sound actuarial principles, subject to periodical investigation in accordance with the most approved tables of mortality, "taken in connection," as the Act itself declares, "with the experience of this and similar schemes." It is quite true that entrance to the Society could only be gained through admission to the Faculty of Procurators. Membership of the Faculty was the only passport to the Society. So far, but no further, the Faculty and the Society were linked together. When once the entrance gate was passed and a person became "a contributor to the Widows' Fund and entitled to the benefits thereof," his only statutory obligation to the Society, besides payment of a marriage tax, if exigible, was to contribute during the whole of his life unless and until he purchased exemption by compounding or by contributing for a period fixed by the Act, or unless and until he renounced in due form for himself and for his widow and children all interest in the Society and its funds.

The argument of the respondents, if I understood it aright, was founded partly on the language of the declaration of trust contained in the Act of 1833, and partly on inferences derived from the circumstances and position of the Widows' Fund before the Act.

The latter branch of the argument, which, at first sight, seems the more formidable, and on which much stress was laid, is, I think, displaced and excluded by the Act itself. In sect. 2 it was enacted that the regulations in force before the passing of the Act should be annulled, and that the fund as vested in the officers of the insurance society with the whole increase thereof, should be administered under the provisions of the Act of 1833.

The declaration of trust on which the respondents rely is to be found in sect. 9. That section declares that the uses and purposes of the Society and of the funds vested and to become vested in it or in the trustees thereof, shall, after satisfying certain prior charges, be "for provision and payment of an annuity to the widows severally, and children of deceased members of the Faculty, contributors to the Fund and Society hereby established." Then follow these words dealing with present and future contributors: "And for payment to the widows and children of the members of the said Faculty who now are or may hereafter become entitled to the benefit of the fund under the provisions of this Act as hereinafter specified." What is the meaning of these latter words? In construing them you must, I think, bear in mind two things. In the first place, a person could only enter the Society as a member of the Faculty. The Society was formed for the purpose of insuring members of the Faculty and no others. In the next place, a member of the Society, in the view of the framers of the Act became "entitled" to the benefits of the Society's Fund immediately on his admission. That is plain enough from the language of this section. It is plainer still from the language of sect. 16, which has been referred to already Now, the learned counsel for the respondents in construing the clause under consideration seemed to omit, or leave out of sight, the most important part of it. They read the clause as if the declared purpose of the fund was "for payment to the widows and children of the members of the said Faculty," without anything further in the way of defining the class of persons intended to be benefited. I venture to think that is not quite right. If I might paraphrase the sentence I should say the true meaning is, "for payment to the widows and children of persons who, being members of the Faculty, are, or may hereafter be, admitted to the Society, and by virtue of their admission become entitled to the benefit of the fund." This construction is consistent with what is found in subsequent sections, where the phraseology is varied and the persons entitled to the benefits of the fund are described sometimes as "contributors" simply, and sometimes as "members of the fund," without any reference to membership of the Faculty. What is more important is that it is consistent with the fundamental constitution of the Society as declared in sect. 1. The constituents of the Society, besides the then members of the Widows' Fund, are to be "all and every other person or persons who shall hereafter become members of and contributors to said fund in manner after mentioned." The only conditions of membership of the Society are entrance in the prescribed manner and contribution — not contribution plus continued membership of the Faculty of Procurators.

House of Lords.

Colquhoun and Others v. The Society of Contributors to the Widows' Fund of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow and Others.

Lord Macnaghten

The construction for which the respondents contend would certainly lead to strange and harsh results. A person might be a member of the Faculty of Procurators and also a member of the insurance society; he might have compounded for all future contributions to the Widows' Fund and thus have purchased for his wife and children the benefit of the annuity by payment in full. Suppose he were then struck off the roll of procurators in order to enable him to join the Bar or some other profession, membership of which might be incompatible with membership of the Faculty, it would be a strange thing that he, or rather his wife and children, should lose the benefit of his purchase. It would be a strange thing, too—unheard of, I should think, in the practice of insurance societies—that this insurance society, without making any refund, should appropriate a windfall which the actuarial calculations of an insurance society would not, I suppose, take into account. But however that may be, I rest my judgment simply and solely on the Act of 1833. It seems to me that when a person is declared by Act of Parliament to have become a member of a statutory body, and to be entitled to the benefit of a certain fund, his status and rights are not to be destroyed or taken away without plain language. An implied power of expulsion seems to me something of a novelty. Forfeitures, as a great judge has said, "are not favoured in the law."

I think the Order appealed from ought to be reversed.

Lord James of Hereford. — My Lords, the question raised in this case can easily be stated.

The Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow are a Corporation existing under a charter. In 1833 an Act of Parliament was passed for the better establishing and securing a fund for providing annuities to the widows and children of the members of the Faculty. The general effect of the statute is that persons becoming in the future members of the Faculty had to contribute to the Widows' Fund, and, upon making certain payments, would be entitled to certain benefits. By the concluding words of the first section of the Act the position of such contributors is thus defined: "Shall be called the Society of Contributors to the Widows' Fund of the Faculty of Procurators of Glasgow."

The pursuer, J. Colquhoun, being a member of the Faculty, became in 1872 a contributor to the Widows' Fund, making payment by way of entrance and subscription amounting to £179. He was always ready and offered to continue to pay the subscriptions due from him.

In 1899, J. Colquhoun pleaded guilty to a charge of embezzlement, and the Faculty, acting within their powers, expelled him. The question before your Lordships is, What are the effects of that expulsion? Does it carry with it any forfeiture or loss of the benefits under the Widows' Fund to which Colquhoun was entitled by virtue of his contributions? I think that it does not.

The argument of the respondents is that inasmuch as no one could become a contributor to the fund unless he were a member of the Faculty, in like manner he lost his rights under his contributorship if he ceased to be such member of Faculty.

But such argument cannot be supported by anything expressed in the statute; it is by force of inference only that such contention can prevail.

Where, as in this case, it is sought to effect a loss of moneys paid, surely there ought to be clear and distinct grounds for drawing such inference. I cannot find them. On the contrary, I think the provisions of the statute shew that it was intended to protect the interests of the contributor. He is entitled to renounce or to redeem under sects. 27 and 28, and is liable to forfeiture only for non-payment of contributions under sect. 26 of the Act.

It is true that in the first instance a contributor to the fund must be a member of the Faculty, but obligations are imposed upon him by the statute to make certain payments, not only whilst he is a member of the Faculty, "but during the period that each of such contributors respectively shall use and be a member of such Society."

Now a member of the Faculty may desire to resign such position—as, for instance, if he sought to become a member of the Bar of England or Scotland—and the respondents' argument must go to the extent of saying that in such a case all right to the benefits resulting from the contribution would be lost. No reliance is placed upon the fact that in this case misconduct has occurred. It is the absence of the pursuer's name from the roll that is relied upon. If this were sufficient to cause the forfeiture the statute may well have said so, but it has not; and in the absence of any express declaration that only members of the Faculty can be allowed to remain members of the Contribution Fund, I come to the conclusion that the appellant's contention is correct, and ought to prevail.

Lord Robertson.—My Lords, the judgment which I am now to read was written after the first hearing, and I have nothing to add.

I am of opinion, and, as there is a difference of opinion, it is right to say, clearly of opinion, that the judgment appealed against is right.

The claim of the appellant is that, albeit he is not a member of the Faculty of Procurators, he is entitled to contribute to their Widows' Fund and to receive the benefits of that institution. It seems to me that from the beginning, and of its essence, this fund has been one purely domestic to the Faculty, and that none of the modifications of the institution have impaired this essential characteristic and condition. Nor do I find in the successive charters and statutes anything to afford the smallest countenance to the idea that the fact that a man, while a member of the Faculty, has been a contributor to the fund, gives him any right to contribute to the fund when he has ceased to be a member. The nature of all such insurance exposes it to the risk that the contributions of years may be lost if a man has not the money or has not the qualification to contribute in later years. But I hope that I need not remind your Lordships that hardship will not supply a ground of decision which the contract does not supply, and that it would be at least as irrelevant to deplore Mr Colquhoun's loss as to reflect on his fraud.

Now I do not intend to rehearse the developments of this fund, for this has been done very adequately. But I take the several stages.

I should have thought it past all doubt that the claim of the appellant would have been impossible if the Act of 1833 had stood alone. The preamble and the enacting sect. 1 make membership of the Faculty the qualification of contributing to the new fund; and when we come to sect. 9, the Act declares the purposes of the trust to be the payment of annuities to the widows and children of members of the Faculty; "and it shall not be lawful to apply the said fund to any other use or purpose whatever."

Now I turn to the Act of 1875, which, as has been said with substantial accuracy, provides for the winding up of the fund. I must own that, this being so, it would be a singular occasion for increasing the number of contributors by bringing in persons who ex hypothesi were hitherto outsiders, or by abolishing a condition which on the same hypothesis had hitherto attached to existing contributors. In truth, however, the negative words of sect. 3 do not contain any such implication.

In what I have said, I assume the right of the Faculty to remove from their membership persons disqualified from membership, and such is a person convicted of the crime of embezzlement. I do not suppose that this was a new power conferred by the supplementary charter; but it is there in black and white. The truth is that membership of any such body is precarious to this extent, that it is not the fact of a man having been honest at the time of his admission that will retain his position, if in the sequel he is found dishonest. The same kind and degree of precariousness attend the corresponding investment of money by contributing to a professional widows' fund; that and nothing more.

On these grounds I am for affirming the judgment of the First Division.

Lord Atkinson.—My Lords, whatever may have been the true relation between the "Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow" and the contributors to the Widows' Fund before 1833, the statute of that year, in my opinion, entirely altered their relative positions, and gave to those contributors a corporate existence, distinct from, and to a certain extent independent of, the older Corporation. It was by the first section of that Act provided that those persons who were at the passing of the Act members or contributors to the Widows' Fund, together with all other persons who should thereafter become members or contributors to the fund, "in manner thereafter provided," should form the Corporation. From that time forward the new Corporation stood by the old very much, I think, in the position of an insurance company. Every member under 50 years of age admitted to the Faculty was bound to become a contributor to this fund, whereby, in consideration of the payment of a lump sum, varying from £25 upwards in an ascending scale according to his age, plus an annual contribution or premium during his life of £3, 10s., or such larger sum as the Society should have theretofore fixed, together with interest and penalties as in the statute provided, certain annuities were, after his death, to be paid to his widow or children. Every member of the Society could redeem, i.e. compound for, his annual contribution, and thus, if he were so minded, pay a lump sum at once. And none but members of the Faculty could become contributors.

Lord Atkinson.

It was not disputed, as I understood, that the relations between the contributors and the new Corporation became, from 1833, a contractual relation. And the point for your Lordships' decision is, in my view, this: whether it is an implied term of this statutory contract—it is certainly not an express one—that the insurer must continue to be a member of the Faculty until his death, so that if for any reason he, during his life, should cease to be a member of the Faculty, he should, ipso facto, forfeit everything he had paid, and the Society be relieved from every obligation to pay anything whatever to his widow or children.

This contingency, as appears from the actuarial tables used, was not taken into account in fixing the amount of the contribution. The latter is uniform, and the lump sum varies with the age of the insurer, and that alone.

Sect. 13 provides for the restoration of members of the Faculty whose interest in the fund shall have been forfeited, and sect. 14 enacts that on being restored they shall become members of the Society, "and each pay to the treasurer £1, 10s. during his natural life." Sect. 21 enacts that the customary payments of £1 in respect of every contributor who was admitted to the benefit of the fund before 7th February 1814, and of £1, 10s. in respect of every contributor admitted after that date, shall continue to be paid by the Faculty "during the period that each of the said contributors respectively shall live and continue to be a member of the Society," not, be it observed, continue to be a member of the Faculty.

Sect. 18 provides that every person who should thereafter be admitted to the Faculty should be bound to pay to the treasurer of the Society for its benefit annually "during his life" the sum of £3, 10s., or such larger sum as the Society shall have theretofore fixed and appointed.

All these sections apparently contemplate that the annual payment should continue to be made during the life of the contributor, and that this is their true meaning is, I think, enforced by the fact that special provision is made for the cessation of this payment in three particular instances, and those alone, namely (1) where the contributor has paid for forty years (sect. 27); (2) where he has renounced all benefits of the fund (sect. 28); and (3) where his interest in the fund has been forfeited by reason of his having been guilty of one of the several acts or defaults specified in the various sections, each of which is in its nature injurious to the interests of the fund. No provision whatever is made for the cessation of the contributions, expressly made payable for life, on the happening of such a probable event as the contributor's ceasing, for any reason, to be a member of the Faculty. Prima facie it must, I think, strike one as strange that such a contingency was not expressly provided for, if it was the intention of the legislature that forfeiture should follow upon its occurrence. It has been urged on behalf of the respondents that the omission is accounted for by the history of the fund, and by the special wording of several sections of the Act, notably the 9th, 29th, and 30th, which shew that the widows or children who are to receive annuities are the widows and children of persons who at the time of their decease were members of the Faculty, and that anything in the nature of a forfeiture clause, such as is above suggested, is therefore unnecessary.

The past history of the fund cannot, in my opinion, furnish any key to the meaning of the language of a statute which so fundamentally altered the previous position of things as did the Act of 1833, while the words used in the several sections relied upon do not, I think, when examined lead to the conclusion contended for.

The words occur in sect. 29, "there shall be paid out of the funds of the said Society to each of the widows of the deceased members of the said Faculty whose names are specified in Schedule A"; and the words occur in sect. 30, "there shall be paid out of the funds of the said Society to the widow of every member of the Faculty who shall have contributed to the said Fund." It is to be observed, however, that in both sects. 29 and 30, where the payment of annuities to children is dealt with, the words used are "deceased contributor" and "in case any member of the said Society shall die," and "widow of a contributor," while in sect. 31 the events, of the proof of which the trustees are empowered to call for evidence, are described as the "death of contributors." Again, in sect. 33 the phrase used is "widow of more than one contributor in succession." And in sect. 34 the word "contributor" is used throughout the section, the words "member of the Faculty" never, while the phrase "widow or children of such contributor" frequently occurs. It is clear therefore that under all the sections the essential fact which must be proved in order to entitle a widow, or a child, to an annuity is, that the husband of the widow, or father of the child, must have been a contributor at the date of his death, unless he had already redeemed or paid his contribution for forty years. These are the only exceptions. In the face of the clear provisions of sects. 9 and 16, which have already been quoted, I think the words "widows of deceased members of the Faculty," or words of the like kind, may, when used in the three sections above mentioned, well be held to mean the widows of men who were members of the Faculty, and who consequently became contributors, but subsequently ceased to be members of that Faculty but continued to be contributors; so that one is not constrained to adopt a construction which, at all events in the case of men who have paid their contributions for forty years, or who redeemed them, and thus purchased the benefits provided for their widows and children, if not in the case of others, would work the most gross injustice. Neither will this construction prejudice the interest of the Faculty or of the Society, while in my view it reconciles the several sections of the statute of 1833, and makes them consistent with each other. If it be the correct construction, as it appears to me to be, then I think Colquhoun has not forfeited his interest in the fund, and the respondents were not justified in the course they took. The decision of the First Division was wrong and should be reversed, and this appeal allowed with costs.

Lord Collins.—My Lords, at the close of the first hearing I arrived at the conclusion that the decision of the Court below was right. Afterwards I had the opportunity of reading in print the opinion of Lord Robertson. I did not attempt the superfluous task of trying to modify or improve upon that opinion, for I frankly felt I could not. Since then the case has been reargued, and I am bound to say that the reargument tended to confirm my original opinion. Since then again that opinion has been reenforced by that of my noble and learned friend Lord Halsbury, with the result that, with all deference to those who hold the opposite view, I am compelled to give my opinion that the judgment of the Court below is right, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

The Lord Chancellor.—My Lords, as the majority of your Lordships are in favour of allowing this appeal I shall propose the following order: "That the Minute or Resolution of the 4th February 1901 be reduced, and that it be found and declared as concluded for." I apprehend if any question arises in the drawing up of this order the parties will settle it themselves. Failing that, it will be possible to submit it for your Lordships' consideration.—17*th March* 1908.

Burgh—Dean of Guild—Glasgow Building Regulations Act 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. cap. cl.), sect. 60 (3)—Consent by Corporation to Erection of Building of Greater Height Than That Prescribed by Act—Appeal Against Consent to Dean of Guild—Observation by the Court as to Scope of Dean of Guild's Power of Review.

Appeal from the Dean of Guild Court at Glasgow.

Following upon the interlocutor reported supra, the Dean of Guild appointed the petitioners to intimate the said interlocutor to the Corporation of the City of Glasgow and to obtain from and lodge in process a Minute of said Corporation stating whether, as a matter of fact, the consent of the Corporation had been knowingly given to a building which, under sect. 62 of the Glasgow Buildings Regulation Act 1900, must be held as abutting on two streets. The Corporation having reported that such consent had not been knowingly given, the petitioners again applied for consent, and, after hearing the petitioners, the present respondents and another objector, the Corporation issued the following Minute:

The Corporation of the City of Glasgow intimate their consent, in terms of sect. 60 (1) of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act 1900, to the proposal of the petitioners to erect the building situated at 172–176 West George Street, extending from said street to West Regent Lane, as shown on the plans lodged in Court relative to said petition.

The present respondents appealed against this consent to the Dean of Guild in terms of the Glasgow Buildings Regulation Act 1900, sect. 60 (3). They stated that they were aggrieved by the said consent, inter alia, in the following respects:

. . . . (3) The erection of the buildings to the height proposed would be detrimental to the interest of adjoining proprietors and occupiers by unnecessarily restricting air space and light, and in the event of fire would become a serious danger to adjoining proprietors.

(4) No reasons exist on account of site or otherwise for relaxing the statutory height of the building, and the fact of its being more remunerative to the Summerlee Iron Company Limited to have increased height is no reason for such consent being granted.

(5) The granting of consent has resulted in the Corporation conferring an unnecessary pecuniary advantage on the Summerlee Iron Company Limited, to the detriment of adjoining proprietors, and the amenity, health, and safety of the neighbourhood.

The Dean of Guild pronounced the following interlocutor:

Having heard parties upon the conjoined processes, the Dean of Guild, before answer, allows to the objectors a proof of their averments in Article 9 (3), (4) and (5) of their Note of Appeal, and to the petitioners a conjunct probation; appoints the evidence to be led on a day to be afterwards fixed, and, on the motion of the petitioners, and if and in so far as such leave may be necessary, and he has power to grant it, the Dean grants leave to appeal.

Note.—It appears to the Dean of Guild that his duty in the present position of this case is obvious from two sentences in the opinion of the Lord President. In remitting the case his Lordship said: "That if consent (i.e. the consent of the Corporation) had been given, and the Dean of Guild sees no reason to interfere with it, then all is right. If that consent has not been knowingly given, then of course the Dean of Guild in his turn would send it back to the Corporation, in order that they should consider the matter for the first time." By Minute No. 17 of process the Corporation stated that their consent had not been knowingly given to a building which under sect. 62 of the Act must be held as abutting on two streets. But by Minute No. 19/6 of process the Corporation intimate their consent to the proposal of the petitioners to erect the building situated at 172–176 West George Street, extending from said street to West Regent Lane, as shewn on the plans. That consent being now in process, the duty of the Dean is to say whether or not he sees any reason to interfere with it. The objectors take exception to the consent on several grounds. Some are technical; the others deal with what may be said to be the practical side of the matter. The Dean thinks it would be unfortunate if by any pronouncement of his upon the technical pleas the case would reach the court of review without all the relevant considerations upon the practical side of the matter having been ascertained. He has therefore before answer allowed a proof of the averments as to the detriment which the objectors would suffer by the building proposed to be erected by the petitioners being authorised.

The petitioners appealed to the Court of Session and argued: The Dean of Guild had already repelled the objections of the appellants on their merits, and as no new ground of objection was advanced, he was not entitled to reconsider his decision. Further, the consent of the Corporation, given after due hearing and consideration of the objections now urged, was not open to review by the Dean of Guild.

As regards the findings of the Dean of Guild, the fourth and fifth objections were irrelevant and should not be admitted to proof, and the third objection was such as should be disposed of by the Dean of Guild as a man of skill and without proof.

Argued for the Respondents: The review of the Dean of Guild under sect. 60 (3) was not similar to that of a Sheriff or Judge. His function was not that of deciding whether the Corporation had decided wrongly; he was entitled to take all considerations into view, whether these had been advanced before the Corporation or not. In the present case he was entitled to have the assistance of a proof in considering whether injury would be inflicted on neighbouring proprietors by the erection of buildings of the height proposed.

The Court recalled the interlocutor appealed against, sustained the appeal, and remitted to the Dean of Guild to proceed.

The Lord President.—My Lords, when this case was before us in this Division on the former occasion, we pronounced an interlocutor to this effect: "Recal in hoc statu the interlocutors of the Dean of Guild, dated 3rd June 1907, in the respective processes, and remit to him to consider whether as a matter of fact the consent of the Corporation has been knowingly given to a building which, under sect. 62 of the foresaid Act, must be held as abutting on two streets; and if he is satisfied that such consent has been so given, and does not propose to recal that consent in virtue of the powers given to him by said sub-sect. 3 of sect. 60 of the said Act, to dismiss the appeal taken to him, with or without expenses as to him shall seem just, and to grant the lining in the petition therefor." The case went back to the Dean of Guild, and, as the Dean of Guild was not certain as to whether, as a matter of fact, the consent of the Corporation had been knowingly given to a building which must be held as abutting on two streets, he asked the Corporation to that effect, as, indeed, was indicated as the appropriate course by the opinion pronounced by myself in that case. The result of that was that the Corporation confessed that they had not viewed the case from that standpoint, and therefore they quite rightly again considered the matter from the standpoint which the Court had given them, namely, that this was a building which was to be held as abutting upon two streets. Having done so, they then again gave their consent. Against that consent an appeal was again taken to the Dean of Guild so that he might, as it is expressed in the interlocutor, "recal that consent," if he wished to do so, under the powers of sub-sect. 3 of sect. 60.

Now, it is quite true that the Dean of Guild had already pronounced, so to speak, an opinion on the merits of this matter when the former consent was given, but I have no doubt whatsoever that technically the Dean of Guild was perfectly entitled, if he wished, to reconsider the matter, because the old consent was gone as inapplicable and this was a new consent; and I do not say a word against the technical propriety of the appeal being taken, in order that the Dean of Guild might this time refuse his consent if so advised. The Dean of Guild, however, upon that matter, has not, as yet, indicated whether he consents or not, but he has pronounced an interlocutor to this effect: "Before answer, allows to the objectors a proof of their averments in Article 9 (3), (4) and (5) of their note of appeal." Now, the articles there referred to, of which proof has been allowed, are as follows: "(3) The erection of the buildings to the height proposed would be detrimental to the interest of the adjoining proprietors and occupiers, by unnecessarily restricting air space and light, and, in the event of fire, would become a serious danger to adjoining proprietors. (4) No reasons exist, on account of site or otherwise, for relaxing the statutory height of the building, and the fact of its being more remunerative to the Summerlee Iron Co. Ltd. to have increased height is no reason for such consent being granted. (5) The granting of consent has resulted in the Corporation conferring an unnecessary pecuniary advantage on the Summerlee Iron Co. Ltd. to the detriment of adjoining proprietors, and the amenity, health, and safety of the neighbourhood."

Before I deal with these averments perhaps it may be as well to say a word upon what I think the Dean of Guild has got to consider upon this matter. The section which gives the Dean of Guild appeal is the 3rd sub-section of the 60th section of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act (63 & 64 Vict. cap. cl.), which, after providing that the Corporation's consent shall be advertised, says it "shall not be acted on till twenty-one days after such publication; and the owner or lessee of any lands and heritages within one hundred yards of the site of any intended building who may deem himself aggrieved by the grant of such consent, may, within twenty-one days of such publication, appeal to the Dean of Guild, who shall have power to deal with the case as shall seem to him just." Now, the Dean of Guild made certain observations—not in this case, but in the last—as to what that appeal really meant, and we had not occasion on the last occasion to deal with that, so I shall deal with it now.

I do not think that the view that the Dean of Guild there took is quite correct. I think he took too restricted a view of his own powers. He seemed to think that, because the appeal was given from a public body to one person, namely, himself, all that he had to do was to see that the public body had not acted capriciously, or in any way ultra vires, but that he could not consider the matter on the merits. I do not think that there is necessarily any such limit. Nor do I think that there is anything to be surprised at in the legislature giving an appeal from a public body to one person, seeing that that public body fails in two respects: first, it is not a judicial body, and secondly, it is not a body that necessarily has among its numbers any member practically skilled in these matters—and seeing that the Dean of Guild enjoys both those advantages. The scheme of the statute seems to me clear enough. There are certain restrictions made upon height which are, I suppose, for the good of everyone concerned. Well, then, these restrictions are allowed to be dispensed with by the Corporation; and I think the matter which the Corporation in that question has to decide is a question, so to speak, of public policy. If they think that, in their view as custodiers of the town, it is a bad thing that the restriction should be dispensed with, then they will not give their consent; on the other hand, if they think there is no harm from the public point of view, they may dispense with the restriction and give their consent.

But then comes in the question of individuals; because there is no doubt that one person may have, from his local situation, a great deal more interest than another, even although the thing which is being dealt with is, so to speak, a matter of public interest. A very obvious illustration is this: it is a matter of public interest whether a certain street should be shut up, but it is very much more a matter of interest to the man who lives in a house near the street, and perhaps uses that street every day as a convenient way of getting to his business, than to somebody else, who is equally a citizen, but who lives two miles away at the other end of Glasgow. And therefore, I think quite properly, the statute said: "We must have a secondary consideration in the light of how this is going to affect private people." But then, my Lords, I think it is very necessary to say that I do not think this has anything to do with what may be called private people's legal rights. Private people's legal rights—rights of servitude, rights of prospect, and so on—have nothing to do with this matter, because they are, of course, perfectly safeguarded in the process of lining, which this is not. If a person has a servitude of light which is going to be affected by the building which is proposed to be put up, the proper place for him to appear is not in this question as to height, but in a question of decree for lining, and there he will have his right made good if he can. It must be remembered that these restrictions are purely statutory restrictions, and not under the common law at all. A man at the common law, if he is not restrained by other rights in his neighbour—of servitude or building conditions or something of that sort, all of which, as I have said, can be made good in the decree of lining—of course may build his house as high as the Tower of Babel. But then comes in this Building Regulations Act which says that, except on certain conditions, he shall not. Well, then, after the Town Council consents, the neighbour says: "But, then, this is going to affect me in a peculiar way." I think he has got a right to say so, and I think it falls within the province of the Dean of Guild to consider his objection in an appeal under sect. 60, sub-sect. (3); but I think he must show his hurt, not upon any ground of private injury—for that he must do in the lining—but upon what I may call the public ground, which he says presses upon him more severely than it would do upon other people.

I now revert to the Dean of Guild's interlocutor, and I first take the averments upon which he has allowed proof. I think that the third is in itself a good averment, that is to say: "The erection of the buildings to the height proposed would be detrimental to the interest of adjoining proprietors and occupiers by unnecessarily restricting air, space and light." I can imagine that a building could be so high and so big that it would, as a public matter, really hurt the air and light of the neighbourhood, and I think the adjoining proprietor should be able to say: "Well, that is so, and I am one of the people who would be specially hurt by it." I again call attention to the fact that a restriction of light does not mean a question of servitude. If he has got that, he must make it good in the lining. This must be a public detriment, but one which a particular person feels more than others. But it seems to me that averment 4 is no averment at all. Really, if I may say so without offence, it is ridiculous to allow proof upon averment 4, to prove a negative—"That no reasons exist." I cross that averment out altogether. Averment 5 seems to me to be, as to part of it, entirely irrelevant—the part where it talks about conferring unnecessary pecuniary advantages on the Summerlee Iron Company, for that is neither here nor there—and, so far as it is relevant at all, it seems to me nothing more than a repetition of averment 3 without the specification given in averment 3, because, whereas the detriment is explained in averment 3, it is not explained in averment 5 at all. I therefore cross out averment 5, because I think it has not added anything to averment 3. And that leaves averment 3 alone.

Now, as to the allowance of proof itself; while I want to make it perfectly clear to the Dean of Guild that we should certainly never interfere with him in taking the best means he can for the expiscation of a case, and while I also want to make it clear that there might be such specific averments as to particular things as, if not admitted, might make it perfectly proper for him to have a proof before he comes to his decision, yet it seems to me perfectly clear that the class of averment that is made in Article 3 is an averment which is not meant to be expiscated by putting people in the witness box; it is meant to be decided by the Dean of Guild himself as a practical man, for which reason it is that he is selected. Holding these views and expressing them so, I wish to say that I hope the Dean of Guild will not misunderstand me. I propose that we should recal the Dean of Guild's interlocutor and remit to him to pronounce his judgment, whether he thinks there is any reason for interfering with the consent which has been granted by the Corporation.

Lord M'Laren.—My Lords, I think it is necessary to keep in view that this is an appeal in a process which is preliminary to the regular application to the Dean of Guild Court for authority to build. I should have thought that it would be a more convenient mode of procedure if it had been enacted that the Dean of Guild, when the case comes before him for hearing, should be entitled, notwithstanding the consent given by the Town Council, to refuse the additional height upon public grounds. But that is not done; the provision is that there may be an appeal from the authority given by the Town Council to exceed the height prescribed for ordinary uses. Now I think, although this is not the ordinary Dean of Guild jurisdiction, it must have been intended that the Dean of Guild should proceed according to the same methods of enquiry and procedure as in his ordinary jurisdiction, because, if it had been an appeal in which the parties were expected to adduce expert evidence on either side, it would, I venture to think, be more convenient if that appeal had been to the Sheriff rather than to the Dean of Guild. The Dean of Guild, in his note, remarks that he considers it a somewhat anomalous thing that there should be an appeal from the whole Council to a single member of it, and so it would be if this were an appeal in which evidence were to be taken and dealt with as in a regular action. But then, in my view, that is not the intention of the legislature. In the present case it happens that the parties were heard before a committee of the Town Council upon the question whether the necessary consent should be given, but that was owing to the peculiar position into which the case had got. In the ordinary case, I take it, when the applicant goes to the Town Council in the first instance, there is no argument, and, if he makes a prima facie case before the committee of the Town Council, he may get their consent to the extension of the height of his building; and then that is safeguarded by the provision that there may be an appeal to the Dean of Guild Court at the instance of other parties. Now, that is not like an ordinary appeal from a whole body to one of its members, because the consent given in the first instance is given upon an ex parte application. I suppose it is thought more convenient that the hearing should be before a single member of the Town Council, and one who is specially conversant with these questions, rather than before the Town Council or its committee. In any case, as the appeal is given to the Dean of Guild, I think it must have been intended that he should proceed in the summary manner which is appropriate to his jurisdiction.

It would be very much to be regretted if in these applications the case should go through all the stages of an ordinary action.

I cannot help thinking that in allowing a proof the Dean of Guild was largely influenced by a consideration which he mentions in his note, that the proof might be useful in the event of the case going to a higher Court. There have been previous appeals in this case—I think this is Appeal C—and probably he contemplated that there would be appeals with other letters, and that the Court might need evidence to enable the point to be decided finally. But in the view which your Lordship has taken—in which I entirely concur—that this is to be treated as summary procedure, if cause can be shewn against the decision which the Dean of Guild has given, with the aid of the expert members of his council, we have always power to remit to a man of skill to give us such information as to enable us to check the conclusions to which the Dean of Guild has come. That is a power we have rarely had occasion to exercise, but it exists. And it is a better mode of dealing with these questions than by having a proof with half a dozen experts on each side coming to different conclusions. I therefore agree that this case should be remitted back for the purpose of having it decided by the Dean of Guild in a summary manner, in accordance with the practice of his Court.

Lord Kinnear.—My Lords, I agree with your Lordship in the chair, and I only desire to add a single observation with reference to the future procedure. I agree that the Court ought to be very slow to interfere with the discretion of the Dean of Guild, or any other magistrate, in the course of procedure which he has thought necessary to adopt in order to inform his own mind. But then I think that, on the remit which your Lordship proposes, the Dean of Guild will have a different question to consider from that which he disposed of in the interlocutor under appeal, because it is now fixed that two out of three of the averments which he thought ought to go to proof are irrelevant. The remaining averment raises a question of fact, but one on which the Dean of Guild himself is an expert authority. According to the ordinary course of procedure in this Court, in an appeal from the Dean of Guild Court, the usual method for reaching a decision of practical questions in this Court is to remit to the Dean of Guild to decide on an inspection of the premises, or on upon a consideration of the plans, if he thinks an inspection unnecessary. The question being limited, as it will now be by the judgment proposed, the Dean of Guild will not be precluded by his former judgment from taking the course which seems most expedient under the altered circumstances of the case. It will be for him to consider whether he is, or is not, in a position to pronounce his own opinion without extrinsic evidence. I therefore agree in the course your Lordship proposes.—13*th March* 1908.

II. Trust — Charitable Bequest — Foreign Missions—Bequest to "Foreign Missions" Held to be Charitable Bequest —Wilson's Executors v. The Scottish Society for the Conversion of Israel, 1869, 8 M. 233, Commented On.

The claimants Robert Allan and others, the next of kin of the testator, reclaimed and argued: This was not a case of imperfect designation of a definite legatee where proof of the identity of the legatee was admissible. The terms of the bequest were too vague and general, and the bequest was therefore void through uncertainty. Nor should it be treated as a case where the testator had delegated to a trustee the power of selection of certain objects from a specified class, as the class of object intended was not sufficiently specified (Crichton v. Grierson, 1828, 3 W. and S. 329; Dundas v. Dundas, 1837, 15 S. 427; Scottish Missionary Society v. Home Mission Committee, 1858, 20 D. 634; Blair v. Duncan, 1901, 4 F. (H.L.) 1; Macintyre v. Grimond's Trs., 1904, 6 F. 285, and 1905, 7 F. (H.L.) 90). The disjunctive clause "or any other in the foreign field suitable" gave an extension to the class of object inconsistent with the contention of the respondents. This was a bequest for religious purposes, and could not have the benefit of construction enjoyed by charitable bequests (Blair and Macintyre, cit.; Murdoch's Trs. v. Weir, Watson's Executor v. Allan and Others.

1905, 13 S.L.T. 777; 1906, 14 S.L.T. 515; and 1908 (H.L.), 15 S.L.T. 515). Esto that the description of the class of object was sufficiently specific, the bequest still fell, as there was not sufficient delegation to a trustee of the power of selection. The appointment of Mr Watson was simply as the testator's executor, and no delegation of such power was expressed in the will, nor could such be implied from its terms (Robbie's Judicial Factor v. Macrae and Others, 1893, 20 R. 358).

Argued for the Respondents: There was a case of imperfect designation of a definite legatee or legatees, and the Lord Ordinary was right in allowing the respondents to prove that they were the actual legatees, intended to be benefited. There was no element of uncertainty, as the expression "Foreign Missions" had a plain meaning which gave sense to the will, and to which effect should be given by the Court (Whicker v. Hume, 1858, 7 Clark 124; Scottish Missionary Society, sup.; Wilson's Exrs. v. Scottish Society for the Conversion of Israel, 1869, 8 M. 233; Miller's Trs. v. Kirkaldy, 1905, 13 S.L.T. 73 and 454). The disjunctive clause did not extend the class of object which it was intended to benefit, or interfere with the identification of the class; it merely extended the field within which the benefit might be administered. In any event, the bequest should be treated as a delegation to the executor of the duty of selection amongst the class of object named. The identification of the class was sufficient (Crichton v. Grierson, and Blair v. Duncan, cit.) The bequest though not charitable eo nomine, was de facto charitable and should be construed as such (Magistrates of Dundee v. Morris, 1858, 3 M'Queen 134; Pemsel [1891], A.C. 531, per Lord Watson at p. 561), and there was a suitable appointment of a trustee to exercise the power of selection (Low's Exr., 1873, 11 M. 744; Scott v. Sceals, 1865, 3 M. 1130).

The Court recalled the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and remitted to the Lord Ordinary to allow the real raiser, if so advised, to lodge a condescendence and claim in order to the execution of the provisions of the will, and thereafter to proceed as accords.

Lord Kinnear.—The question in this case is whether a certain bequest is void by reason of uncertainty. The will is a very simple one, and whatever doubt may arise as to the efficacy of the bequest in dispute, its mere interpretation, in my opinion, does not present any serious difficulty.

The testator leaves certain legacies of no great amount to relations, and a legacy of £10 to a servant, and then he proceeds: "The residue of my property I give and bequeath for the benefit of Foreign Missions in India, China, Africa and South America, or any in the foreign field suitable. I appoint the Rev. W. Watson, Kiltearn, as my executor, at a remuneration of £20 stg." It appears to me that there can be no uncertainty as to the meaning of these words. I cannot think it doubtful that "Foreign Missions" in the mouth of a Scottish testator means an enterprise conducted by some church or association in this country for the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts. The bequest, therefore, is, in my opinion, very clearly a bequest for the benefit of Foreign Missions. But then the testator does not define the particular missions which are to be benefited, nor the particular church or association by which these missions are to be conducted. It is a bequest in favour of Foreign Missions in general; and so considering it, I should agree with the observation of the Lord Ordinary that it is not sufficiently specific to be supported unless the testator has given a power to a trustee acting for him to select among the class of Foreign Missions those to which the bequest is to go. But then immediately following the bequest to the Foreign Missions there is the appointment of the Rev. W. Watson to be the testator's executor. This is a will in ordinary language, written by a layman, and in ascertaining what he means by appointing an executor I do not think that we are concerned at all with any technical difficulties arising from the distinction, if there be such in the present state of the law, between the office of a trustee and the office of an executor strictly so called. What the testator means is to appoint somebody who is to carry out the purposes of his will, and as mere matter of construction it appears to me that when he says "I give certain legacies to certain people, and give the residue for Foreign Missions, and appoint Mr Watson to be my executor," he means that Mr Watson is to execute all the provisions of the will, not only by paying the legacies to the persons named, but also by carrying out what is really in point of money the largest interest in the will, and so giving effect to the provision for the benefit of Foreign Missions.

As matter of construction that appears to me to follow, because I cannot imagine that the testator intended to appoint an executor to carry out the provisions of his will, and to exclude from the provisions which are so to be executed any one of those which the will contains. He is to carry into execution the will and every part of it, and that imports in my opinion a power to the executor to do whatever is requisite in order to carry out these provisions. I put this as mere matter of construction, but I add that since the passing of the Executors Act of 1900 the argument founded upon the difference between trustee and executor is no longer maintainable, because under that Act an executor has all the powers of a trustee.

The point, however, appears to me to be directly decided in the case of Dundas v. Dundas, 1837, 15 S. 427, which I think is entirely in point.

In that case, after leaving certain legacies, the testatrix provided as follows: "Any money left after paying all expenses I wish may be laid out on charities. I leave and bequeath to my nephew, John Dundas, the sum of £200 sterling, with power to see this will executed." It was held that the bequest, when combined with the appointment of the defender as executor, imported a discretionary power on his part to select the charities upon which the benefit was to be conferred. Lord Fullarton (Ordinary) says: "That in sound construction this must be held to import a discretionary power in the executor to make that selection of charities without which her will in regard to the immediately preceding legacy could not be carried into effect." Then he adds: "This construction, of course, brings the case within the rule established in the case of Crichton v. Grierson (1828), 3 Wilson and Shaw 329." Following that decision it appears to me that the question we have to determine is whether the bequest to Foreign Missions, with an appointment of executor which implies the power to carry out all the directions of the will, does or does not fall within the rule which the Lord Ordinary cites in Crichton v. Grierson, where the Lord Chancellor (Lord Lyndhurst) says, as quoted in Blair v. Duncan, 1901, 4 F. (H.L.) 1, per Lord Robertson at p. 5: "According to the authorities in the law of Scotland it is quite clear that a man may, in the disposition of his property, select particular classes of individuals and objects, and then give to some particular individual a power after his death of appropriating the property or applying any part of his property to any particular individuals among that class whom that person may select." The Lord Ordinary observes that giving effect to that rule the bequest in question is not sufficiently specific to be supported, and adds: "A bequest for religious purposes is not in Scotland construed as meaning a bequest for charitable purposes." There can be no doubt that these two words have different significations, but they are not mutually exclusive. A bequest for religious purposes may very well be a bequest for charitable purposes, and if there were any question as to the meaning of the words it appears to me that that is not a question which requires to be considered in this case. It is not necessary that we should define either the one or the other of these expressions exactly. If it were necessary, I myself think that since the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Pemsel, I should not be able to admit that the meaning of the word "charity" has been in this country so narrowed by popular usage as the learned judges who decided the case of Baird's Trs. v. The Lord Advocate, 1888, 15 R. 682, held that it was. But then, as I have said, I do not think that is a question we need to determine. It may very well be that a bequest for religious purposes in general could not be sustained as sufficiently specific even although a bequest for charitable purposes could be made effectual. But it does not follow that a will for a special purpose is the less capable of being sustained because that special purpose falls within the general description of religious purposes. The rule for the application of the doctrine laid down in Crichton v. Grierson appears to me to be found in a comparison of the recent decisions of the House of Lords — the cases of Blair v. Duncan, 1901, 4 F. (H.L.) 1; Macintyre v. Grimond's Trs., 1904, 6 F. 285, and 1905, 7 F. (H.L.) 90; and Murdoch's Trs. v. Weir, 1908 (H.L.), 15 S.L.T. 857; 1906, 13 S.L.T. 777, and 14 S.L.T. 515. In the first of these cases the rule is stated with great precision by Lord Robertson, who says: "What has been established as regards the intervention of a trustee is thus stated by Lord Lyndhurst in Crichton v. Grierson, and the passage touches the very core of the present case." His Lordship then goes on to cite the passage quoted by the Lord Ordinary, and adds: "This is the rule which is to be applied in the present case, and the question is, has this testatrix done what Lord Lyndhurst describes: has she selected the particular class or the particular classes of objects among which her trustees are to select?" Applying that test to the will before them in which a bequest had been made for charitable or public purposes, Lord Robertson was of opinion, and the House was of the same opinion, that in making this bequest "this testatrix has done nothing like selecting a particular class or particular classes of objects. She excludes individuals, and then leaves the trustee at large with the whole world to choose from. There is nothing affecting any community on the globe which is outside the ambit of his choice." Therefore, in the application of the rule to that case the bequest was held to be too wide, because there was nothing approaching the particularisation of the class to be benefited.

A similar decision was given in the later case of Macintyre v. Grimond's Trs. The question concerned a bequest for religious purposes, which was also held to be too wide as embracing a great variety of possible objects without particularisation of the class. On the other hand, in the last case of all, in Murdoch's Trs. v. Weir and Others, the House of Lords came to a different decision, and the bequest was sustained, the Lord Chancellor putting the rule in this way: he says, with respect to the criticisms which are applied to charitable bequests: "All that can be required is that the description of the class to be benefited shall be sufficiently certain to enable men of common sense to carry out the express wishes of the testator." That is, therefore, the rule which is held to be established by Crichton v. Grierson and the subsequent cases, and the question to be put in each particular case is whether the description of the class to be benefited is sufficiently exact to enable an executor of common sense to carry out the express wishes of the testator. I cannot entertain any doubt that an executor of reasonable common sense and reasonable knowledge of such affairs as the will deals with will have no difficulty in determining whether any particular purpose is, or is not, a purpose falling within the class to be benefited by the bequest to Foreign Missions.

It is said that in order to have the benefit of the general rule the bequest must be what has been described as a charitable bequest. I do not think that is the true deduction from the leading decision of Crichton v. Grierson, because the Lord Chancellor in examining the whole series of the decisions cites a great number of cases which have no relation to charity at all. But if there be any particular favour which the law requires courts to shew in construing charitable bequests, then I am of opinion that this particular bequest now in question falls within that class. I think that is the necessary conclusion from the judgment of Lord Watson in the case of Pemsel (1891), A.C. 531, where his Lordship, after narrating the considerable number of legislative provisions, goes on to say "that Scotch trusts which are ejusdem generis with trusts falling within the statute of Elizabeth in England are charitable in this sense, that they are all governed by the same rules which are applicable to charitable trusts in England" (page 561). That a trust for the benefit of Foreign Missions falls within the description of "pious and godly uses," which, Lord Watson says, is equivalent to charitable uses, seems to me beyond all reasonable doubt.

But I think that has been directly decided by this Court in the case of Wilson's Exrs. v. The Scottish Society for the Conversion of Israel, 1869, 8 Macph. 233. The precise question to be determined in that case was different from that with which we are now concerned, because the testator had certainly designated the particular association to be benefited by the bequest, and did not merely bequeath, as I think this testator does, to a class of associations among which his trustee is to select. But the point for which I cite the decision is that in considering how far effect should be given to the evidence adduced for the purpose of identifying the particular Society as that which the testatrix intended to benefit, the Lord President treated the case as a charitable bequest, and upon that ground only finds it possible to give weight to evidence which, if he were dealing with another class of bequests, he would not have thought sufficient. His Lordship says: "Having arrived at the conclusion that the testatrix, in making a charitable bequest of this kind, intended to give her money to some society for promoting the conversion of the Jews, and that there are several societies more or less nearly answering to the description in the will, it is the duty of the Court to decide which of them shall gain, even though they are not all claiming in this process, and although we can only arrive at a decision by reasonable conjecture as to her probable meaning"; and on that principle, which, in the last sentence of his opinion, he says is not entirely satisfactory to his mind as a lawyer, he nevertheless founds his judgment. It is to be observed that notwithstanding the somewhat restricted meaning which he found it necessary to put upon the word "charity" in construing the Income Tax Acts, the Lord President has no hesitation in describing the bequest for the conversion of the Jews as a "charitable bequest"; and on that ground he thinks it proper to follow the course of the decisions requiring bequests for charities to be favourably interpreted by the Courts.

I think we ought to follow the same rule in this case, and that we must therefore find that the residuary bequest of the testator when it is combined with the appointment of the real raiser as executor, imports a discretionary power on his part to select the missions on which the benefit of the bequest is to be conferred. He is of course to exercise his discretion as a trust committed to him, and not merely according to his own favour for one or other association for prosecuting Foreign Missions. It is a discretion which, as I read the will, the testator intended to confer upon him, and which he is therefore empowered to exercise. Taking this view, I think it follows that the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor ought to be recalled. The Lord Ordinary has allowed parties a proof of their averments. Now the averments to be proved are averments made by the Established Church of Scotland on the one hand and the United Free Church on the other as to certain circumstances in the history of this testator which are supposed to indicate a favour on his part either for the Established Church or for the United Free Church. If the question were whether this testator intended to benefit one or other of these Churches to the exclusion of the other or to the exclusion of other missionary associations, I am not persuaded that the facts specified would aid the Court very much in forming a judgment upon that question. They would come to nothing more than evidence which might suggest to the mind of a judge a conjecture in favour of one or other of the Churches. But since I hold that the testator did not intend to favour either Church to the exclusion of the other, but Foreign Missions generally, it is obvious that the proof allowed could not assist the Court in coming to a conclusion.

I do not think it would be proper at this stage to repel the claims of these two Churches. While each has stated its own case they have combined to state a case as against the next of kin in support of the validity of the bequest, however it is to be administered, and I think it would be premature to pronounce any judgment which would put them out of Court at any further stage which must be reached before final judgment can be given.

I suggest that it would be proper to recal the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and to remit to him to allow the real raiser, if so advised, to lodge a claim in order that the trusts of the will may be executed, and thereafter to proceed as shall be just. The parties are in Court, and I think they ought to be allowed to remain in the process until we see what course the real raiser may be advised to take.

The Lord President.—I agree entirely with the opinion which Lord Kinnear has just delivered, and I only propose to add a very few words. It is impossible, in my opinion, to read the will and to suppose, as the Lord Ordinary has done, that this is a case of a certain scheme, or schemes, insufficiently designed, and that the claimants are entitled to prove whom the testator intended to benefit. My reason is that the phrase "or any other in the foreign field suitable" clearly points, I think, to a power of selection somewhere. Accordingly I cannot agree with the propriety of allowing a proof to substantiate the averments to which Lord Kinnear has alluded, because I do not think it would forward the case one iota. The general question is, whether the bequest shall stand. Now as to the general rule, of course, there is no doubt. It is the rule laid down by the Lord Chancellor in Crichton v. Grierson, 1828, 3 W. and S. 329. But then it was argued that this bequest fails in two particulars.

It was said that there was not a selection of a particular class of objects, not a sufficient specification. I think there is, because I agree with what Lord Kinnear says, that Foreign Missions in the mind of a Scottish testator has a perfectly well understood meaning. It does not seem to me to help the matter to introduce the discussion which was handled by the House of Lords in Blair v. Duncan and Macintyre v. Grimond's Trs., because there is here no question as to the interpretation of "religious." Of course it has now been decided that a bequest for "religious purposes" is too wide to be given effect to. That does not mean that you may not have a perfectly well defined purpose which might be properly characterised as a religious purpose. And accordingly it seems to me that a bequest to Foreign Missions is sufficiently defined, and that it is not hurt by saying that it is a religious purpose. Then comes the second alleged defect, that there is here no power of selection. But there is the appointment of an executor. It is quite true that it is not said that that executor is to do the choosing, but then there comes in the other canon, namely, that the Court will always help the execution of a charitable bequest. There again I agree with Lord Kinnear that a bequest of which it is possible to say that it is a religious bequest may also be a charitable bequest. I have no doubt that this is a charitable bequest, and if that is so, then the Court will be helpful, so far as machinery is concerned, to have the purpose carried out. In other words, we have a direct application of the old authority of The Magistrates of Dundee v. Morris, 1858, 3 Macq. 134, a Dundee charity, and I think the very recent case of Murdoch's Trs. v. Weir. Accordingly I concur with what your Lordship has proposed. But in case there is any doubt about it, I should like to explain that the pursuer and real raiser should be allowed to lodge a claim, and it follows that if he does lodge a claim in accordance with the judgment pronounced his claim will be sustained. It is not because there is any doubt about that that Lord Kinnear proposes at this stage not to repel the claims of the two Churches. It is only because one cannot force Mr Watson to make a claim, and it would not be right to have the multiplepoinding disappear altogether. Should Mr Watson not do so, it would then be for the Churches to make some other proposition, such as to move for the appointment of a judicial factor. There is no doubt that the effect of this judgment is that if Mr Watson puts in a claim his claim will be sustained.

Watson's Executor v. Allan and Others.

The Lord President.

Lord M'Laren. — I agree in the judgment proposed. Apart from the power of selection, I should not have been disposed to sustain the bequest to Foreign Missions as sufficiently precise to satisfy the rule which has been laid down in many cases, that there must be not only specification of a definite class representing the object, but also a power of selection amongst the various bodies professing to carry out the object which the testator had in view. I should have great hesitation in expressing an opinion which differs from that of Lord President Inglis; but so far as his Lordship, in the case relating to the Society for the Conversion of Israel, 1869, 8 Macph. 233, professes to apply the principles of interpretation applicable to charitable trusts to a Society whose object was solely the conversion of people from one form of religion to another, I should wish, at all events, to reserve my opinion: first, because his Lordship says that these considerations were not altogether satisfactory to his own mind; and secondly, because it does not appear to me that the case in question was one in which the principle of the special construction of charitable trusts would arise. It was a case of the identification of a particular Society which was described in general terms, and was not a case of the determination amongst a class of objects indicated in general terms of the particular object to which the fund was to be appropriated.

While I should not be of opinion that a bequest for purely religious purposes was entitled to the benefit of the benignant construction accorded to charitable trusts, it may very well be that the objects indicated are partly charitable and partly religious, or partly secular objects other than charity. I suppose it is generally known that the Foreign Missions of the Scottish Churches have education as one of their principal motives, and in Africa especially they have been very successful, whether for good or for harm, in educating the Kaffir races to the ordinary standard of education which prevails amongst the European population. It may very well be that so far as the educational purpose is concerned a bequest of this kind might receive favourable interpretation, and I should certainly not hesitate to say, where the primary object was charity or education, such as a school or college, that the institution would be entitled to the benefit of the "charitable" rule of construction, although it was required that there should be religious services conducted, or even a chaplain appointed. Each case must, of course, depend upon its special circumstances, and the character of the body or class of bodies indicated by the testator. In the present case I think there is no difficulty whatever, because missions, in the sense in which the testator has obviously used the word, are a sufficient limitation of a definite class; and then of course there is the appointment of an executor, which is equivalent to the power of selection. I therefore agree that if a claim is put in by the executor, it must be sustained.—17*th March* 1908.

Slander — Relevancy — Factor Accused of Being "Unfaithful" — "The Unjust Steward" — Innuendo of Dishonesty — Privilege—Master and Servant—Malice —Relevancy of Averments of Malice— Issue of Slander Disallowed.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Guthrie.

(Reported supra, p. 846.)

This was an action of damages brought by a factor against his employer for slander, and separatim for assault. The issues of slander allowed by Lord Guthrie appear in the previous report.

The pursuer, by minute, withdrew the second and third issues.

The Defender reclaimed, and argued that the remaining issue of slander should be disallowed. The words complained of would not bear the innuendo of dishonesty; in any event the words were spoken on a privileged occasion; there was no relevant averment shewing malice. The mere insertion of the word "maliciously" would not make a relevant case of malicious slander (Ingram v. Russell, 1893, 20 R. 771). The subsequent charges founded upon by pursuer were too remote, being made long after the charge founded on in the issue, to shew malice at the time the latter was uttered. The defender also referred to the authorities cited in the last report.

The Pursuer argued that the words could bear the innuendo of dishonesty, and that the averments in Conds. 2, 4 and 5 were sufficient to infer malice. These were to the effect that in 1905 the defender had conceived an animus against all the servants who had worked for him, including the pursuer, and that in 1907 he invented imaginary grievances against the pursuer and abused him in general terms, culminating with the incident founded on in the issue. He further argued that the averments in the subsequent condescendences, shewing that the defender had repeated his accusations of infidelity to various third parties, threw a light upon his conduct and attitude of mind at the time of that incident, and were therefore relevant to prove malice.

The Court recalled the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary in so far as allowing an issue of slander, and approved the issue of assault, which was not disputed.

The Lord President.—An issue of assault has been allowed here, and the only question is whether there is to be an issue of slander as well. The statement complained of was uttered to the pursuer alone, and it has often been observed that the law of Scotland differs from other systems in allowing actions of slander in such circumstances. But while that is so, it is by no means expedient that vague averments as to what was said should be admitted to probation.

I think the statements of the pursuer here are much too vague, and while I am not to be taken as laying down that to call a man an unjust steward—especially a man who has acted in the capacity of a steward or factor—is not slander, the charge that was made here was so mixed up with the parable that it is really quite impossible to hold it as tantamount to conveying any imputation of dishonesty. I think, therefore, that the pursuer's averments are too vague to be admitted to probation.

I also think they fail in another respect—they have no sufficient substratum of malice, the occasion on which the statement was made being clearly privileged. I entirely agree with the view expressed by Lord M'Laren in the case of Ingram v. Russell, 20 R. 771, that it is not enough to use the word maliciously to make a relevant case of malicious slander, but that a circumstantial case of some kind must be set forth.

On both grounds, therefore, I am of opinion that the issue should be disallowed.

Lord M'Laren.—I concur. I would only add that while the law of Scotland does allow an action of slander for defamatory statements made to the pursuer himself, we apply to such cases a different standard of comparison from that which is applicable where the language complained of is spoken in the presence of others, who might take the words used seriously.

I have never known an issue allowed in relation to language such as was used here except when other persons were present who might be led to form an unfavourable opinion of the pursuer's character.

Lord Kinnear.—I agree with your Lordship. The allusion complained of conveys no definite imputation of a slanderous character. It might have different meanings to different minds; and the pursuer cannot prove his innuendo by evidence of the impression conveyed to persons who heard it, because nobody heard it except himself. I also agree that if this were doubtful, there is no relevant averment of malice.—19*th March* 1908.

Petition and Answers.

R. & W. Falconer Ltd., tinplate manufacturers in Edinburgh, went into voluntary liquidation on 3rd November 1906, and Mr Allan Drummond, accountant, was appointed liquidator. Immediately thereafter a petition was presented to the Court by certain creditors for compulsory winding up, and by interlocutor of the First Division, dated 13th November 1906, the Court continued the voluntary liquidation under supervision, superseded the voluntary liquidator, and appointed Mr George Allan Robertson, C.A., as liquidator in his place. The official liquidator realised the whole assets of the Company, amounting to £549, 0s. 1d., a sum insufficient to pay the preferential claims.

Robertson (Official Liquidator of R. & W. Falconer Ltd.) v Drummond and Others.

On 5th February 1908 the liquidator presented to the Court a scheme of ranking in which he proposed the following order:

A. Expenses of realisation of the assets of the liquidation:
   (1) Legal expenses incurred by the liquidator to his law agents.
   (2) Liquidator's remuneration.

B. Expenses of the liquidation ranking pari passu:
   (1) Estimated legal expenses incurred or still to be incurred by the liquidator.
   (2) Legal expenses of the petitioner and respondents to the petition of winding up the Company.

C. Preferable claims in the liquidation:
   (1) Parochial and other rates.
   (2) Wages of servants and employees of the Company.
   (3) Trade accounts for goods supplied to the order of the voluntary liquidator.
   (4) A sum due to the British Linen Bank on an account-current opened by the voluntary liquidator in name of the Company in liquidation.

This scheme of ranking was objected to by the other parties, and the following authorities were quoted at the hearing: Edinburgh Pavilion Co. Ltd. (in liquidation); Whigham v. Walker, 1906, 14 S.L.T. 61; Scottish Drug Depôt v. Fraser, 1905, 7 F. 646; Northern Distilleries Co., 1901, 9 S.L.T. 213; London Metallurgical Co. [1895], 1 Ch. 758; Audley Hall Cotton Spinning Co., L.R. (1868), 6 Eq. 245.

The Lord Ordinary ranked the claims in the following order, after deducting the sum of £74, 13s. 11d., which he held to be the expenses of the liquidator's law agents incurred in connection with the liquidator obtaining full possession of the Company's estate: (1) The expenses of the petitioning creditor and respondents to the petition for winding up pari passu; (2) the sums found to be due to trade creditors of the voluntary liquidator and to the British Linen Bank pari passu; (3) the account of the liquidator's law agents, after crediting thereto the above-mentioned sum of £74, 13s. 11d.; (4) local rates and taxes and wages due to employees.

I. EXPENSES—JUDICIAL FACTOR—CLAIM BY BANKRUPT ON ESTATE UNDER JUDICIAL FACTOR—TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY SUCCESSFULLY OPPOSED BANKRUPT'S TITLE TO CLAIM—EXPENSES FOUND DUE AGAINST FACTORY ESTATE.

II. JUDICIAL FACTOR—DUTIES—PROCESS CONCERNING FACTORY ESTATE—COMPETING PARTIES—DUTY OF JUDICIAL FACTOR TO INFORM HIMSELF OF STEPS IN THE PROCESS, ALTHOUGH NO DIRECT INTEREST TO FACTORY ESTATE.

This was an action wherein reduction was sought of interlocutors finding expenses due by a judicial factor who was respondent in a note in the Bill Chamber in the factory process, but had lodged no answers, to another respondent who had lodged answers and successfully opposed the conclusions of the note.

On 19th July 1901, John Scott Tait, C.A., was appointed judicial factor on the estate of the Incorporation of Tailors of Edinburgh. Robert Gillespie Muir was entitled to and in receipt of an annuity from the funds of the Incorporation, and on 7th January 1907 he presented a note in the factory process claiming to have that annuity increased to a sum of £330. The note was served upon the judicial factor, who accepted service thereof and appeared by counsel at the first subsequent enrolment of the note, but only to object to an inaccuracy in the designation of the said R. G. Muir. He did not lodge answers or dispute Mr Muir's right to an increased annuity. Answers were, however, lodged by John Bird Gray, C.A., the trustee in bankruptcy of the said R. G. Muir, who disputed Mr Muir's title to uplift said annuity. The judicial factor having no interest in the decision of the question whether Mr Muir or his trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to uplift said annuity, made no further appearance in the proceedings following on the note.

On 21st March 1907 the Lord Ordinary on the Bills pronounced the following interlocutor:

The Lord Ordinary officiating on the Bills having resumed consideration of the note for Robert Gillespie Muir, No. 58 of process, and minute and answers for John Bird Gray, C.A., trustee on the sequestrated estate of the said Robert Gillespie Muir, Nos. 60 and 63 of process, and heard counsel thereon, refuses the note, and decerns; finds the respondent, the said John Bird Gray, entitled to expenses out of the estate of the Edinburgh Tailors' Incorporation mentioned in the note, and remits the account thereof, when lodged, to the Auditor to tax and to report.

(Signed) CHARLES J. GUTHRIE.

The present action was brought by the judicial factor to reduce said interlocutor in so far as it found the respondent entitled to expenses against the estate under his charge, and also a subsequent interlocutor approving the Auditor's report on the account of expenses of the said respondent and decerning against the present pursuer for payment thereof as judicial factor foresaid.

There was no crave for expenses as against the estate of the Incorporation of Tailors in the note, and no notice was given to the judicial factor personally that a motion was to be made for a decree of expenses against the estate.

The Pursuer argued that he had received no notice of the motion asking for expenses against the factory estate, and that as there was no crave for such expenses in the note, and as he did not lodge any answers to or oppose the conclusions of the note, the interlocutor should be reduced. The Court was not entitled to give expenses where an action was undefended and there was no crave for expenses in the summons (Lord Glenlee in Heggie & Co. v. Stark, 1826, 4 S. 518, new edition, p. 518). The position here was exactly analogous, the factor having lodged no answers and there being no crave for expenses against the factory estate. In this case the question argued before the Lord Ordinary was which of two parties was entitled to payment of the increased annuity. The judicial factor having no interest in that question, the expense of watching these proceedings would not have been a proper charge against the estate.

The Defender argued that it was the duty of the judicial factor as an officer of Court to be represented at all hearings which affected or might have affected the estate; the Court has absolute discretion with regard to expenses and can grant them without hearing parties (Kerr v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, 1899, 2 F. 17).

The Lord Ordinary repelled the reasons of reduction, and found the defender entitled to expenses against the pursuer as judicial factor, and authorised him to charge these expenses and his own expenses against the factory funds under his charge.

Lord Guthrie. — Neither side moved for a proof. I must, therefore, take this case on the footing that the interlocutors of 21st March and 6th June 1907 under reduction were not expressed in the way complained of as the result of any blunder or misapprehension, but were duly considered. Further, it is admitted that no special notice was sent to the complainer of the diet on 21st March 1907, when the first interlocutor in question was pronounced, and that no intimation was given to him at any time that expenses would be moved for out of the estate of the Edinburgh Tailors' Incorporation, in charge of the pursuer as judicial factor.

In these circumstances, the pursuer's first plea is as follows: "The said pretended decree or interlocutor, having been obtained or issued without any notice or intimation to the pursuer, to which notice or intimation he was legally entitled, decree of reduction should pass as concluded for."

I negative the pursuer's contention, first, because he was not legally entitled to any special notice or intimation; and second, because, if he was, he was bound to have informed himself of the terms of the interlocutors in question in time to have reclaimed against them, and, not having reclaimed, he is now barred from questioning them.

On the first point, I cannot assent to the view that a judicial factor is not bound, as the officer of Court in charge of the estate, to keep himself informed, both of what is proposed to be done, and of what is actually done, in all matters directly or indirectly concerning the estate. In this particular case a note was presented in the petition under which the pursuer was appointed; he accepted service of that note, and he actually appeared on at least one of the enrolments. I think the pursuer was bound to watch the whole proceedings in connection with that note, and, when an application was made in general terms for expenses, he was bound to have seen that any objection he had to expenses being charged against the estate under his charge was duly stated. Had such an objection been stated, it might or might not have been favourably entertained. Looking to the fact that the bankrupt was, in one view, the only beneficiary entitled to the income of the estate, there was at least room for maintaining, in a matter so entirely in the Lord Ordinary's discretion, that the convenient and reasonable course was to charge the expenses in question on the estate of the Incorporation.

But if the pursuer had any right to notice before the interlocutor was pronounced, he had an opportunity of stating this objection to the Inner House, and he failed to avail himself of it. I cannot doubt that a judicial factor is bound to make himself acquainted, as soon as it is pronounced, with every interlocutor relating to the estate under his charge. I agree in this matter with the view presented in Answer 9 [viz. That it was pursuer's duty to have informed himself of the terms of the judgment by procuring a copy of the interlocutor]. The pursuer makes no answer to that statement. If he did not see the interlocutors in time to reclaim, that was his own fault, for which he alleges no excuse; if he did see them, then he must be held to have waived any objection he may have had.—20*th March* 1908.

Reclaiming Note against an Interlocutor of Lord Salvesen.

(Reported supra, p. 678.)

The Defender reclaimed and argued: This obligation was not one which was prestable against an heir of entail in possession. It sought to put upon the entailed estate a debt which was not covered by the exception to the prohibition against contracting debt provided by the entail. Such a debt was a personal debt of the granter of the lease, and transmitted only against his singular successors. The heir of entail in possession stood in the relation of singular successor to the granter of the entail, but not to any other heir of entail. An obligation undertaken by one heir of entail must, in order to transmit against subsequent heirs of entail, be capable of being made, and must have been made, by possession, a real right. This rule had been applied to the analogous case of stipulations as to meliorations, which it was settled did not transmit against an heir of entail (Dillon v. Campbell, 1780, M. 15,432; Webster v. Farquhar, 1791, Bell, 8vo Ca. 207; Taylor v. Bethune, 1791, Bell, 8vo Ca. 214; Moncreiff v. Tod & Skene, 1825, 2 S. 113 and 1 W. & S. 217; Fraser v. Fraser, 1825, 4 S. 73, 1827, 5 S. 722, 1830, 8 S. 409, and 1831, 5 W. & S. 69; Breadalbane v. Jamieson, 1877, 4 R. 667, per Lord Deas at p. 675 and Lord Shand at p. 684; Learmonth v. Sinclair's Trs., 1878, 5 R. 548; Fraser v. Maitland, 1824, 2 S. App. 37). Nor was an heir of entail adopting his predecessor's lease bound by those stipulations which it contained which could not validly be made to affect the entailed estate (Kerr v. Redhead, 1792, Bell, 8vo Ca. 202, rev. 1794, 3 P. App. 309; Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 1849, 11 D. 596, per Lord Fullerton at p. 600). The terms of the Entail Amendment Act 1878, which in sect. 1 provides for the relief of the executor by the succeeding heir of entail of certain obligations undertaken to tenants with regard to expenditure upon the entailed estate, imply that no such obligation of relief exists apart from the statute, and that such obligation is confined to the objects of expenditure there enumerated, of which the present is not one.

1st Div.

Gillespie v. Riddell.

Argued for the Respondent: The binding force of the stipulation in question did not depend upon the power of an heir of entail to burden, or on the liability of a succeeding heir of entail for his predecessor's obligations, but depended upon the relation of landlord and tenant validly created by the lease. Granted that the heir of entail in possession has power to grant leases which create the relation of landlord and tenant between a succeeding heir and the tenant, then he can bind the succeeding heir with all the stipulations necessary for the creation of that relationship. The present stipulation was one ex necessitate of the lease. The decisions upon meliorations had no application. Stipulations as to meliorations were not common, still less universal, whilst the respondents were prepared to prove that such a stipulation as the present was necessary, and was by invariable custom inserted in all leases on this estate. The obligation was such as would transmit against a singular successor of the granter (Fraser v. Maitland, cit.; Bell v. Lamont, 14th June 1814, F.C.; Maclaine v. Stewart, 1898, 36 S.L.R. 233, 1899, 37 S.L.R. 623), and where such an obligation was of the nature of an ordinary act of administration, customary and necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the estate, it would transmit against heirs of entail (Queensberry Leases, 1819, 1 Bligh 339, per Lord Eldon at pp. 459, 461, and Lord Redesdale at p. 502; Waterson v. Stewart, 1881, 9 R. 155; Queensberry v. Montgomery, 18th Feb. 1814, F.C.; Learmonth v. Sinclair's Trs., cit., at p. 560; Breadalbane v. Jamieson, cit.). The Lord Ordinary was wrong in dismissing the third and fourth conclusions. The rule that general disponees must be discussed before special legatees (Erskine, III. 8, 52) was merely one of convenience. General disponees and special legatees have been sued together (Weir v. Parkhill, 1738, M. 5857), and a declaratory decree as to the liability of a special legatee was competent (Burnet v. Burnet, 1854, 16 D. 780). In any event, in view of the special hardship of the case, the respondent should be granted this declarator in order that he might know his right and be able to take the necessary steps with regard to his sheep stock.

The Court recalled the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, assoilzied the defender from the declaratory conclusion that the obligation in question was binding upon her as heiress of entail in possession, and quoad ultra dismissed the other conclusions of the summons.

Lord Kinnear.—This is an action at the instance of the tenant of a sheep farm on the entailed estate of Sunart in Argyllshire, for the enforcement of an obligation undertaken by the lessor, the late Sir Rodney Riddell, the heir of entail in possession at the date of the lease. The lease was for fifteen years from Whitsunday 1903, with an option to either party to terminate at the end of the fifth year; the defender, Miss Louisa Riddell, who is now heir in possession, has given notice to terminate at Whitsunday next; and the pursuer maintains that by force of the obligation in question she is bound, as heir of entail in possession, to take over his sheep stock at the same price as he paid on his entry for the sheep stock then on the farm. The primary conclusions of the summons are thus directed against the present heir of entail. But there are two subsidiary conclusions for declarator: first, that the whole heritable and moveable estate of the late Sir Rodney is liable for the obligation; and, secondly, that Miss Riddell is liable as a special legatee under his will, to the extent of the value of her special legacy. These last conclusions, the third and fourth, the Lord Ordinary has dismissed as incompetent; and I believe that all your Lordships are satisfied of the soundness of that judgment. If a debt is to be made good against the estate of Sir Rodney Riddell, the proper contradictors are his testamentary trustees and executors, and an individual legatee cannot be called upon to discuss the validity of a claim against the general estate, which may or may not affect her particular legacy, in an action to which the general representatives of the testator have not been made parties. The Lord Ordinary's observation appears to be perfectly just, when he says that the pursuer's proper course, if he has a claim against the estate, is to sue the trustees and executors in their own forum.

We can therefore express no opinion in this case as to the liability of Sir Rodney's personal representatives. They are not called as defenders, and no judgment we could pronounce in this action would be res judicata against them. The only question with which we are concerned is the liability of the heir of entail.

The Lord Ordinary says it is singular that this question has not hitherto been made the subject of direct decision; and observes that it may be assumed in the pursuer's favour that heirs of entail in possession have not hitherto disputed the binding character of similar obligations. This is not, perhaps, a very safe method of reasoning, because it is as easy to assume that claims against heirs of entail have never been pressed, as that they have always been conceded. But the question arose directly for decision in Panton v. Mackintosh (1903, 10 S.L.T. 763), and was decided by Lord Kyllachy in favour of the heir of entail. This is an authority which we regard with the highest respect; but since it is not binding on this Court, it will be proper to consider, in the first place, how the law stands, apart from Lord Kyllachy's decision.

If this question is to be considered a novel one, it is, however, to be solved by principles that are well settled. The general rule is established by a great mass of authority, that the personal contracts and obligations of heirs of entail are not binding on their successors in the entailed estate; and this rests on the obvious principle that a succeeding heir who takes his interest in the estate from the entailer alone, does not represent a preceding heir from whom he takes nothing whatever. It is true that, subject to certain limitations, leases granted by an heir in possession are binding on his successor. But this does not depend on contract or obligation. It is because the lessor in the lawful administration of his own property has given the lessee a real right which will be effectual against all subsequent owners. But to make it valid it must be made real, or, in other words, the tenant must have entered on possession according to the general rule of law, which is thus stated by Lord Westbury in Campbell v. M'Lean, 1870, 8 M. (H.L.) 40: "To make it valid as against the singular successor, the grant must be brought within the operation of the statute of 1449—that is, it must be shewn to be a real right. A lease, by the law of Scotland, is a personal contract; and the entry of the intended tenant upon the property intended to be demised is equivalent to seisin, and the right thenceforth becomes a real right." Accordingly, it was held in Kerr v. Redhead, 1792, Bell's 8vo Ca. 202, rev. 1794, 3 Pat. 309, that while a lease followed by possession is effectual, a contract to grant a lease is not binding upon the next heir. "If he had lived," says Lord Thurlow, speaking of the contracting heir, "he must have fulfilled his agreement; but as he did not live it cannot be transferred against a singular successor, which is precisely the character of an heir of entail." So also in his judgment as to the Queensberry Leases (1819, 1 Bligh 339) Lord Eldon, after shewing that a lease containing a covenant to renew from time to time might be perfectly good for the term current at the granter's death, that being otherwise a competent term, goes on to say: "With respect to the covenant for another lease it is a mere personal contract, upon which it appears to me there could be no possession"; and refers to Leslie v. Orme (1779 M. 15,530, aff. 2 Dow 112, 1 Bligh 510, 2 Pat. 533), where, he says, upon the main question, a lease for four nineteen years was sustained, and yet with regard to a reversionary lease, where no possession had been had, the House held it to be bad. The principle is, and it is trite law, that the heir of entail in possession is fiar of the estate, and as free to deal with it as any other fiar except in so far as he is restrained by the conditions of the entail. It follows that the leases he may have granted, if they have been made real by possession, will be good against his successors in so far, but only in so far, as they do not contravene the cardinal prohibitions. It was at one time a difficulty in the application of this doctrine that, just because it creates a real right in the land, every lease is an alienation and therefore a contravention of the prohibition to alienate or dispone. But that problem was finally solved by the judgment of the House of Lords in the "Queensberry Leases"; and it is now settled that while long leases are void as contraventions of the entail, short leases, which may now be taken as those which do not exceed the period allowed by the Rosebery Act or by the deed of entail, may be sustained. But this is a relaxation admitted only because it was held to be indispensable for the reasonable enjoyment of the estate which the entailer intended for all his heirs on succession; and Lord Redesdale observes: "It seems to me that a power thus yielded to necessity, and only to necessity, ought to be bounded by the necessity which compels it to be yielded—that is, which is compatible with the future as well as with the present enjoyment of the estate." No lease can be sustained, therefore, which exceeds the necessary term, or which infringes otherwise the rights of an heir who may succeed during its currency.

I have dwelt on this point because, as Lord President Inglis has said, the proposition that the heir in possession is fiar of the estate, but subject to the prohibitions and conditions of the entail, is the foundation of all the law applicable to questions of this kind. It follows that each heir in his turn takes the estate subject to the real rights and burdens which have been validly laid upon it by his predecessor, and entirely free from all such as are invalidated by the fettering clauses, and also from all liabilities which stand upon personal obligation and have not been made to affect the estate itself. The point to be determined, therefore, is to which of these classes the obligation in question belongs. There is apparent force in the contention, favoured by the Lord

1st Div. Gillespie v. Riddell. Lord Kinnear.

Ordinary, that if leases are allowed, all stipulations which are reasonable and customary as between landlord and tenant must be admitted, as conditions without which a good tenant could hardly be obtained. But the conditions of the lease must be controlled by the limitations of the lessor's power to dispose of the estate; and I am unable to assent to the Lord Ordinary's conclusion, because it disregards this overruling principle, and is thus, in my opinion, irreconcilable with a long series of decisions which have been accepted by the House of Lords as fixing the law.

The cases, or most of them, are, as the Lord Ordinary observes, collected in the opinion of Lord Deas in Breadalbane v. Jamieson, 1877, 4 R. 667. What he regards as the leading case is Dillon v. Campbell, 1780, M. 15,432. It was stipulated in a lease granted by an heir of entail in possession that the tenant should be entitled at the end of the lease to the value of building to be erected by him. The granter of the lease died during its currency, and at its expiration the tenant brought an action for the value of the buildings against the succeeding heir, and pleaded that the estate had benefited by the expenditure. The report bears that the Lords were at first moved by the equitable nature of the demand; but the answer which ultimately prevailed was that no debt could be made to affect the heir of entail which could not also be made to affect the estate, and consequently that to bind the next heir for improvement debts would infer a contravention of the prohibition against the contraction of debt. The ground of judgment is very clearly brought out in the interlocutor of Lord Braxfield, Ordinary, to which the Court in the end adhered, and by which the defender was assoilzied "in respect he did not represent the granter of the lease otherwise than as heir of entail, which entail contained the usual prohibitory irritant and resolutive clauses 'de non alienando vel contrahendo debita.'" The same principle received effect in Webster v. Farquhar, 1791 (Bell's 8vo Cases 207); Taylor v. Bethune of Balfour, 1791 (Bell's 8vo Cases 218). The question came before the House of Lords in Moncreiff v. Tod & Skene, 1823, 2 S. 113, and 1825, 1 W. and S. 217. In that case an heir of entail in possession had granted a lease, by which she bound herself or the proprietor of the lands at the end of the lease to pay to the tenant a sum of £625, which the latter had agreed to expend in erecting a new steading on the farm. The tenant brought an action for payment of this sum against the executor of the granter of the lease, who by that time had died, and the executor in his turn brought an action of relief against the new heir of entail, who was then in possession.

All the parties interested were thus before the Court; and the judgment was that the executor was bound and that no liability attached to the heir of entail. The argument for the executor was the obvious one that the obligation was imposed in terms on the proprietor of the lands for the time being, who, moreover, would alone derive benefit from the expenditure. The answer which prevailed was that the obligation being personal must be enforceable against the granter and her personal representatives, and could not affect the heir of entail, because the entail contained a prohibition against contracting debt or burdening the lands with sums of money. The decision of this Court was affirmed in the House of Lords, with a variation which does not affect the question in hand, and Lord Gifford says in moving the affirmance: "It is hardly necessary for me to state that in cases of this nature it is certainly not competent for the heir of entail in possession to erect farmhouses and other buildings upon the farm and to throw any of the expense to be incurred upon the succeeding heir of entail." He points out that under the Montgomery Act the estate may be burdened with a certain proportion of the expense necessarily incurred; and observes that but for the aid of that statute the incapacity of an heir of entail to build farmhouses without taking the whole expense upon himself might be very prejudicial to all the succeeding heirs. But in that case the heir in possession had not resorted to the statute; and Lord Gifford appears to have had no doubt that except in the mode prescribed by the statute she could throw no part of the burden, and even with the aid of the statute could not throw the whole burden, on the succeeding heir. "On the general point," he says, "the decisions appear to be conclusive." A similar decision was pronounced, and the determining principle was again affirmed, in Fraser v. Fraser, 1825, 4 S. 73, 1827, 5 S. 722, 1830, 8 S. 409, and 1831, 5 W. and S. 69. But I may observe, in passing, that this case, while it is entirely in accordance with previous decisions, brings out very clearly a distinction which, however obvious, was, I think, overlooked in the discussion of the authorities—the distinction between obligations created by an entailer and those created by an heir of entail. General Fraser, the maker of an entail, granted, or, which is the same thing, authorised his trustees to grant, leases containing obligations on the landlord to pay the tenant for meliorations. His brother, Archibald Fraser, succeeded as first heir of entail, while the leases were still current. There could be no question that as a gratuitous taker he was liable for the entailer's debts and obligations, and among the rest for the stipulated payment for meliorations. But instead of performing his obligation according to its terms at the end of the lease, he made an agreement with the tenants by which he granted new leases for nineteen years on their renouncing the existing leases and postponing their claims for meliorations till the expiration of the new period, when he bound himself and his heirs to pay these and also certain other meliorations to be undertaken by the tenants. In an action at the instance of a tenant against the next succeeding heir, it was held that Archibald Fraser had no power to transfer to the next heir obligations created by the entailer which had become exigible during his own possession, nor to burden either that heir or the estate with the new obligations undertaken in the leases granted by himself.

The obligation in question in Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 1849, 11 D. 596, was of a somewhat different character, but it fell within the same rule. An heir in possession bound himself in a lease of a farm to trench, drain, and lime a part of it. This was held to be a personal obligation which did not transmit against subsequent heirs of entail. It was not considered as a contravention, because it neither was nor could have been made a real burden on the land; and it made no difference that it was inserted in a lease, because the real right acquired under a lease is a right to possession of the land, and stipulations engrafted on the lease by which the landlord undertakes to pay money or perform an obligation are purely personal. The decision therefore illustrates another aspect of the general doctrine laid down in Dillon v. Campbell, that an heir of entail is not bound by the obligations of a preceding heir, except in so far as they may have been made validly to affect the entailed estate, without involving a contravention.

Three cases were cited by the pursuer's counsel for the purpose of shewing that what he described as ordinary acts of management customary in a district are binding on subsequent heirs of entail, even to their prejudice. This is exactly the argument which was urged unsuccessfully in the House of Lords against the heir of entail in Fraser v. Fraser, except that in that case the transaction was said to be beneficial. But there is nothing in the cases cited inconsistent with the general doctrine as I have stated it. In the case of Lord Queensberry v. Montgomery, 18th February 1814, F.C., it was held competent for an heir of entail to stipulate for forehand rents in corn farms, so as to secure for his own executor a term's rent, which, if the legal and conventional terms had been the same, would have gone to the next heir. But the point of the case is that the system of management under which corn farms were forerented was not introduced by the deceased heir, but had been established before his succession by the entailer. The Lord Ordinary observes that the succeeding heir was deprived of a benefit which would otherwise have belonged to him. But the argument for the successful executors was that the deceased heir would have lost half a year's rent if he had altered the entailer's system; and it is evident that if, when a deed of entail comes into operation, the farms are let for forehand rents, the only possible way of equalising the interests of all the succeeding heirs is to continue the system unaltered, because the heir during whose possession the rule might be changed could never recover a half year's rent which had been paid to the entailer's executors. The argument in the case of Lord Queensberry, therefore, was that the rule as to forehand rent is regulated by the will of the entailer, and an heir of entail is not bound to alter the rule to his own prejudice and against the entailer's practice. It was conceded that "an heir of entail is not entitled to alter the terms of payment of rent and to substitute others so as to give a privilege to his executors over the heir"; and the law is distinctly laid down to that effect by Lord President Inglis in Lord Herries v. Maxwell's Curator, 1873, 11 M. 396. The case related to the apportionment of rents under the Act of 1870, and it was necessary to determine whether a rent payable at a certain term "for the half year preceding," during which no crop had been sown or reaped, belonged to the heir or to the executor. The Lord President, after laying down the rule that rents which were due and exigible must go to the executor, whether forehand or not, goes on to say: "This rule would not have been applicable to an entailed estate if forehand rents were a novelty on that estate—if, for example, the last heir who died had introduced forehand rents, having found a different system in existence at his succession. That would have been taking undue advantage of the next heir of entail; but that is not the case here, for it is stated that forehand rents were the law of the estate. It was both the custom of the district and the rule had been adopted by the entailer and continued in all subsequent leases." The principle seems to me to be very clear, that while an absolute owner may choose between his heir and his executor, an heir of entail cannot in any way prejudice the succeeding heir's right.

Learmonth v. Sinclair's Trs., 1878, 5 R. 548, is, in my opinion, inapposite. It was held that an heir of entail was liable, by virtue of a custom having the force of law, to pay the tenant the value of certain woodwork in houses erected by him. But the liability was not rested upon contract, but upon a general rule of law, applicable to all landlords, whether their lands were entailed or not, and whether they were heirs or singular successors. Lord Gifford treats it as a question of tenants' fixtures. He says, "Such woodwork, though fixed, remains in that district the tenant's property, and the landlord must pay for it as such—that is, whoever is landlord at the ish must pay for it if he retains it." Lord Justice-Clerk Moncreiff thought the question whether the obligation to pay transmitted against a succeeding heir of entail or against the executor of the original lessor did not arise, firstly, because in the particular case the deceased heir of entail never undertook any obligation whatever to the outgoing tenant in regard to the right of tenancy on which the claim was founded; and secondly, because the immemorial custom or usage in the county of Caithness, which the Court held to be effectual, operated not by implied paction or contract, but by law, and therefore, said his lordship, "is as good against the landlord, whether he be owner in fee simple or under an entail, as if a statute had been passed to that effect." The case is therefore no authority on the transmissibility of obligations between heirs of entail.

The third case relied on by the pursuer, Breadalbane v. Jamieson, 1877, 4 R. 667, in so far as it has any bearing, is only another illustration of the general principle. The Marquis of Breadalbane had pulled down the old house of Ardmaddy in order to build a new mansion house more suitable to the estate, and died before the new house was finished. It was held in an action at the instance of the next heir that his executors and his general estate were not liable to a pecuniary claim of an amount requisite to complete the mansion. It is true, as the Lord Ordinary observes, that this left the heir of entail under a disadvantage. But the ground on which it was found that he could not be relieved at the expense of the executors is perfectly consistent with the former decisions. To destroy or alienate the mansion house would have been a contravention of the prohibitions; but to pull it down in order to reconstruct it was a lawful exercise of the powers of a fiar who was not in that particular subject to any restriction. The deceased marquis had therefore done no wrong; and if he died before his purpose to rebuild had been carried out, the succeeding heir took the estate in a condition which had been brought about without any contravention. In those circumstances, the Lord President says there can be no implied obligation between the successive heirs, and no liability except what is created by the fetters of the entail. The only measure of their rights and liabilities is the deed of entail; and no pecuniary liability can be imposed either on a subsequent heir or on the general estate of his predecessor except what the deed of entail authorises. I may add to this discussion of the authorities that of the two recent cases between the Earl of Galloway and the Duke of Bedford (1902, 4 F. 851; 1904, 6 F. 971), to which the Lord Ordinary refers. The first is, in my judgment, entirely in accordance with the whole series of decisions from Dillon v. Campbell downwards. The second is, I think, distinguishable from Moncrieff v. Tod & Skene and the other cases in which liability has been fixed upon executors. But however that may be, it has no bearing on the question now to be decided.

If my view of the general rule of law is correct, its application to the particular contract before us is evident. The obligation which the pursuer seeks to enforce is that the tenant "shall deliver at the end of the lease to the landlord or incoming tenant, as far as possible, not more than the same number of sheep and the same classes as he receives on his entry, and the proprietor agrees that the second party"—i.e. the tenant—"or his representatives shall receive the same prices as he paid on his entry." The question is whether such a stipulation as that can be made good against the defender on the only ground which could enable the granter of the lease to create any liability as against the next heir of entail; to wit, that he was in his time the proprietor of the land, and free to deal with it, except in so far as he was restrained by the fetters. By a restricted construction of the fetters, he was enabled to grant a lease which might be valid as a real right. But that will not support an obligation which, although contained in a lease, cannot be made real. It appears to me impossible to make such an obligation as this a real burden upon land, consistently with the principles laid down in The Tailors of Aberdeen v. Coutts, 1840, 1 Rob. 296. But if it were possible it would involve a contravention, because it is a stipulation for the payment of money, or, in other words, it would affect the estate with debt, and therefore it would be made void and null by force of the irritant clause. But in its true character it is, in my opinion, a personal contract over and above the lease, and therefore it is ineffectual as against the defender, who does not represent the contracting owner. It is, as Lord Kyllachy points out in Panton v. Mackintosh, very much more onerous than the obligations for meliorations, which have over and over again been found to be ineffectual against heirs of entail. There would seem to be two ways, in one or other of which it must be performed. Either the heir must find a new tenant at whatever cost, ready to take over the sheep stock at the pursuer's price, or else he must pay the price and take the stock himself. In the first view, the heir in possession undertakes to regulate the terms of a lease to be granted by his successor after his own possession has come to an end, and that cannot be supported consistently with the decisions of the House of Lords in Kerr v. Redhead and in the Queensberry Leases. In the second view, it imposes upon the heir a contract to purchase a stock of sheep at a price which the pursuer alleges upon record is above their value; and that is just as inconsistent as the first alternative with the principles which have regulated such questions for more than a hundred years. For these reasons I agree entirely with the judgment of Lord Kyllachy in Panton v. Mackintosh, and I think we ought to follow his decision.

We ought not, however, to pass unnoticed the argument for the pursuer, that in equity his claim ought to be sustained. If he is right in his allegation that he has a good claim in law against the general estate of the lessor, I am unable to see any equity in imposing upon the defender a liability which does not properly attach to her, in order to relieve him of the inconvenience of suing his true debtor in another Court. But if it were assumed that the executors are not liable, the equity is by no means so obvious as in the cases with reference to meliorations, for in these cases the heir of entail had benefit from the expenditure on farms and buildings. The defender, on the other hand, does not take the sheep stock, for which she declines to pay. But the true answer is to be found in the opinion of Lord Thurlow in Kerr v. Redhead, and in accordance with that judgment we must hold that the tenant has no right in equity if he has no right in law.

The Lord President.—I agree entirely with the opinion which my brother Lord Kinnear has just delivered, and as he has gone into the matter so fully, I only intend to add a few words. The key to the solution of this question seems to me to consist in one or two well-known and old-established propositions. When you seek to enforce the personal contract of one man against another man, you must shew that that other man represents him. An heir of entail taking in succession to another heir of entail does not represent the prior heir of entail at all; he takes from the entailer. A lease in its origin is a personal contract, and accordingly a lease entered into by the proprietor of an estate, whether he was heir of entail or whether he was a person holding the estate in fee simple, would not be binding upon anyone who did not represent that man—and so of course it would not be binding against an ordinary purchaser or a singular successor—were it not for the old statute which made leases of a certain duration real rights. Accordingly, the efficacy of a lease against a person who does not represent the granter of the lease is always due to the fact of its being made a real right by statute, and not to the fact of its being a personal contract. Now, when yon come to deal with leases in the case of heirs of entail you of course come athwart the conditions of the entail itself. There is no doubt that a lease is an alienation of the estate, because in so far as it is a real right it is a giving away of the estate, no doubt temporarily, but still a giving it away for the time being to someone else. Accordingly if the matter had been treated strictissimi juris, there can, I think, be no doubt that no lease would have been good as against an heir of entail as being an alienation. It was held to be an alienation in the well-known set of cases which are known by the general name of the Queensberry Leases, but it was held at the same time that it was a necessity of the situation that a certain relaxation should be made, and the rule of relaxation that was made was that a lease should not be treated as an alienation where it was of such duration that it could be held to enure to the benefit, not of one heir of entail, but of the whole heirs of entail as a body. I think it is quite clear, when you come to a stipulation of the sort that we are dealing with here, that it will not fall within that exception; and I entirely agree with what Lord Kinnear said in the course of his opinion, that there arises a very necessary difference between the obligation upon an heir of entail where all that the heir of entail for the time being has to submit to is the taking away of his land for a temporary period under the condition of being paid therefor, and where the thing he has to submit to is, not the enforcement of a real right, but the payment of a sum of money. I agree with the doubt which his Lordship indicated, but which he passed over—namely, the doubt whether anything that is a payment of money of uncertain amount to be recovered as being a real right, can ever square with the well-known canon of rules which Lord Corehouse laid down in the Tailors of Aberdeen, 1837, 2 S. and M'L. 609. Accordingly I also agree with the conclusion which Lord Kinnear came to, that you will find, on looking at the sum total of the cases, that nothing has ever been enforced against an heir of entail except the mere giving up of land—nothing in the way of making him perform some other obligation which may mean more than the giving up of land.

I think this will become even more clear if one tests it for the moment by the remedy. Supposing that an heir of entail in possession, against whom an obligation of this kind was sought to be enforced, was entirely impecunious; how are you going to work it out by diligence? Of course, as far as ordinary possession upon a lease is concerned that is simple enough. All you have got to do, supposing the new landlord drove forth the tenant by force out of his farm, would be to interdict the heir of entail, and the tenant would be restored to the occupation of his farm. That is the protection which the Court would give. But supposing the heir of entail refuses to pay the sum which is the true value of the sheep and has no money, what is to be done? If you set to work by adjudication, which on the expiry of the legal might take away the estate altogether, that surely would be alienation with a vengeance. In other words, it would be a sort of alienation which certainly would not fall within the exception which was laid down by the House of Lords in the Queensberry Lease cases. If you did not proceed by adjudication, but proceeded by the other well-known diligence of poinding the ground, you would not get any more satisfactory result, because it is perfectly clear that the consequences of poinding the ground would fall entirely upon the back of one heir of entail in the succession of heirs taking the land, whereas the whole idea of the exception laid down in the Queensberry Leases is that the thing is for the benefit of the whole heirs of entail. Upon these grounds—and I have merely added a very few words to what was so well explained by Lord Kinnear—I am of opinion that the Lord Ordinary's judgment here cannot stand.

Lord M'Laren.—I cannot usefully add anything to the opinion which Lord Kinnear has delivered and in which I concur on all points. In listening to the opinion, one observation did occur to me, not altogether independent but rather supplementary, to what has been said, to the effect that however this claim is put—if it were clearly expressed as a real burden in the lease—it would amount to an alienation of the estate, and therefore to a contravention of the prohibitions in the entail. In the record the material clauses of the lease are set out, and in the clause in question the obligation is—"that the proprietor agrees that the second party or his representatives shall receive the same price for the sheep as he paid on entry." It is not said from whom he is to receive the money. The obligation may either mean that the granter of the lease binds himself and his heirs and executors to pay this price at the expiration of the lease, or it may mean that he proposes that his successor in the entail shall pay the price of the stock out of his private means, or it may mean that he would transmit this obligation, supposed to be for the benefit of the estate, as a real burden affecting the entailed estate. As to the first alternative I need say nothing, for the reasons expressed by the Lord Ordinary and Lord Kinnear, that neither the heir at law nor the personal representatives are parties to this action. As to the second alternative, the conclusion of the summons is just as ambiguous as the lease itself is in regard to the nature of the obligation or the persons affected by it. We are asked to make a declaratory finding that the obligation is binding on the defender as heiress of entail in possession of the said lands, and that may either mean that she is to pay the money out of other sources than the estate, or that she is in some way or other compelled to fulfil the obligation out of the estate. I agree with your Lordship that the real test, or a very convincing test, of the efficacy of the obligation is to bring it to the test of diligence. Supposing that the pursuer had taken the view that the heiress of entail was personally liable, and had concluded for payment of the same price, or value of the sheep stock, as he had himself paid to the tenant on his entry to the farm, if he had gone on to formulate a petitory conclusion for the payment of that sum of money, what would the answer of the defender be? She would say: "I am not confirmed in the personal estate, nor have I made up a title by service as heir in general; what I have done is to obtain service as heir of provision, which has the effect of establishing that I am the person pointed out in the destination as heir of entail, and entitles me to have an entry from the Crown or the superior as the case may be, which will put me in possession of this estate." There is nothing in such an entry that could possibly subject the defender to take over the debts of the previous heir in possession, and I do not suppose that such a proceeding was contemplated by the pursuer, because nothing was suggested in argument about it. What was really maintained to us was that in some way or other the obligation was one attaching to the estate and for the benefit of the estate, the fulfilment of which was therefore obligatory on the heirs of entail in their order. Supposing that the defender takes up a position of passive resistance, as she is quite entitled to do, then there is no other way of making the pursuer's theory effective and recovering the money out of the land than by adjudication of the entailed estate. If the adjudication had been brought in the lifetime of the granter of the obligation, could it for a moment be doubted that this would be a contravention of the prohibition against contracting debt whereby the estate should be evicted? Is it less so, when the proceeding is taken after his death with relation to the same subject and with the same result? I think when the case is looked at in this way the essential unsoundness of the argument becomes very evident, because it is then seen that what has been done or attempted is really a diminution of the capital value of the estate to all future heirs of entail, and therefore a contravention of the conditions of the entail. I do not add anything further, except that I agree that it is wholly unnecessary that there should be a proof in this case, because such a proof, in the view I take, could not possibly affect our decision. Subject to anything that may be said as to the form of the judgment, I think we must reverse the decision of the Lord Ordinary upon the main question, but of course I agree that we should adhere as to the conclusions involving the liability of the personal representatives.—20*th February* 1908.

SHERIFF COURT.

(Sheriff-Substitute Glegg, at Airdrie.)

414. M'Quade v. The Summerlee and Mossend Iron and Steel Company Limited.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT 1906 (6 EDW. 7, CAP. 58), SECT. 1 (3); SECOND SCHEDULE, SECTS. (1), (2) AND 17 (B)—ACT OF SEDERUNT 26TH JUNE 1907, SECTS. 1 (B), 2, 3 AND 4—SHERIFF COURTS (SCOTLAND) ACT 1907 (7 EDW. 7, CAP. 51), SECTS. 3 (D) AND (P), 50 AND 52, AND FIRST SCHEDULE, RULES 1 AND 4 (A) AND FORM A—SHERIFF COURTS (SCOTLAND)

Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. cap. 70), sect. 52, and Schedule A—Form of Initiating Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906—Held That it is Incompetent to Commence Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 by "Initial Writ" in Form A Provided by the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act 1907.

This was a petition under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1906, brought by the pursuer against the defender, on the ground that he, while in their employment as a miner, sustained injuries in respect of which he was entitled to compensation. The proceedings were commenced by the presentation to the Sheriff as arbitrator under the Act of a petition in the form of the "initial writ" provided for by the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act 1907, and a warrant to cite the defenders was craved. The Sheriff-Substitute (Glegg), by interlocutor dated 17th March 1908, refused to grant the warrant to cite craved.

He added the following note:

The question is whether the form of application on which a deliverance is sought is authorised by the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act of 1907. To determine this the nature of the application must be considered.

The Workmen's Compensation Act 1906 provides sect. 1 (3) that "if any question arises in any proceedings under this Act as to the liability to pay compensation under this Act the question shall be settled by arbitration, in accordance with the Second Schedule to this Act." The Second Schedule, by paragraphs (1) and (2), provides, "any matter which under this Act is to be settled by arbitration shall be settled by the judge of the County Court, according to the procedure prescribed by rules of Court." Paragraph 17 (b) provides that any application to the Sheriff as arbitrator shall be heard, tried and determined summarily in the manner provided by sect. 52 of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act 1876, save only that parties may be represented by any person authorised in writing to appear for them. Said sect. 52 directs that the application may be in one of the forms as nearly as may be contained in Schedule A, and that the Sheriff shall appoint the application to be served and the parties to be heard, etc. The form referred to requires a condescendence stating articulately the grounds of action, and pleas in law stated articulately. These requirements appear to be peremptory, the latitude allowed applying to the conclusions.

The Act of Sederunt of 26th June 1907, sect. 1 (b), provides that any party to an arbitration may be represented by a member of his family or any other person. Sect. 2 provides that an application for the settlement by arbitration of any claim for compensation shall not be made unless some question has arisen between the parties, and "the application shall state concisely the question which has arisen." The next section requires the applicant to state in his application all the dependants, including those claiming to rank as dependants. Sect. 4 provides for applications being made to the Sheriff Court of a district where the accident happened, and otherwise where the Sheriff has not jurisdiction, while the following section, following apparently on paragraph (6) of the First Schedule to the Act, provides for the transfer of application and money to Courts in England and Ireland.

It appears from the above, without quoting more fully from the Act, that an application for settlement by arbitration though made to a Sheriff is not an application to him as Sheriff. He does not exercise his ordinary jurisdiction either as to parties or as to subject-matter. The Act might have nominated as arbitrator any one whose commission required him to undertake the duty. What the parties get under the Act are an arbitrator and arbitrator's clerk, who must act, and act gratuitously. But the proceedings do not cease to be an arbitration because the Sheriff is arbitrator, and he acts as an arbitrator, and not as Sheriff. He cannot, for instance, give decree by default or on account of absence of one of the parties. This has been clearly established by the case of the United Collieries Ltd. v. Gavin, 1899, 2 F. 60.

The applicant maintains that the form of his application is authorised, indeed imposed, by the Sheriff Court Act of 1907. That his application contains what is required by Form A of the First Schedule to that Act seems correct, and that it omits matter required by the Act of 1876 and the Act of Sederunt of 1907 is obvious. He must accordingly shew that these provisions have been superseded by the recent Act.

Form A of the Sheriff Courts Act of 1907 is introduced by Rule 1 of the First Schedule, which says: "All actions shall be commenced by writ as nearly as may be in the Form A hereto annexed." The term action is defined in sect. 3 (d) of that Act, which is "action includes every civil proceeding competent in the ordinary Sheriff Court." From what has been said above it seems clear that this arbitration is not a civil proceeding competent in the ordinary Sheriff Court, but is a proceeding in a special statutory tribunal. Consequently it is not expressly included by the terms of this definition. Nor does it seem to be included otherwise. It is not an action in the ordinary sense of the word, but an arbitration, both in name and in fact. See The United Collieries Ltd. v. Gavin, 1899, 2 F. 60, and particularly the Lord President's opinion, p. 65.

Nor does the present application come under said rule (1) in virtue of being a "summary application." Rule (1) does not apply to summary applications unless they are actions. Further, this does not seem to be a summary application in the sense of the Act, which defines these in sect. 3 (p). It is plainly not brought under the common law jurisdiction of the Sheriff, nor does it appear to be an application brought under an "Act of Parliament which provides that the same shall be disposed of in a summary manner, but which does not more particularly define in what form the same shall be heard, tried and determined." The Workmen's Compensation Act does provide a form, namely, that in Schedule A of the Sheriff Court Act of 1876, amplified by sects. 2 and 3 of the Act of Sederunt of 1907. If "form" in said sect. 3 (p) includes form of application, then a form is clearly provided; if it does not, but refers only to subsequent hearing, trying and determining, the Workmen's Compensation Act seems to define these "more particularly" than by being "in a summary manner," since it directs that the proceedings are to be by way of arbitration.

Sheriff Court.

M'Quade v. The Summerlee and Mossend Iron and Steel Co. Ltd.

Sect. 50 of the Sheriff Court Act of 1907 does not assist the applicant's case. In the first place it is under the heading (not rubric) Summary Applications, and these are those defined by the same Act, and already dealt with. In the next place, it says that when any Act of Parliament invokes sect. 52 of the Sheriff Courts Act of 1876, such direction shall be read as if it referred to "this section of this Act." All that this section of this Act provides is that where a hearing is necessary, "the Sheriff shall appoint the application to be heard at a diet to be fixed by him, and at that or any subsequent diet (without record of the evidence unless the Sheriff shall order a record) shall summarily dispose of the matter and give his judgment in writing." This all refers to things to be done after an application has been presented, and does not deal with the form of the writ of application. It re-enacts, with differences immaterial here, the enactment of sect. 52 of the Act of 1876 as to an oral hearing, but contains no direction as to the form of writ. If it had also referred to "Rule 1 of this Act" the question would be different, but the limited reference to "this section" excludes the importing of Rule 1.

The next provision of the Sheriff Court Act of 1907 which requires notice is peculiar. It is Rule 4 (a). It says that in summary applications, "and in cases under the Workmen's Compensation Act," the warrant of citation shall be as nearly as may be in Form B annexed. This seems to recognise the distinction between summary applications and applications (called cases) under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and so far is free from difficulty, but if the warrant is considered the matter is puzzling. It seems strange that the only mention of the Workmen's Compensation Act should be with regard to service. The natural implication is that applications under that Act are also dealt with in this Act, and the applicant's contention receives its chief support from this reference. That inference is not strong enough, however, to extend the construction of the sections dealt with, and the provision must be held to be simply a direction as to service. Another difficulty arises here, for the warrant of citation ends with the expression "under certification of being held as confessed." The practice hitherto has always been to appoint parties to be heard, and if the defender does not appear, to order and take a proof. To hold a party as confessed at a first diet seems to be as inconsonant with the directions of the Workmen's Compensation Act as to hold him confessed at any other, and this phrase should therefore be omitted from the warrant, in exercise of the power contained in the proviso "as nearly as may be." If that omission is made the warrant is practically in the old form, and there is no reason for introducing workmen's compensation applications in this connection. The Act contains a specific direction on this point, however, and must be given effect to. There is no difficulty in framing an appropriate deliverance, but this does not solve the question what kind of writ is entitled to it.

The last section of the Sheriff Courts Act 1907 which requires to be noticed is sect. 52, which repeals sect. 52 of the 1876 Act, "and all laws, statutes, Acts of Sederunt, orders and usages now in force so far as the same are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act." This, of course, does not repeal a reference to a provision of the 1876 Act which is not re-enacted or altered or for which some other provision is not substituted. And this is the position of the direction as to the form of application, for no other form than that of the 1876 Act is provided. But another answer is that there is no inconsistency if the present Sheriff Court Act does not apply. If it does not deal with applications under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and is not suitable for proceedings thereunder, there is no inconsistency in treating these under the suitable provisions already existing, and no necessity to hold those provisions as repealed by construction.

It is necessary to point out that the question is not merely technical but is of some materiality. Under the present procedure the arbitrator is informed at once of the question or questions in dispute, and immediate progress is made. If a writ in the form of the First Schedule of the Sheriff Court Act of 1907 were permitted he has practically no information except the amount of the claim. It results that he must order a condescendence, which means delay, and also expense, both of which are to be avoided always, and particularly in this class of proceedings. However suitable Form A may be for an ordinary petitory action to which no defence is anticipated, it is not suitable to an application for arbitration on a question which has already been raised and on which there has been a failure to agree.—17*th March* 1908.

THE PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES AFFECTING SCOTLAND, 1907,

PASSED IN THE SEVENTH YEAR

OF THE REIGN OF HIS MAJESTY

KING EDWARD THE SEVENTH,

TOGETHER WITH THE TITLES OF ALL THE PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES PASSED DURING THE SAID YEAR.

CHAPTER I.

An Act to apply certain sums out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the years ending on the thirty-first day of March one thousand nine hundred and seven and one thousand nine hundred and eight. [22*nd March* 1907.]

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled, towards making good the supply which we have cheerfully granted to Your Majesty in this session of Parliament, have resolved to grant unto Your Majesty the sums hereinafter mentioned; and do therefore most humbly beseech Your Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. ISSUE OF £71,715 OUT OF THE CONSOLIDATED FUND FOR THE SERVICE OF THE YEAR ENDING 31ST MARCH 1907.—The Treasury may issue out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and apply towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty for the service of the year ending on the thirty-first day of March one thousand nine hundred and seven, the sum of seventy-one thousand seven hundred and fifteen pounds.

2. ISSUE OF £38,114,700 OUT OF THE CONSOLIDATED FUND FOR THE SERVICE OF THE YEAR ENDING 31ST MARCH 1908.—The Treasury may issue out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and apply towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty for the service of the year ending on the thirty-first day of March one thousand nine hundred and eight, the sum of thirty-eight million one hundred and fourteen thousand seven hundred pounds.

3. POWER FOR THE TREASURY TO BORROW.—(1) The Treasury may borrow from any person, by the issue of Treasury Bills or otherwise, and the Bank of England and the Bank of Ireland may advance to the Treasury on the credit of the said sums, any sum or sums not exceeding in the whole thirty-eight million one hundred and eighty-six thousand four hundred and fifteen pounds.

(2) The date of payment of any Treasury Bills issued under this section shall be a date not later than the thirty-first day of March nineteen hundred and eight, and section six of the Treasury Bills Act, 1877 (40 and 41 Vict. c. 2) (which relates to the renewal of bills), shall not apply with respect to those bills.

(3) Any money borrowed otherwise than on Treasury Bills shall be repaid, with interest not exceeding five pounds per cent. per annum, out of the growing produce of the Consolidated Fund, at any period not later than the next succeeding quarter to that in which the money was borrowed.

(4) Any money borrowed under this section shall be placed to the credit of the account of the Exchequer, and shall form part of the said Consolidated Fund, and be available in any manner in which such Fund is available.

4. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Consolidated Fund (No. 1) Act, 1907.

CHAPTER II.

An Act to provide, during Twelve Months, for the Discipline and Regulation of the Army. [29*th April* 1907.]

Whereas the raising or keeping of a standing army within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in time of peace, unless it be with the consent of Parliament, is against law:

And whereas it is adjudged necessary by His Majesty and this present Parliament that a body of forces should be continued for the safety of the United Kingdom and the defence of the possessions of His Majesty's Crown, and that the whole number of such forces should consist of one hundred and ninety thousand including those to be employed at the depôts in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the training of recruits for service at home and abroad, but exclusive of the numbers actually serving within His Majesty's Indian possessions:

And whereas it is also judged necessary for the safety of the United Kingdom, and the defence of the possessions of this realm, that a body of Royal Marine forces should be employed in His Majesty's fleet and naval service, under the direction of the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral aforesaid:

And whereas the said marine forces may frequently be quartered or be on shore, or sent to do duty or be on board transport ships or vessels, merchant ships or vessels, or other ships or vessels, or they may be under other circumstances in which they will not be subject to the laws relating to the government of His Majesty's forces by sea:

And whereas no man can be forejudged of life or limb, or subjected in time of peace to any kind of punishment within this realm, by martial law, or in any other manner than by the judgment of his peers and according to the known and established laws of this realm; yet nevertheless, it being requisite, for the retaining all the before-mentioned forces, and other persons subject to military law, in their duty, that an exact discipline be observed, and that persons belonging to the said forces who mutiny or stir up sedition, or desert His Majesty's service, or are guilty of crimes and offences to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, be brought to a more exemplary and speedy punishment than the usual forms of the law will allow:

And whereas the Army Act 44 and 45 Vict. c. 58 will expire in the year one thousand nine hundred and seven on the following days:—

(a) In the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, on the thirtieth day of April; and

(b) Elsewhere in Europe, inclusive of Malta, also in the West Indies and America, on the thirty-first day of July; and

(c) Elsewhere, whether within or without His Majesty's dominions, on the thirty-first day of December:

Be it therefore enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the Army (Annual) Act, 1907.

2. ARMY ACT TO BE IN FORCE FOR SPECIFIED TIMES.—(1) The Army Act shall be and remain in force during the periods hereinafter mentioned, and no longer, unless otherwise provided by Parliament (that is to say):—

(a) Within the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, from the thirtieth day of April one thousand nine hundred and seven to the thirtieth day of April one thousand nine hundred and eight, both inclusive; and

(b) Elsewhere in Europe, inclusive of Malta, also in the West Indies and America, from the thirty-first day of July one thousand nine hundred and seven to the thirty-first day of July one thousand nine hundred and eight, both inclusive; and

(c) Elsewhere, whether within or without His Majesty's dominions, from the thirty-first day of December one thousand nine hundred and seven to the thirty-first day of July one thousand nine hundred and eight, both inclusive.

(2) The Army Act, while in force, shall apply to persons subject to military law, whether within or without His Majesty's dominions.

(3) A person subject to military law shall not be exempted from the provisions of the Army Act by reason only that the number of the forces for the time being in the service of His Majesty, exclusive of the marine forces, is either greater or less than the number hereinbefore mentioned.

3. PRICES IN RESPECT OF BILLETING.—There shall be paid to the keeper of a victualling house for the accommodation provided by him in pursuance of the Army Act the prices specified in the First Schedule to this Act.

AMENDMENTS OF ARMY ACT.

4. AMENDMENT OF ARMY ACT AS TO COMPLAINT BY A SOLDIER.—In section forty-three of the Army Act (which deals with the mode of complaint by a soldier), after the words "to the prescribed general officer" there shall be inserted the words "or in the case of a soldier serving in India to such officer as the Commander-in-Chief of the forces in India with the approval of the Governor-General of India in Council may appoint."

5. AMENDMENT OF ARMY ACT AS TO TAKING OF EVIDENCE BEFORE A COMMANDING OFFICER.—In subsection (6) of section forty-six of the Army Act (which enables the accused person to demand that the evidence taken against him before the commanding officer shall be taken on oath), for the words "where the power of summary award by a commanding officer exceeds a sentence of seven days' detention" there shall be substituted the words "where the commanding officer has power to deal with the case summarily."

6. AMENDMENT OF ARMY ACT AS TO RULES RELATING TO MILITARY PRISONS AND PRISONERS.—In subsection (2) of section one hundred and thirty-three of the Army Act (which relates to the power of a Secretary of State to make rules with respect to military prisons and prisoners), for the words "military prisoners" there shall be substituted the words "military or other prisoners."

7. AMENDMENT OF ARMY ACT AS TO SENTENCES ON OFFICERS OF INDIAN STAFF CORPS.—Paragraph (e) of subsection (2) of section one hundred and eighty of the Army Act (which relates to sentences on officers of the Indian Staff Corps) shall be repealed.

8. AMENDMENT OF ARMY ACT AS TO BILLETING.—For paragraph (2) of Part I. of the Second Schedule to the Army Act (which relates to billeting) there shall be substituted the paragraph set forth in the Second Schedule to this Act, and in the third paragraph of the said part of the said Schedule to the Army Act for the words "a hot meal" there shall be substituted the words "a meal."

9. ADAPTATION OF PROVISION OF ARMY ACT TO PUNISHMENT OF DETENTION.—(1) For the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of the Army (Annual) Act, 1906, relating to the punishment of detention, the modifications set out in the Third Schedule to this Act shall be made in the Army Act.

(2) Section 135A of the Army Act is hereby repealed.

10. PROVISIONS AS TO PUNISHMENTS ON ACTIVE SERVICE.—In the provisions of the Army Act relating to punishments on active service, the following amendments shall be made:—

(1) In section forty-four (which relates to the scale of punishments by courts-martial)—

(a) There shall be substituted for proviso (5) the following proviso:

"(5) Where a soldier on active service is guilty of any offence it shall be lawful for a court-martial to award for that offence such field punishment other than flogging as may be directed by rules to be made from time to time by a Secretary of State, and such field punishment shall be of the character of personal restraint or of hard labour, but shall not be of a nature to cause injury to life or limb";

(b) The words "field punishment" shall be substituted for the words "summary punishment" wherever those words occur in provisos (9) and (10);

(c) Provisos (6), (7), and (8) shall be repealed;

(d) The following proviso shall be added as a new proviso after proviso (5):—

"(6) In addition to or without any other punishment in respect of an offence committed by a soldier on active service, it shall be lawful for a court-martial to order that the offender forfeit all ordinary pay for a period commencing on the day of the sentence and not exceeding three months."

(2) In section forty-six (which relates to the powers of commanding officers)—

(a) At the end of subsection (2) there shall be added the following paragraph:—

"and

"(d) In the case of an offence by a soldier (not being a non-commissioned officer) on active service, may award to the offender field punishment within the meaning of section forty-four of this Act for any period not exceeding twenty-eight days, and may in addition to or without any other punishment order that the offender forfeit all ordinary pay for a period commencing on the day of the sentence and not exceeding twenty-eight days";

(b) In subsection (3) the words "not on duty, and it is not an aggravated offence of drunkenness within the meaning of section forty-four of this Act" shall be repealed, and after the word "unless" there shall be added the words "the offence was committed on active service or on duty, or after the offender was warned for duty, or unless by reason of the drunkenness the offender was found unfit for duty, or unless."

(3) In paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of section forty-nine (which relates to field general courts-martial) the words "field punishment" shall be substituted for the words "summary punishment."

(4) At the end of section seventy-four (which relates to provost marshals) the following proviso shall be added:—

"Provided that a provost marshal and his assistants shall, as respects any soldier in his or their custody and undergoing field punishment, have the same powers as the governor of a military prison."

(5) At the end of section one hundred and thirty-three (which relates to the establishment and regulation of military prisons) there shall be added as a new subsection:—

"(7) In any country in which operations against the enemy are being conducted the powers of a Secretary of State under this section with respect to military prisons and detention barracks shall be exerciseable by the officer commanding-in-chief in the field, and shall include a power of declaring any place to be a military prison or a detention barrack, and the limitations on the power of making rules as to the punishment of prisoners and soldiers undergoing detention and as to the severity of imprisonment and detention shall not apply: Provided that nothing in this subsection, or in any rules made thereunder, shall authorise flogging or other corporal punishment to be inflicted for any offence."

(6) In section one hundred and thirty-eight (which relates to penal stoppages from ordinary pay of soldiers)—

(a) In paragraph (1), after the word "detention," in both places where it occurs, there shall be inserted the words "or field punishment";

(b) At the end the following proviso shall be added:—

"and

"(c) where a soldier who is sentenced or ordered in respect of an offence on active service to forfeit all ordinary pay is liable to any other penal deductions from pay, the sentence or order shall apply only to so much of his ordinary pay as remains after those other deductions have been made."

(7) In section one hundred and eighty-three of the Army Act (which contains special provisions as to non-commissioned officers)—

(a) In paragraph (2) after the words "may appoint," there shall be inserted the words, "and on active service the officer commanding-in-chief in the field and any general officer he may appoint";

(b) In paragraph (4) after the words "penal servitude" there shall be inserted the words "field punishment."

"(4) A military prisoner while in a public prison shall be confined, kept to hard "labour, and otherwise dealt with in the like manner as an ordinary prisoner under a like "sentence of imprisonment; and, where the hospital or place for the reception of sick "persons in a public prison or a detention barrack is detached from the prison or detention "barrack, a military prisoner or a soldier undergoing detention may be detained in that "hospital or place, and conveyed to or from the same as circumstances require.

"(5) A military prisoner or a soldier undergoing detention, during his conveyance "from place to place, or when on board ship or otherwise, may be subjected to such "restraint as is necessary for his safe custody and removal.

"(6) The discharging authority hereafter mentioned may, at any time during the "period of the imprisonment of a military prisoner, or of the detention of a soldier under-"going detention, by order discharge the prisoner or soldier.

"(7) The committing authority or any other prescribed authority may at any time "by order remove a military prisoner from one public prison or detention barrack "to another prison or detention barrack, or a soldier undergoing detention from one "detention barrack to another, so that he be not removed from a prison or detention "barrack in the United Kingdom to a prison or detention barrack elsewhere.

"(8) The removing authority hereafter mentioned may, at any time during the "period of the imprisonment of a military prisoner or of the detention of a soldier under-"going detention, from time to time by order provide for his being brought before a "court-martial, or any civil court, either as a witness, or for trial or otherwise; and an "order of such authority shall be a sufficient warrant for delivering him into military "custody and detaining him in custody until he can be returned, and for returning him to "the place from whence he is brought, or to such other place as may be determined by "the removing authority."

CHAPTER III.

An Act to repeal the Law which prohibits the Growing of Tobacco in Ireland.

[4th July 1907.]

CHAPTER IV.

An Act to extend the Destructive Insects Act, 1877, to all Pests Destructive to Crops, Trees, or Bushes. [4th July 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Extension of 40 and 41 Vict. c. 68 to all Pests.—(1) The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries may, for the purpose of preventing the introduction into Great Britain of any insect, fungus, or other pest destructive to agricultural or horticultural crops or to trees or bushes, and for preventing the spreading in Great Britain of any such insect, fungus, or other pest, exercise all such powers as may be exercised by the Board in relation to the Colorado beetle under the Destructive Insects Act, 1877; and that Act shall apply accordingly as if in that Act the expression "insect" included all such insects, fungi, and other pests, and the expression "crop" included all such crops, trees, and bushes:

Provided that the Board shall not make an order directing the payment of compensation by any local authority for the removal or destruction of any crop or any trees or bushes unless the local authority consent to make the payment.

(2) Section one of the Rules Publication Act, 1893 (56 and 57 Vict. c. 66), shall not apply to any order made under the Destructive Insects Act, 1877, or this Act.

(3) This Act shall apply to Ireland as if Ireland were named therein instead of Great Britain, and with the substitution of the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland for the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries.

2. This Act may be cited as the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1907, and the Destructive Insects Act, 1877; and this Act may be cited together as the Destructive Insects and Pests Acts, 1877 and 1907.

CHAPTER V.

An Act to re-enact with amendments the Injured Animals Act, 1894. [26th July 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Slaughter of Injured Animals by or by Order of Police.—(1) If a police constable finds any animal so diseased or so severely injured or in such a physical condition that it cannot without cruelty be removed, he shall, if the owner is absent or refuses to consent to the destruction of the animal, at once summon a duly registered veterinary surgeon, if any such veterinary surgeon resides within a reasonable distance; and if it appears by the certificate of such veterinary surgeon that the animal is mortally injured or so severely injured or so diseased or in such a physical condition that it is cruel to keep it alive, it shall be lawful for the police constable, without the consent of the owner, to slaughter the animal or cause it to be slaughtered with such instruments or appliances, and with such precautions, and in such manner, as to inflict as little pain and suffering as practicable; and if the slaughter takes place in a street or public place, to remove the carcase or cause it to be removed therefrom.

(2) Any reasonable expense which may be incurred by any constable in carrying out the provisions of this Act may be recovered from the owner summarily as a civil debt, and, subject thereto, any such expense shall be defrayed out of the fund from which the expenses of the police are payable in the area in which the animal is found.

2. DEFINITION OF ANIMAL.—For the purposes of this Act the word "animal" means any horse, mule, ass, bull, cow, ox, heifer, calf, sheep, goat, or swine.

3. SHORT TITLE AND REPEAL.—(1) This Act may be cited for all purposes as the Injured Animals Act, 1907.

(2) The Injured Animals Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. c. 22), is hereby repealed.

CHAPTER VI.

An Act to provide for raising further Money for the purpose of the Telegraph Acts, 1863 to 1906. [2*nd August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. GRANT OF £6,000,000 FOR THE PURPOSE OF THE TELEGRAPH ACTS.—(1) The Treasury may, with a view to the development of that part of the telegraphic system of the United Kingdom which is called the telephonic system, without prejudice to the exercise of any powers previously given for the like purpose, issue out of the Consolidated Fund, or the growing produce thereof, such sums, not exceeding in the whole the sum of six million pounds, as may be required by the Postmaster-General for the purpose of developing the telephonic system aforesaid according to estimates approved by the Treasury.

(2) The Treasury may, if they think fit, with a view to provide money for sums so authorised to be issued out of the Consolidated Fund, or for repaying to that fund all or any part of the sums so issued, borrow by means of terminable annuities for a term not exceeding twenty years, and all sums so borrowed shall be paid into the Exchequer.

(3) The said annuities shall be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament for the service of the Post Office, and, if those moneys are insufficient, shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom or the growing produce thereof at such times in each year as may be fixed by the Treasury.

2. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the Telegraph (Money) Act, 1907, and may be cited with the Telegraph Acts, 1863 to 1906.

CHAPTER VII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Reservation for His Majesty's pleasure of Bills passed by the Legislatures of the States forming part of the Commonwealth of Australia, and to confirm certain Acts passed by those Legislatures. [2*nd August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. RESERVATION OF BILLS.—(1) There shall be reserved, for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure thereon, every Bill passed by the Legislature of any State forming part of the Commonwealth of Australia which—

(a) alters the constitution of the Legislature of the State or of either House thereof; or

(b) affects the salary of the Governor of the State; or

(c) is, under any Act of the Legislature of the State passed after the passing of this Act, or under any provision contained in the Bill itself, required to be reserved;

but, save as aforesaid, it shall not be necessary to so reserve any Bill passed by any such Legislature:

Provided that—

(a) nothing in this Act shall affect the reservation of Bills in accordance with any instructions given to the Governor of the State by His Majesty; and

(b) it shall not be necessary to reserve a Bill for a temporary law which the Governor expressly declares necessary to be assented to forthwith by reason of some public and pressing emergency; and

(c) it shall not be necessary to reserve any Bill if the Governor declares that he withholds His Majesty's assent, or if he has previously received instructions from His Majesty to assent and does assent accordingly to the Bill.

(2) For the purposes of this section a Bill shall not be treated as a Bill altering the constitution of the Legislature of a State or of either House thereof by reason only that the Bill—

(a) creates, alters, or affects any province, district, or town, or division of a province, district, or town, which returns one or more members to either House of the Legislature; or

(b) fixes or alters the number of members to be elected for any such province, district, or town, or division of a province, district, or town; or

(c) increases or decreases the total number of elective members of either House of the Legislature; or

(d) concerns the election of the elective members of the Legislature, or either House thereof, or the qualifications of electors or elective members.

(3) Section thirty-three of the Australian Constitutions Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. c. 76), shall apply to Bills reserved under this Act in like manner as it applies to Bills reserved under that Act with the substitution of references to a State forming part of the Commonwealth of Australia for references to the colony of New South Wales, and of references to both Houses of the Legislature of the State for references to the Legislative Council.

(4) So much of any Act of Parliament or Order in Council as requires any Bill passed by the Legislature of any such State to be reserved for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure thereon, or to be laid before the Houses of Parliament before His Majesty's pleasure is signified, and, in particular, the enactments mentioned in the Schedule to this Act, to the extent specified in the third column of that Schedule, shall be repealed both as originally enacted and as incorporated in or applied by any other Act of Parliament or any Order in Council or letters patent.

2. CONFIRMATION OF CERTAIN AUSTRALIAN ACTS.—(1) Any Act passed by the Legislature of any such State, and assented to in the name of His Majesty by the Governor and not disallowed by His Majesty before the passing of this Act, shall, notwithstanding that the Bill for the Act ought to have been but was not reserved for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure thereon, and notwithstanding that it ought to have been but was not duly laid before both Houses of Parliament, be deemed to be and to have been as from the date of that assent as valid as if the Bill had been so reserved and as if it had been laid before both Houses of Parliament, and as if His Majesty's assent to the Bill had been duly given and signified in the State at the date aforesaid.

(2) For the purposes of this section references to Acts passed by the Legislature of a State shall be construed as including references to Acts passed before the establishment of the Commonwealth of Australia by the Legislature of any colony which now forms part of that Commonwealth, and references to His Majesty shall be construed as including references to Her late Majesty.

3. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the Australian States Constitution Act, 1907.

CHAPTER VIII.

An Act to exempt from Assay Foreign Watch-Cases imported into the United Kingdom before the first day of June nineteen hundred and seven. [2nd August 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. FOREIGN WATCH-CASES IMPORTED BEFORE CERTAIN DATE EXEMPT FROM ASSAY.—(1) All watch-cases imported from foreign parts into the United Kingdom at any time before the first day of June nineteen hundred and seven shall be exempted from assay in the United Kingdom, and shall accordingly not be subject to the provisions of section fifty-nine of the Customs Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. c. 47), or section ten of the Revenue Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. c. 55); but, if on any proceedings a question arises whether any watch-case is exempted from assay under the provisions of this Act, it shall lie on the person alleging that the watch-case is exempted to prove that it is so exempted.

(2) Where any watch-case to which this Act applies is exported from and subsequently reimported into the United Kingdom, the exemption from assay conferred by this Act shall not be allowed unless the watch-case is identified in the prescribed manner at the prescribed assay office as a watch-case to which such exemption attaches.

In this provision "prescribed" means prescribed by regulations made for the purpose by the Commissioners of Customs, and the regulations so made may provide for the removal of any watch-case in respect of which exemption is claimed to the prescribed assay office and for the payment of fees.

2. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the Assay of Imported Watch-Cases (Existing Stocks Exemption) Act, 1907.

An Act to provide for the reorganisation of His Majesty's military forces, and for that purpose to authorise the establishment of County Associations, and the raising and maintenance of a Territorial Force, and for amending the Acts relating to the Reserve Forces. [2*nd August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

PART I.

COUNTY ASSOCIATIONS.

1. ESTABLISHMENT OF ASSOCIATIONS.—(1) For the purposes of the reorganisation under this Act of His Majesty's military forces other than the regulars and their reserves, and of the administration of those forces when so reorganised, and for such other purposes as are mentioned in this Act, an association may be established for any county in the United Kingdom, with such powers and duties in connection with the purposes aforesaid as may be conferred on it by or under this Act.

(2) Associations shall be constituted, and the members thereof shall be appointed and hold office in accordance with schemes to be made by the Army Council.

(3) Every such scheme shall provide—

(a) For the date of the establishment of the association:

(b) For the incorporation of the association by an appropriate name, with power to hold land for the purposes of this Act without licence in mortmain:

(c) For constituting the lieutenant of the county, or failing him such other person as the Army Council may think fit, president of the association:

(d) For the appointment of such number of officers representative of all arms and branches of the Territorial Force raised under this Act within the county (not being less than one half of the whole number of the association) as may be specified in the scheme:

(e) For the appointment by the Army Council, where it appears desirable, and after consultation with, and on the recommendation of, the authorities to be represented, of representatives of county and county borough councils and universities wholly or partly within the county:

(f) For the appointment of such number of co-opted members as the scheme may prescribe, including, if thought desirable, representatives of the interests of employers and workmen:

(g) For the appointment by the Army Council during the first three years after the passing of this Act, and subsequently for the election of a chairman and vice-chairman by the association, and for defining their powers and duties:

(h) For the mode of appointment, term of office, and rotation of members of the association, and the filling of casual vacancies:

(i) For the appointment by the association, subject to the approval of the Army Council, of a secretary and other officers of the association, and the accountability of such officers, and for the provision of offices:

(j) For the procedure to be adopted, including the appointment of committees and the delegation to committees of any of the powers or duties of the association:

(k) For enabling such general officers of any part of His Majesty's forces, and not being members of the association, as may be specified in the scheme, or officers deputed by them, to attend the meetings of the association and to speak, but not to vote:

(l) For dividing the county, where on account of its size or population it seems desirable to do so, into two or more parts, and for constituting sub-associations for the several parts, and for apportioning amongst the several sub-associations all or any of the powers and duties of the association, and regulating the relations of sub-associations to the association and to one another.

(4) A scheme may contain any consequential, supplemental, or transitory provisions which may appear to be necessary or proper for the purposes of the scheme, and also as respects any matter for which provision may be made by regulations under this Act and for which it appears desirable to make special provision affecting the association established by the scheme.

(5) All schemes made in pursuance of this Part of this Act shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

(6) Until an Order in Council has been made under this Act for transferring to the Territorial Force the units of the Yeomanry and Volunteers of any county, references in this section to the Territorial Force shall as respects that county be construed as including references to the Yeomanry and Volunteers.

2. Powers and Duties of Associations.—(1) It shall be the duty of an association when constituted to make itself acquainted with and conform to the plan of the Army Council for the organisation of the Territorial Force within the county, and to ascertain the military resources and capabilities of the county, and to render advice and assistance to the Army Council and to such officers as the Army Council may direct; and an association shall have, exercise, and discharge such powers and duties connected with the organisation and administration of His Majesty's military forces as may for the time being be transferred or assigned to it by order of His Majesty signified under the hand of a Secretary of State or, subject thereto, by regulations under this Act, but an association shall not have any powers of command or training over any part of His Majesty's military forces.

(2) The powers and duties so transferred or assigned may include any powers conferred on or vested in His Majesty, and any powers or duties conferred or imposed on the Army Council or a Secretary of State, by statute or otherwise, and in particular respecting the following matters:—

(a) The organisation of the units of the Territorial Force and their administration (including maintenance) at all times other than when they are called out for training or actual military service, or when embodied:

(b) The recruiting for the Territorial Force both in peace and in war, and defining the limits of recruiting areas:

(c) The provision and maintenance of rifle ranges, buildings, magazines, and sites of camps for the Territorial Force:

(d) Facilitating the provision of areas to be used for manœuvres:

(e) Arranging with employers of labour as to holidays for training, and ascertaining the times of training best suited to the circumstances of civil life:

(f) Establishing or assisting cadet battalions and corps and also rifle clubs, provided that no financial assistance out of money voted by Parliament shall be given by an association in respect of any person in a battalion or corps in a school in receipt of a parliamentary grant until such person has attained the age of sixteen:

(g) The provision of horses for the peace requirements of the Territorial Force:

(h) Providing accommodation for the safe custody of arms and equipment:

(i) The supply of the requirements on mobilisation of the units of the Territorial Force within the county, in so far as those requirements are directed by the Army Council to be met locally, such requirements where practicable to be embodied in regulations which shall be issued to county associations from time to time, and on the first occasion not later than the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and nine:

(j) The payment of separation and other allowances to the families of men of the Territorial Force when embodied or called out on actual military service:

(k) The registration in conjunction with the military authorities of horses for any of His Majesty's forces:

(l) The care of reservists and discharged soldiers.

3. Expenses of Association.—(1) The Army Council shall pay to an association, out of money voted by Parliament for army services, such sums as, in the opinion of the Army Council, are required to meet the necessary expenditure connected with the exercise and discharge by the association of its powers and duties.

(2) An association shall submit to the Army Council annually, at the prescribed time, and may submit at any other time for any special purpose, in the prescribed form and manner, a statement of its necessary requirements, and all payments to an association by the Army Council shall be made upon the basis of such statements in so far as they are approved by the Army Council.

(3) Subject to regulations under this Act, all money so paid to an association shall be applicable to any of the purposes specified in the approved statements in accordance with which the money has been granted, but not otherwise except with the written consent of the Army Council:

Provided that nothing in this section shall be construed as enabling the Army Council to give their consent to the application of money to any purpose to which, apart from this section, it could not lawfully be applied, or to give their consent, without the authority of the Treasury, in any case in which, apart from this section, the authority of the Treasury would be required.

(4) All other money received by an association (except such money, if any, as may be received by it for specified purposes) shall be available for the purposes of any of its powers and duties.

(5) An association shall cause its accounts to be made up annually and audited in such manner as may be prescribed, and shall send copies of its accounts as audited, together with any report of the auditors thereon, to the Army Council.

(6) Regulations made for the purposes of this section shall be subject to the consent of the Treasury.

(7) The members of an association shall not be under any pecuniary liability for any act done by them in their capacity as members of such association in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

4. Regulations.—(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Army Council may make regulations for carrying this Part of this Act into effect, and may by those regulations, amongst other things, provide for the following matters:—

(a) For regulating the manner in which powers are to be exercised and duties performed by associations, and for specifying the services to which money paid by the Army Council is to be applicable:

(b) For authorising and regulating the acquisition by or on behalf of an association of land for the purposes of this Act and the disposal of any land so acquired:

(c) For authorising and regulating the borrowing of money by an association:

(d) For authorising the acceptance of any money or other property, and the taking over of any liability, by an association, and for regulating the administration of any money or property so acquired and the discharge of any liability so taken over :

(e) For facilitating the co-operation of an association with any other association, or with any local authority or other body, and for providing by the constitution of joint committees or otherwise for co-operative action in the organisation and administration of divisions, brigades, and other military bodies, and for the provision of assistance by one association to another :

(f) For affiliating cadet corps and battalions, rifle clubs, and other bodies to the Territorial Force or any part thereof :

(g) For or in respect of anything by this Part of this Act directed or authorised to be done or provided by regulations or to be done in the prescribed manner :

(h) For the application for the purposes of this Part of this Act, as respects any matters to be dealt with by regulations, of any provision in any Act of Parliament dealing with the like matters, with the necessary modifications or adaptations, and in particular of any provisions as to the acquisition of land by or on behalf of volunteer corps.

(2) All regulations made in pursuance of this Part of this Act shall be applicable to all associations, except in so far as may be otherwise provided by the regulations or by any scheme made under this Part of this Act.

(3) All regulations made under this Part of this Act shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as may be after they are made.

5. Joint Committees of Associations.—(1) Any county associations may from time to time join in appointing out of their respective bodies a joint committee for any purpose in respect of which they are jointly interested.

(2) Any association appointing a joint committee under this subsection may delegate to it any power which such association might exercise for the purpose for which the committee is appointed.

(3) Subject to the terms of delegation any such joint committee shall in respect of any matter delegated to it have the same power in all respects as the associations appointing it.

(4) The costs of a joint committee shall be defrayed by the associations by whom it has been appointed, in such proportion as may be agreed between them, and the accounts of such joint committees and their officers shall for the purposes of the provisions of this Act be deemed to be accounts of the associations appointing them and of their officers.

Part II.

Territorial Force.

Raising and Maintenance of Force.

6. Raising and Number of Territorial Force.—It shall be lawful for His Majesty to raise and maintain a force, to be called the "Territorial Force," consisting of such number of men as may from time to time be provided by Parliament.

Government, Discipline, and Pay.

7. Government, Discipline, and Pay of Territorial Force.—(1) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, it shall be lawful for His Majesty, by order signified under the hand of a Secretary of State, to make orders with respect to the government, discipline, and pay and allowances of the Territorial Force, and with respect to all other matters and things relating to the Territorial Force, including any matter by this Part of this Act authorised to be prescribed or expressed to be subject to orders or regulations.

(2) The said orders may provide for the formation of men of the Territorial Force into regiments, battalions, or other military bodies, and for the formation of such regiments, battalions, or other military bodies into corps, either alone or jointly with any other part of His Majesty's forces, and for appointing, transferring, or attaching men of the Territorial Force to corps, and for posting, attaching, or otherwise dealing with such men within the corps; and may provide for the constitution of a permanent staff, including adjutants and staff sergeants who shall, except in special circumstances certified by the general officer commanding, be members of His Majesty's regular forces; and may regulate the appointment, rank, duties, and numbers of the officers and non-commissioned officers of the Territorial Force.

(3) Subject to the provisions of any such order, the Army Council may make general or special regulations with respect to any matter with respect to which His Majesty may make orders under this section.

(4) Provided that the said orders or regulations shall not—

(a) affect or extend the term for which, or the area within which, a man of the Territorial Force is liable under this Part of this Act to serve; or

(b) authorise a man of the Territorial Force when belonging to one corps to be transferred without his consent to another corps; or

(c) when the corps of a man of the Territorial Force includes more than one unit, authorise him when not embodied to be posted, without his consent, to any unit other than that to which he was posted on enlistment; or

(d) when the corps of a man of the Territorial Force includes any battalion or other body of the regular forces, authorise him to be posted without his consent to that battalion or body.

(5) Where a man of the Territorial Force was enlisted or re-engaged before the date of any order or regulation under this Part of this Act, nothing in such order or regulation shall render him liable without his consent to be appointed, transferred, or attached to any military body to which he could not without his consent have been appointed, transferred, or attached if the said order or regulation had not been made.

(6) Orders and regulations under this section may provide for the formation of a reserve division of the Territorial Force, and may relax or dispense with any of the provisions of this Act relating to the training of the men of the Territorial Force so far as regards their application to men in the reserve division, and may, notwithstanding anything in this section, authorise a man in the reserve division to be transferred from one corps to another, so, however, that a man in the reserve division shall not, without his consent, be transferred to a corps of another arm.

(7) All orders and general regulations made under this section shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as may be after they are made.

8. FIRST APPOINTMENTS TO LOWEST RANK OF OFFICERS OF THE TERRITORIAL FORCE.—Subject to any directions which may be given by His Majesty, first appointments to the lowest rank of officer in any unit of the Territorial Force shall be given to persons recommended by the president of the association for the county, if a person approved by His Majesty is recommended by the president for any such appointment within thirty days after notice of a vacancy for the appointment has been given to the president in the prescribed manner, provided he fulfils all the prescribed conditions as to age, physical fitness, and educational qualifications; and, where a unit comprises men of the Territorial Force of two or more counties, the recommendations for such appointments shall be made by the presidents of the associations for the respective counties in such rotation or otherwise as may be prescribed.

Enlistment, Service, Discharge.

9. ENLISTMENT, TERM OF SERVICE, AND DISCHARGE.—(1) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, all men of the Territorial Force shall be enlisted by such persons and in such manner and subject to such regulations as may be prescribed:

Provided that every man enlisted under this Part of this Act—

(a) Shall be enlisted for a county for which an association has been established under this Act and shall be appointed to serve in such corps for that county or for an area comprising the whole or part of that county as he may select, and, if that corps comprises more than one unit within the county, shall be posted to such one of those units as he may select:

(b) Shall be enlisted to serve for such a period as may be prescribed, not exceeding four years, reckoned from the date of his attestation:

(c) May be re-engaged within twelve months before the end of his current term of service for such a period as may be prescribed not exceeding four years from the end of that term, and on re-engagement shall make the prescribed declaration before a justice of the peace or an officer, and so from time to time.

(2) A man enlisted in the Territorial Force, until duly discharged in the prescribed manner, shall remain subject to this Part of this Act as a man of the Territorial Force.

(3) Any man of the Territorial Force shall, except when a proclamation ordering the Army Reserve to be called out on permanent service is in force, be entitled to be discharged before the end of his current term of service on complying with the following conditions:—

(i) Giving to his commanding officer three months' notice in writing, or such less notice as may be prescribed, of his desire to be discharged; and

(ii) Paying for the use of the association for the county for which he was enlisted such sum as may be prescribed not exceeding five pounds; and

(iii) Delivering up in good order, fair wear and tear only excepted, all arms, clothing, and appointments, being public property, issued to him, or, in cases where for any good and sufficient cause the delivery of the property aforesaid is impossible, on paying the value thereof:

Provided that it shall be lawful for the association for the county, or for any officer authorised by the association, in any case in which it appears that the reasons for which the discharge is claimed are of sufficient urgency or weight, to dispense either wholly or in part with all or any of the above conditions.

(4) A man of the Territorial Force may be discharged by his commanding officer for disobedience to orders by him while doing any military duty, or for neglect of duty, or for misconduct by him as a man of the Territorial Force, or for other sufficient cause, the existence and sufficiency of such cause to be judged of by the commanding officer:

Provided that any man so discharged shall be entitled to appeal to the Army Council, who may give such directions in any such case as they may think just and proper.

(5) Where the time at which a man of the Territorial Force would otherwise be entitled to be discharged occurs while a proclamation ordering the Army Reserve to be called out on permanent service is in force, he may be required to prolong his service for such further period, not exceeding twelve months, as the competent military authority may order.

10. APPLICATION OF CERTAIN SECTIONS OF THE ARMY ACT, 44 AND 45 VICT. C. 58.—(1) The following sections of the Army Act shall apply to the Territorial Force (that is to say):—

Section eighty (relating to the mode of enlistment and attestation);

Section ninety-six (relating to the claims of masters to apprentices);

Section ninety-eight (imposing a fine for unlawful recruiting);

Section ninety-nine (making recruits punishable for false answers);

So much of section one hundred as relates to the validity of attestation and enlistment or re-engagement;

Section one hundred and one (relating to the competent military authority); and

So much of section one hundred and sixty-three as relates to an attestation paper, or a copy thereof, or a declaration, being evidence.

And the said sections shall apply in like manner as if they were herein re-enacted, with the substitution—

(a) Of "Territorial Force" for "regular forces," and of "man of the Territorial Force" for "soldier"; and

(b) (In section one hundred) of "has not within three months claimed his discharge "on any ground on which he is entitled under this subsection to do so" for "has received pay as a soldier of the regular forces during three months."

(2) A recruit may be attested by any lieutenant or deputy-lieutenant of any county in the United Kingdom, or by an officer of the regular or Territorial forces, and the sections of the Army Act in this section mentioned, and also section thirty-three of the same Act, shall as applied to the Territorial Force be construed as if a justice of the peace in those sections included such lieutenant, deputy lieutenant, or officer.

11. Enlistment of Men Discharged with Disgrace from Army or Navy, or Contrary to Rules.—(1) If a person—

(a) Having been discharged with disgrace from any part of His Majesty's forces, or having been dismissed with disgrace from the Navy, has afterwards enlisted in the Territorial Force without declaring the circumstances of his discharge or dismissal; or

(b) Is concerned when subject to military law in the enlistment for service in the Territorial Force of any man, when he knows or has reasonable cause to believe such man to be so circumstanced that by enlisting he commits an offence against the Army Act or this Act; or

(c) Wilfully contravenes when subject to military law any enactments, orders, or regulations which relate to the enlistment or attestation of men in the Territorial Force, he shall be guilty of an offence, and shall, whether otherwise subject to military law or not, be liable to be tried by court martial, and on conviction to suffer such punishment as is imposed for the like offence by section thirty-two or thirty-four of the Army Act, as the case may be, and may be taken into military custody.

(2) For the purpose of this section the expression "discharged with disgrace" means discharged with ignominy, discharged as incorrigible and worthless, or discharged for misconduct, or discharged on account of a conviction for felony or a sentence of penal servitude.

12. Enlistment into Army Reserve.—If a man of the Territorial Force enlists into the army reserve without being discharged from the Territorial Force, the terms and conditions of his service whilst he remains in the army reserve shall be those applicable to him as a man belonging to the army reserve, and not those applicable to him as a man of the Territorial Force.

13. Area of Service of Territorial Force.—(1) Any part of the Territorial Force shall be liable to serve in any part of the United Kingdom, but no part of the Territorial Force shall be carried or ordered to go out of the United Kingdom.

(2) Provided that it shall be lawful for His Majesty, if he thinks fit, to accept the offer of any part or men of the Territorial Force, signified through their commanding officer, to subject themselves to the liability—

(a) to serve in any place outside the United Kingdom; or

(b) to be called out for actual military service for purposes of defence at such places in the United Kingdom as may be specified in their agreement, whether the Territorial Force is embodied or not;

and, upon any such offer being accepted, they shall be liable, whenever required during the period to which the offer extends, to serve or be called out accordingly.

(3) A person shall not be compelled to make such an offer, or be subjected to such liability as aforesaid, except by his own consent, and a commanding officer shall not certify any voluntary offer previously to his having explained to every person making the offer that the offer is to be purely voluntary on his part.

Training.

14. Preliminary Training of Recruits of Territorial Force.—(1) Every man of the Territorial Force shall, by way of preliminary training, during the first year of his original enlistment—

(a) If so provided by Order in Council, be trained at such places within the United Kingdom, at such times, and for such periods, not exceeding in the whole the number of days specified by the Order in Council, as may be prescribed, and may for that purpose be called out once or oftener; and

(b) Whether such an Order in Council has been made or not, attend the number of drills and fulfil the other conditions prescribed for a recruit of his arm or branch of the service.

(2) The requirement to attend training and drills, and to fulfil conditions under this section, shall be in addition to the requirement to attend training and drills and to fulfil conditions for the purpose of annual training.

15. ANNUAL TRAINING.—(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, every man of the Territorial Force shall, by way of annual training—

(a) Be trained for not less than eight nor more than fifteen, or in the case of the mounted branch eighteen, days in every year at such times and at such places in any part of the United Kingdom as may be prescribed, and may for that purpose be called out once or oftener in every year:

(b) Attend the number of drills and fulfil the other conditions relating to training prescribed for his arm or branch of the service:

Provided that the requirements of this section may be dispensed with in whole or in part—

(i) as respects any unit, by the prescribed general officer; and

(ii) as respects an individual man, by his commanding officer subject to any general directions by the prescribed general officer.

(2) His Majesty in Council may—

(a) Order that the period of annual training in any year of all or any part of the Territorial Force be extended, but so that the whole period of annual training be not more than thirty days in any year; or

(b) Order that the period of annual training in any year of all or any part of the Territorial Force be reduced to such time as to His Majesty may seem fit; or

(c) Order that in any year the annual training of all or any part of the Territorial Force be dispensed with.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing a man, with his own consent, in addition to annual training, being called up for the purpose of duty or instruction in accordance with orders and regulations under this Part of this Act.

16. LAYING OF DRAFT ORDERS IN COUNCIL RELATING TO TRAINING BEFORE PARLIAMENT.—Before any Order in Council is made under this Act providing for preliminary training or extending the period of annual training the draft thereof shall be laid before each House of Parliament for a period of not less than forty days during the Session of Parliament, and if either of those Houses before the expiration of those forty days presents an address to His Majesty against the draft or any part thereof, no further proceedings shall be taken, without prejudice to the making of a new draft Order.

Embodiment.

17. EMBODIMENT OF TERRITORIAL FORCE.—(1) Immediately upon and by virtue of the issue of a proclamation ordering the Army Reserve to be called out on permanent service, it shall be lawful for His Majesty to order the Army Council from time to time to give, and when given to revoke or vary, such directions as may seem necessary or proper for embodying all or any part of the Territorial Force, and in particular to make such special arrangements as they think proper with regard to units or individuals whose services may be required in other than a military capacity:

Provided that, where under any such proclamation directions have been issued for calling out all the men belonging to the first class of the Army Reserve, the Army Council shall, within one month after such directions have been issued, issue directions for embodying all the men belonging to the Territorial Force, unless an address has been presented to His Majesty by both Houses of Parliament praying that such directions as last aforesaid be not issued, and such directions shall not, unless the emergency so requires, be given until Parliament has had an opportunity of presenting such an address.

(2) Whenever, in consequence of the calling out of the whole of the first class of the Army Reserve, directions are required under this section to be given for embodying the Territorial Force, if Parliament be then separated by such adjournment or prorogation as will not expire within ten days, a proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of Parliament within ten days, and Parliament shall accordingly meet and sit upon the day appointed by such proclamation, and shall continue to sit and act in like manner as if it had stood adjourned or prorogued to the same day.

(3) Every order and all directions given under this section shall be obeyed as if enacted in this Act, and, where such directions for the time being direct the embodiment of any part of the Territorial Force, every officer and man belonging to that part shall attend at the place and time fixed by those directions, and after that time shall be deemed to be embodied, and such officers and men are in this Act referred to as embodied or as the embodied part or parts of the Territorial Force.

18. DISEMBODYING OF TERRITORIAL FORCE.—(1) It shall be lawful for His Majesty by proclamation to order that the Territorial Force be disembodied, and thereupon the Army Council shall give such directions as may seem necessary or proper for carrying the said proclamation into effect.

(2) Until any such proclamation of His Majesty has been issued the Army Council may from time to time, as they may think expedient for the public service, give such directions as may seem necessary or proper for disembodying any embodied part of the Territorial Force, and for embodying any part of the Territorial Force not embodied, whether previously disembodied or otherwise.

(3) After the date fixed by the directions for the disembodiment of any part of the Territorial Force, the officers and men belonging to that part shall be in the position of officers and men of the Territorial Force not embodied.

Notices.

19. SERVICE AND PUBLICATION OF NOTICES.—Notices required in pursuance of this Part of this Act or of the orders and regulations in force thereunder to be given to men of the Territorial Force shall be served or published in such manner as may be prescribed, and, if so served or published, shall be deemed to be sufficient notice, and every constable and overseer shall, when so required by or on behalf of the Army Council, conform with the orders and regulations for the time being in force under this Part of this Act with respect to the publication and service of notices, and in default shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds.

Offences.

20. PUNISHMENT FOR FAILURE TO ATTEND ON EMBODIMENT.—(1) Any man of the Territorial Force who without leave lawfully granted, or such sickness or other reasonable excuse as may be allowed in the prescribed manner, fails to appear at the time and place appointed for assembling on embodiment, shall be guilty, according to the circumstances, of desertion within the meaning of section twelve, or of absenting himself without leave within the meaning of section fifteen, of the Army Act, and shall, whether otherwise subject to military law or not, be liable to be tried by court-martial, and convicted and punished accordingly, and may be taken into military custody.

(2) Sections one hundred and fifty-three and one hundred and fifty-four of the Army Act shall apply with respect to deserters and desertion within the meaning of this section in like manner as they apply with respect to deserters and desertion within the meaning of those sections, and any person who, knowing any man of the Territorial Force to be a deserter within the meaning of this section or of the Army Act, employs or continues to employ him, shall be deemed to aid him in concealing himself within the meaning of the first-mentioned section.

(3) Where a man of the Territorial Force commits the offence of desertion under this section the time which elapsed between the time of his committing the offence and the time of his apprehension or voluntary surrender shall not be taken into account in reckoning his service for the purpose of discharge.

21. PUNISHMENT FOR FAILURE TO FULFIL TRAINING CONDITIONS.—Any man of the Territorial Force who without leave lawfully granted, or such sickness or other reasonable excuse as may be allowed in the prescribed manner, fails to appear at the time and place appointed for preliminary training, or for annual training, or fails to attend the number of drills and fulfil the other conditions relating to preliminary or annual training prescribed for his arm or branch of the service, shall be liable to forfeit to His Majesty a sum of money not exceeding five pounds recoverable on complaint to a court of summary jurisdiction by the prescribed officer, and any sums recovered by such officer shall be accounted for by him in the prescribed manner.

22. Wrongful Sale, &c. of Public Property.—If any person designedly makes away with, sells, or pawns, or wrongfully destroys or damages, or negligently loses anything issued to him as an officer or man of the Territorial Force, or wrongfully refuses or neglects to deliver up on demand anything issued to him as an officer or man of the Territorial Force, the value thereof shall be recoverable from him on complaint to a court of summary jurisdiction by the county association; and he shall also, for any such offence of designedly making away with, selling or pawning, or wrongfully destroying as aforesaid, be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding five pounds.

Civil Rights and Exemptions.

23. Civil Rights and Exemptions.—(1) The acceptance of a commission as an officer of the Territorial Force shall not vacate the seat of any member returned to serve in Parliament.

(2) An officer or man of the Territorial Force shall not be liable to any penalty or punishment for or on account of his absence during the time he is voting at any election of a member to serve in Parliament, or during the time he is going to or returning from such voting.

(3) If a sheriff is an officer of the Territorial Force, then during embodiment he shall be discharged from personally performing the office of sheriff, and the under sheriff shall be answerable for the execution of the said office in the name of the high sheriff; and the security given by the under sheriff and his pledges to the high sheriff shall stand as a security to the King and to all persons whomsoever for the due performance of the office of sheriff during such time.

(4) An officer or man of the Territorial Force shall not be compelled to serve as a peace officer or parish officer, and shall be exempt from serving on any jury, and a field officer of the Territorial Army shall not be required to serve in the office of high sheriff.

Legal Proceedings.

24. Trial of Offences and Application of Penalties.—(1) Any offence under this Part of this Act, and any offence under the Army Act if committed by a man of the Territorial Force when not embodied, which is cognizable by a court-martial shall also be cognizable by a court of summary jurisdiction, and on conviction by such a court shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or with a fine not exceeding twenty pounds, or with both such imprisonment and fine, but nothing in this provision shall affect the liability of a person charged with any such offence to be taken into military custody.

(2) Any offence which under this Part of this Act is punishable on conviction by court-martial, shall for all purposes of and incidental to the arrest, trial, and punishment of the offender, including the summary dealing with the case by his commanding officer, be deemed to be an offence under the Army Act, with this modification, that any reference in that Act to forfeiture and stoppages shall be construed to refer to such forfeitures and stoppages as may be prescribed.

(3) Any offence which under this Part of this Act is punishable on conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction may be prosecuted, and any fine recoverable on such conviction may be recovered, in manner provided by sections one hundred and sixty-six, one hundred and sixty-seven, and one hundred and sixty-eight of the Army Act, in like manner as if those sections were herein re-enacted and in terms made applicable to this Part of this Act, subject to the following modification (namely)—

Every fine imposed under this Part of this Act on a man of the Territorial Force, or recovered on a prosecution instituted under this Part of this Act, shall, notwithstanding anything in any Act or charter or in the said sections to the contrary, be paid to the association of the county for which the man was enlisted.

(4) Where a man of the Territorial Force is subject to military law and is illegally absent from his duty, a court of inquiry under section seventy-two of the Army Act may be assembled after the expiration of twenty-one days from the date of such absence, notwithstanding that the period during which he was subject to military law is less than twenty-one days or has expired before the expiration of twenty-one days.

25. SUPPLEMENTAL PROVISIONS AS TO TRIAL OF OFFENCES.—(1) A person charged with an offence which under this Part of this Act is cognizable both by a court-martial and by a court of summary jurisdiction shall not be liable to be tried both by a court-martial and by a court of summary jurisdiction, but may be tried by either of them, as may be prescribed:

Provided that a man who has been dealt with summarily by his commanding officer shall be deemed to have been tried by court-martial.

(2) Proceedings against an offender before either a court-martial or his commanding officer, or a court of summary jurisdiction, in respect of an offence punishable under this Part of this Act, and alleged to have been committed by him when a man of the Territorial Force, may be instituted whether the term of his service in the Territorial Force has or has not expired, and may, notwithstanding anything in any other Act, be instituted at any time within two months after the time at which the offence becomes known to his commanding officer if the alleged offender is then apprehended, or, if he is not then apprehended, then within two months after the time at which he is apprehended.

(3) Where an offender has on several occasions been guilty of desertion, fraudulent enlistment, or making a false answer, he may for the purposes of any proceedings against him be deemed to belong to any one or more of the corps to which he has been appointed or transferred as well as to the corps to which he properly belongs, and it shall be lawful to charge the offender with any number of the above-mentioned offences at the same time, whether they are offences within the meaning of the Army Act or offences within the meaning of this Part of this Act, and to give evidence of such offences against him, and, if he has been convicted of more than one offence, to punish him accordingly as if he had been previously convicted of any such offence.

26. EVIDENCE.—(1) Section one hundred and sixty-four of the Army Act (which relates to evidence of the civil conviction or acquittal of a person subject to military law) shall apply to a man of the Territorial Force who is tried by a civil court, whether he is or is not at the time of such trial subject to military law.

(2) Section one hundred and sixty-three of the Army Act (relating to evidence) shall apply to all proceedings under this Part of this Act.

Miscellaneous.

27. EXERCISE OF POWERS VESTED IN HOLDER OF MILITARY OFFICE.—(1) Any power or jurisdiction given to, and act or thing to be done by, to, or before any person holding any military office may, in relation to the Territorial Force, be exercised by or done by, to, or before any other person for the time being authorised in that behalf, according to the custom of the Service.

(2) Where by this Part of this Act, or by any order or regulation in force under this Part of this Act, any order is authorised to be made by any military authority, such order may be signified by an order, instruction, or letter under the hand of any officer authorised to issue orders on behalf of such military authority, and an order, instruction, or letter purporting to be signed by any officer appearing therein to be so authorised shall be evidence of his being so authorised.

28. APPLICATION OF ENACTMENTS.—(1) The Army Act shall apply to the Territorial Force and officers and men thereof in like manner as it applies to the Militia, and officers and men of the Militia, except that men of the Territorial Force shall, in addition, be subject to military law when called out on actual military service for purposes of defence, and shall be liable to dismissal as a punishment, and for that purpose the amendments contained in the First Schedule to this Act shall be made in the Army Act.

(2) For the purpose of section one hundred and forty-three of the Army Act and of all other enactments relating to such duties, tolls, and ferries as are in that section mentioned, officers and men belonging to the Territorial Force, when going to or returning from any place at which they are required to attend, and for non-attendance at which they are liable to be punished, shall be deemed to be officers and soldiers of the regular forces on duty.

(3) His Majesty may by Order in Council apply, with the necessary adaptations, to the Territorial Force or the officers or men belonging to that force any enactment relating to the Militia, Yeomanry, or Volunteers, or officers or men of the Militia, Yeomanry, or Volunteers, other than enactments with respect to the raising, service, pay, discipline, or government of the Militia, Yeomanry, or Volunteers, and every such Order in Council shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

Transitory.

29. Transitory Provisions.—(1) Where an association has been established under this Act for any county His Majesty may by Order in Council transfer to the Territorial Force such units of the Yeomanry and Volunteers or part thereof raised in the county as may be specified in the Order, and every such unit or part thereof shall from the date mentioned in the Order be deemed to have been lawfully formed under this Part of this Act as an unit of the Territorial Force as provided by the Order, and the provisions of this Part of this Act shall apply to it accordingly.

(2) Every officer and man of an unit or part thereof mentioned in any such Order shall, from the date mentioned in that Order, be deemed to be an officer or man of the Territorial Force. Provided that nothing in this section or in any Order made thereunder shall, without his consent, affect the conditions or area of service of any person commissioned, enlisted, or enrolled before the passing of this Act.

(3) An Order in Council under this section may provide—

(a) For the application to officers and men who become subject thereto of the provisions of this Act as to conditions and area of service, and for the continuance of the application to officers and men who remain subject thereto of the provisions as to conditions and area of service previously in force as respects those officers and men:

(b) For transferring to the association any property vested in a Secretary of State for the purposes of any unit to which the Order relates:

(c) For transferring to the association any property belonging to or held for the benefit of any such unit so however that all property so transferred shall as from the date of the transfer be held by the association for the benefit in like manner of the corresponding unit of the Territorial Force or for such other purposes as the association, with the consent of such corresponding unit, to be ascertained in the prescribed manner, shall direct; and any question which may arise as to whether any property is transferred to an association, or as to the trusts or purposes upon or for which it is or ought to be held, shall be referred for the decision of a Secretary of State, whose decision shall be final. The corresponding unit of the Territorial Force shall, in the event of any such transfer, become entitled, notwithstanding the terms of any trust, limitation, or condition affecting the property so transferred to the estate or interest in such property of the unit to the property of which the order relates; but, subject to this provision, the interest of any beneficiary other than such unit shall not, without the consent of such beneficiary, be affected. The

Order may, if it be deemed proper, having regard to the special circumstances of any case, provide for the appointment of special trustees to act together with or to the exclusion of the association in regard to any such property, and such special trustees may be the existing trustees of such property:

(d) For transferring to the association any liabilities of any such unit which the association is willing to assume, and providing for the discharge of any such liabilities which are not so transferred:

(e) For transferring to the association any land or interest in land acquired by the council of a county or borough on behalf of any volunteer corps to which the Order relates, and any outstanding liabilities of the council incurred in respect thereof, if the council and the association consent:

and may contain such supplemental, consequential, and incidental provisions as may appear necessary or proper for the purposes of the Order.

(4) Every Order in Council made under this section shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

Part III.

Reserve Forces.

30. Enlistment and Terms of Service of Special Reservists.—(1) The power of enlisting men into the first class of the army reserve under the Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 and 46 Vict. c. 48), shall extend to the enlistment of men who have not served in His Majesty's regular forces, and men so enlisted who have not served in the regular forces are in this Part of this Act referred to as special reservists, and a special reservist may be re-engaged, and when re-engaged shall continue subject to the terms of service applicable to special reservists.

(2) A special reservist may, in addition to being called out for annual training, be called out for a special course or special courses of training at such place or places within the United Kingdom at such time or times and for such period or periods, not exceeding in the whole six months, as may be prescribed, in like manner and subject to the like conditions as he may be called out for annual training, and may during any such course be attached to or trained with any body of His Majesty's forces.

(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of section eleven of the Reserve Forces Act, 1882, any special reservists may be called out for annual training for such period or periods as may be prescribed by any order or regulations under the Reserve Forces Act, 1882.

(4) Provided that where one of the conditions on which a man was enlisted or re-engaged is that he shall not be called out for training, whether special or annual, for a longer period than the period specified in his attestation paper, he shall not be liable under this section to be called out for any longer period.

(5) Where a proclamation ordering the army reserve to be called out on permanent service has been issued, it shall be lawful for His Majesty at any time thereafter by proclamation to order that all special reservists shall cease to be so called out, and thereupon a Secretary of State shall give such directions as may seem necessary or proper for carrying the said proclamation into effect.

(6) A special reservist who enlists into the regular forces shall upon such enlistment be deemed to be discharged from the army reserve.

31. Agreements as to Extension of Service.—A Secretary of State may, by regulations under the Reserve Forces Act, 1882, authorise any special reservist having the qualifications prescribed by those regulations to agree in writing that, if the time when he would otherwise be entitled to be discharged occurs whilst he is called out on permanent service, he will continue to serve until the expiration of a period, whether definite or indefinite, specified in the agreement; and if any man who enters into such an agreement is so called out, he shall be liable to be detained in service for the period specified in his agreement in the same manner in all respects as if his term of service were still unexpired.

32. Liability of Reservists to be Called Out.—(1) A special reservist shall, if he so agrees in writing, be liable during the whole of his service in the army reserve, or during such part of that service as he so agrees, to be called out on permanent service without such proclamation or communication to Parliament as is mentioned in section twelve of the Reserve Forces Act, 1882, and the calling out of men under this section shall not involve the meeting of Parliament as required by section thirteen of that Act:

Provided that—

(a) The number of men so liable shall not at any one time exceed four thousand:

(b) The power of calling out of men under this section shall not be exercised except when they are required for service outside the United Kingdom when warlike operations are in preparation or in progress:

(c) Any agreement under this section may provide for the revocation thereof by such notice in writing as may be therein stated:

(d) Any exercise of the power of calling out men under this section shall be reported to Parliament as soon as may be:

(e) The number of men for the time being called out under this section shall not be reckoned in the number of the forces authorised by the Annual Army Act for the time being in force.

(2) Six thousand shall be substituted for five thousand as the maximum number of men liable to be called out under section one of the Reserve Forces and Militia Act, 1898 (61 and 62 Vict. c. 9), and the liability to be called out under that section may, if so agreed, extend to the first two years of a man's service in the first class of the army reserve.

(3) In paragraph (5) of section one hundred and seventy-six of the Army Act the words "under His Majesty's proclamation" shall be repealed.

33. Power to Form Battalions, &c. of Reservists.—Orders and regulations under the Reserve Forces Act, 1882, may provide for the formation of special reservists into regiments, battalions, or other military bodies, and for the formation of such regiments, battalions, or other military bodies into corps, either alone or jointly with any other part of His Majesty's forces, and for appointing, transferring, or attaching special reservists to such corps, and for posting, attaching, or otherwise dealing with special reservists within such corps.

34. Transfer of Militia Battalions to Reserve.—(1) His Majesty may by Order in Council transfer to the Army Reserve such battalions of the Militia as may be specified in the Order, and every battalion so transferred shall from the date mentioned in the Order be deemed to have been lawfully formed under this Part of this Act as a battalion of special reservists.

(2) As from the said date every officer of any battalion so transferred shall be deemed to be an officer in the reserve of officers, and every man in such battalion shall be deemed to be a special reservist, and the Order may contain such provisions as may seem necessary for applying the provisions of the Reserve Forces Acts, 1882 to 1906, as amended by this Act, to those officers and men:

Provided that, unless any officer or man in any battalion so transferred indicates his assent to such transfer certified by his commanding officer, nothing in the Order shall effect his existing conditions of service.

(3) All Orders in Council made under this section shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

35. Amendment of 45 and 46 Vict. c. 48, s. 6 (4).—Subsection (4) of section six of the Reserve Forces Act, 1882, which makes a certificate purporting to be signed by an officer appointed to pay men belonging to the army reserve evidence in certain cases, shall, where a person other than an officer is appointed to pay men belonging to the army reserve, apply to certificates purporting to be signed by such person.

36. Commissions in Reserve of Officers not to Vacate Seat in Parliament.—The acceptance of a commission as an officer in the reserve of officers shall not vacate the seat of any member returned to serve in Parliament.

TERRITORIAL AND RESERVE FORCES ACT, 1907.

PART IV.

SUPPLEMENTAL.

37. PROVISIONS AS TO ORDERS, SCHEMES, AND REGULATIONS.—(1) Every Order in Council or scheme required by this Act to be laid before each House of Parliament shall be so laid within forty days next after it is made, if Parliament is then sitting, or, if not, within forty days after the commencement of the then next ensuing session; and if an address is presented to His Majesty by either House of Parliament within the next subsequent forty days, praying that any such order or scheme may be annulled, His Majesty may thereupon by Order in Council annul the same, and the order or scheme so annulled shall thenceforth become void and of no effect, but without prejudice to the validity of any proceedings which may in the meantime have been taken under the same.

(2) All Orders in Council, orders, schemes, and regulations made under this Act, may be varied or revoked by subsequent Orders in Council, orders, schemes, and regulations made in the like manner and subject to the like conditions.

38. DEFINITIONS.—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

The expression "county" means a county or riding of a county for which a lieutenant is appointed, and includes the City of London; and each county of a city or county of a town mentioned in the first column of the Second Schedule to this Act shall be deemed to form part of the county set opposite thereto in the second column of that schedule;

The expression "man of the Territorial Force" includes a non-commissioned officer;

The expression "prescribed" means prescribed by orders or regulations;

Other expressions have the same meaning as in the Army Act.

39. SPECIAL PROVISIONS AS TO SPECIAL PLACES.—(1) The Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports may ex officio be a member of the association of the county of Kent or of the county of Sussex, or of both, as may be provided by schemes under this Act.

(2) The Warden of the Stannaries may ex officio be a member of the association of the county of Cornwall or of the county of Devon, or of both, as may be provided by schemes under this Act.

(3) The Lord Mayor of the City of London shall ex officio be president of the association of the City of London.

(4) The Governor or Deputy Governor of the Isle of Wight shall ex officio be a member of the association of the county of Southampton.

(5) Nothing in this Act shall affect the raising and levying of the Trophy Tax as heretofore in the City of London, but the proceeds of the Tax so levied may be applied by His Majesty's Commissioners of Lieutenancy for the City of London, if the Royal London Militia Battalion is reconstituted as a battalion of the Army Reserve, for any purposes connected with that battalion, and may also, if His Majesty's Commissioners of Lieutenancy for the City of London in their discretion see fit, be applied for the purposes of any of the powers and duties of the association of the City of London under this Act.

40. APPLICATION TO SCOTLAND AND THE ISLE OF MAN.—(1) In the application of this Act to Scotland the following modifications shall be made:—

(a) This Act shall apply to a county of a city in like manner as to any other county: Provided that on the representation or with the consent of the corporation of any county of a city it shall be lawful for His Majesty, by order signified under the hand of a Secretary of State, at any time after the passing of this Act, to declare that such county of a city shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed to form part of the county set opposite thereto in the second column of the Third Schedule to this Act, and to provide for all matters which may appear necessary or proper for giving full effect to the order;

(b) The expression "county borough council" means the town council of a royal, parliamentary, or police burgh with a population of or exceeding twenty thousand according to the census for the time being last taken;

(c) The expression "land" includes heritages;

(d) The expression "overseer" means an inspector of poor.

(2) This Act shall apply to the Isle of Man as if it formed part of, and were included in the expression, the United Kingdom, subject to the following modifications:—

(a) The Isle of Man shall be deemed to be a separate county;

(b) References to the Governor of the Island shall be substituted for references to the lieutenant of a county;

(c) References to a High Bailiff or two justices of the peace and to conviction by such a Bailiff or justices shall be substituted for references to a court of summary jurisdiction and to conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts;

(d) References to the Tynwald Court shall be substituted for references to Parliament in the section of this Act relating to civil rights and exemptions.

41. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907, and so far as it relates to the reserve forces may be cited with the Reserve Forces Acts, 1882 to 1906, as the Reserve Forces Acts, 1882 to 1907.

An Act to repeal section fifty-seven of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and part of section seven of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, relating to the Employment of Women and Children. [9th August 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. REPEAL OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS AS TO EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN.—Section fifty-seven of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (which relates to the employment of women in flax scutch mills), and in paragraph (5) of section seven of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (which relates to the employment of women and children above ground), the words "of not less than eight hours between the termination of employment on Friday and the commencement of employment on the following Saturday and in other cases" are hereby repealed.

2. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the Employment of Women Act, 1907.

CHAPTER 11.

An Act to make further provision with respect to the sums to be paid by Canada to the several Provinces of the Dominion. [9th August 1907.]

Whereas an address has been presented to His Majesty by the Senate and Commons of Canada in the terms set forth in the schedule to this Act:

Be it therefore enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Payments to be made by Canada to Provinces.—(1) The following grants shall be made yearly by Canada to every province, which at the commencement of this Act is a province of the Dominion, for its local purposes and the support of its Government and Legislature:—

(a) A fixed grant—

where the population of the province is under one hundred and fifty thousand, of one hundred thousand dollars; where the population of the province is one hundred and fifty thousand, but does not exceed two hundred thousand, of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars;

where the population of the province is two hundred thousand, but does not exceed four hundred thousand, of one hundred and eighty thousand dollars;

where the population of the province is four hundred thousand, but does not exceed eight hundred thousand, of one hundred and ninety thousand dollars;

where the population of the province is eight hundred thousand, but does not exceed one million five hundred thousand, of two hundred and twenty thousand dollars;

where the population of the province exceeds one million five hundred thousand, of two hundred and forty thousand dollars; and

(b) Subject to the special provisions of this Act as to the provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, a grant at the rate of eighty cents per head of the population of the province up to the number of two million five hundred thousand, and at the rate of sixty cents per head of so much of the population as exceeds that number.

(2) An additional grant of one hundred thousand dollars shall be made yearly to the province of British Columbia for a period of ten years from the commencement of this Act.

(3) The population of a province shall be ascertained from time to time in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta respectively by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate of population made under the Acts establishing those provinces or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada making provision for the purpose, and in the case of any other province by the last decennial census for the time being.

(4) The grants payable under this Act shall be paid half-yearly in advance to each province.

(5) The grants payable under this Act shall be substituted for the grants or subsidies (in this Act referred to as existing grants) payable for the like purposes at the commencement of this Act to the several provinces of the Dominion under the provisions of section one hundred and eighteen of the British North America Act, 1867 (30 and 31 Vict. c. 3), or of any Order in Council establishing a province, or of any Act of the Parliament of Canada containing directions for the payment of any such grant or subsidy, and those provisions shall cease to have effect.

(6) The Government of Canada shall have the same power of deducting sums charged against a province on account of the interest on public debt in the case of the grant payable under this Act to the province as they have in the case of the existing grant.

(7) Nothing in this Act shall affect the obligation of the Government of Canada to pay to any province any grant which is payable to that province, other than the existing grant for which the grant under this Act is substituted.

(8) In the case of the provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, the amount paid on account of the grant payable per head of the population to the provinces under this Act shall not at any time be less than the amount of the corresponding grant payable at the commencement of this Act; and if it is found on any decennial census that the population of the province has decreased since the last decennial census, the amount paid on account of the grant shall not be decreased below the amount then payable, notwithstanding the decrease of the population.

2. SHORT TITLE AND INTERPRETATION.—This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1907, and shall take effect as from the first day of July nineteen hundred and seven.

SCHEDULE.

TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorised under section 118 of the Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, or by or under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the Union, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their Governments and Legislatures by providing that—

A. Instead of the amounts now payable, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their Governments and Legislatures be according to population, and as follows:—

(a) Where the population of the province is under 150,000, $100,000;

(b) Where the population of the province is 150,000, but does not exceed 200,000, $150,000;

(c) Where the population of the province is 200,000, but does not exceed 400,000, $180,000;

(d) Where the population of the province is 400,000, but does not exceed 800,000, $190,000;

(e) Where the population of the province is 800,000, but does not exceed 1,500,000, $220,000;

(f) Where the population of the province exceeds 1,500,000, $240,000.

B. Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census, or in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta respectively, by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate, until such population exceeds 2,500,000, and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

C. An additional allowance to the extent of one hundred thousand dollars annually be paid for ten years to the province of British Columbia.

D. Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada, or the right of any province to the payment of any special grant heretofore made by the Parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressed.

We pray that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Imperial Parliament at its present Session repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid, and substituting therefor the scale of payments above set forth, which shall be a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be paid yearly to the several provinces of the Dominion for their local purposes, and the support of their Governments and Legislatures.

Such grants shall be paid half-yearly in advance to each province, but the Government of Canada shall deduct from such grants as against any province all sums chargeable as interest on the public debt of that province in excess of the several amounts stipulated in the said Act.

All of which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into your favourable and gracious consideration.

(Signed) R. DANDURAND,
Speaker of the Senate.

(Signed) R. F. SUTHERLAND,
Speaker of the House of Commons.

CHAPTER XIII.

An Act to grant certain duties of Customs and Inland Revenue, to alter other duties, and to amend the Law relating to Customs and Inland Revenue and the National Debt, and to make other provisions for the financial arrangements of the year.

[9th August 1907.]

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled, towards raising the necessary supplies to defray Your Majesty's public expenses, and making an addition to the public revenue, have freely and voluntarily resolved to give and grant unto Your Majesty the several duties hereinafter mentioned; and do therefore most humbly beseech Your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same as follows:—

Part I.

Customs and Excise.

1. Duty on Tea.—The duty of customs payable on tea until the fourteenth day of May nineteen hundred and seven, under the Finance Act 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 8), shall be deemed to have been continued as from that date and shall continue to be charged, levied, and paid until the first day of July nineteen hundred and eight on the importation thereof into Great Britain or Ireland (that is to say):—

Tea, the pound . . . . . fivepence.

2. Continuance of Additional Customs Duties and Drawbacks on Tobacco, Beer, and Spirits.—The additional duties of customs on tobacco, beer, and spirits imposed by sections two, three, four, and five of the Finance Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. c. 7) (including the increased duties imposed by section five of that Act), shall continue to be charged, levied, and paid, and the additional drawback allowed under the said section four shall continue to be allowed, until Parliament otherwise determine, and those duties and that drawback shall be deemed to have been continued as from the first day of July nineteen hundred and seven.

3. Continuance of Additional Excise Duties and Drawbacks on Beer and Spirits.—The additional duties of excise on beer and spirits imposed by sections six and seven of the Finance Act, 1900, shall continue to be charged, levied, and paid, and the additional drawback allowed under the said section six shall continue to be allowed, until Parliament otherwise determine, and those duties and that drawback shall be deemed to have been continued as from the first day of July nineteen hundred and seven.

4. Means of Ascertaining Strength or Weight of Spirits.—(1) The Commissioners of Customs and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may jointly make regulations authorising the use of any means described in the regulations for ascertaining for any purpose the strength or weight of spirits.

(2) Where under any enactment Sykes's hydrometer is directed to be used or may be used for the purpose of ascertaining the strength or weight of spirits, any means so authorised by regulations may be used instead of Sykes's hydrometer, and references to Sykes's hydrometer in any enactment shall be construed accordingly.

(3) Any regulations made under this section shall be published in the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Gazettes, and shall take effect from the date of publication, or such later date as may be mentioned in the regulations for the purpose.

(4) The expression "spirits" in this section has the same meaning as in the Spirits Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. c. 24).

5. AMENDMENT OF THE REVENUE ACT, 1883, AS TO IMPORTED PLATE.—Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in section ten of the Revenue Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. c. 55), and subject to the conditions there set forth, gold and silver plate imported into Great Britain or Ireland may be delivered into the hands of the officers of any assay office selected by the importer though it be not the assay office nearest to the port of importation, and may, upon security being given to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of Customs, be removed to the assay office without being in charge of an officer of customs.

PART II.

STAMPS.

6. EXTENSION OF EXEMPTION FROM STAMP DUTY IN CASE OF CERTAIN AFFIDAVITS AND DECLARATIONS.—The limitation of the exemption numbered (2) under the heading "Affidavit and Statutory Declaration" in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 and 55 Vict. cap. 39), to affidavits or declarations made before a justice of the peace shall cease to have effect.

7. STAMPING OF HIRE-PURCHASE AGREEMENT.—Any agreement for or relating to the supply of goods on hire, whereby the goods in consideration of periodical payments will or may become the property of the person to whom they are supplied, shall be charged with stamp duty as an agreement, or, if under seal (or in Scotland with a clause of registration), as a deed, as the case requires, and the exemption numbered (3) under the heading "Agreement or any Memorandum of an Agreement," in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891 (which exempts agreements for the sale of goods), shall not apply in the case of any such instrument.

8. PROVISIONS AS TO POLICIES OF INSURANCE.—(1) It is hereby declared, for the removal of doubts, that "a policy of insurance for any payment agreed to be made by way of indemnity against loss or damage of or to any property" within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, includes any notice or advertisement in a newspaper or other publication which purports to insure such payment.

(2) The provisions of section one hundred and sixteen of the said Act (which relates to composition for stamp duty on policies of insurance against accident) shall apply to policies of insurance for any payment agreed to be made by way of indemnity against loss or damage of or to any property as they apply to policies of insurance against accident.

(3) Section eleven of the Finance Act, 1899 (62 and 63 Vict. c. 9) (which relates to policies of insurance in respect of injury to workmen), shall be read as if two pounds were substituted for one pound as the amount of the annual premium therein mentioned.

9. PROXIES EXECUTED ABROAD.—So much of subsection (2) of section eighty of the Stamp Act, 1891, as prevents the stamping after execution of a letter or power of attorney or voting paper charged with the duty of one penny shall cease to apply as regards any such instrument which has been first executed at any place out of the United Kingdom, and accordingly any such instrument so executed after the commencement of this Act may be stamped after execution in accordance with section fifteen of the said Act.

10. REDUCTION OF DUTY ON LOAN CAPITAL ISSUED FOR THE PURPOSE OF THE CONVERSION OR CONSOLIDATION OF EXISTING CAPITAL.—(1) Where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioners that the loan capital issued by any local authority, corporation, company, or body of persons, in respect of which a statement has, after the commencement of this Act, been delivered to the Commissioners under section eight of the Finance Act, 1899 (62 and 63 Vict. cap. 9), has been wholly or partly applied for the purpose of the conversion or consolidation of then existing loan capital, that authority, corporation, company, or body of persons, as the case may be, shall be entitled to repayment in respect of the duty charged on the statement so delivered at the rate of two shillings for every hundred pounds of the capital to which the statement relates which is so shown to have been applied for the purpose of the conversion or consolidation of then existing loan capital; but this section shall not apply to any duty payable in respect of a mortgage or marketable security which has been paid on any trust deed or other document securing the loan capital which has been issued.

(2) If it is represented to the Commissioners by any such local authority, corporation, company, or body of persons that loan capital about to be issued by them is to be applied, in whole or in part, for the purpose of the conversion or consolidation of existing loan capital, the Commissioners may postpone the time for the delivery of the statement and the payment of duty under section eight of the Finance Act, 1899, until the capital has been issued or until such other time as the Commissioners think fit for the purpose of enabling the payment and repayment of the duty to take place as one transaction.

11. REMISSION OF STAMP DUTY ON CUSTOMS AND EXCISE DEBENTURES AND CERTIFICATES.—The duty payable under the Stamp Act, 1891, on any debenture or certificate for entitling any person to receive any allowance by way of drawback or otherwise payable out of the revenue of customs or excise, for or in respect of any goods, wares, or merchandise exported or shipped to be exported from the United Kingdom to any part beyond the sea, and on any certificate of any goods, wares, or merchandise having been duly entered inwards, which shall be entered outwards for exportation at the port of importation, or be removed from thence to any other port for the more convenient exportation thereof, where such certificate is issued for enabling a person to obtain a debenture or certificate entitling him to receive a drawback of any duty of customs, shall cease to be payable, and any such debentures or certificates shall not be liable to stamp duty.

PART III.

DEATH DUTIES.

12. AMENDED RATES OF ESTATE DUTY.—The scale set out in the First Schedule to this Act shall, in the case of persons dying on or after the nineteenth day of April nineteen hundred and seven, be substituted for the scale of rates of estate duty set out in section seventeen of the Finance Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. c. 30) (in this Part of this Act referred to as the Principal Act):

Provided that where an interest in expectancy (within the meaning of Part I. of the Principal Act) in any property has before the nineteenth day of April nineteen hundred and seven been bonâ fide sold or mortgaged for full consideration in money or money's worth, then no other duty on that property shall be payable by the purchaser or mortgagee when the interest falls into possession than would have been payable if this section had not passed; and in the case of a mortgage any higher duty payable by the mortgagor shall rank as a charge subsequent to that of the mortgagee.

13. EXTENSION OF POWER TO REMIT DEATH DUTIES.—The power of the Commissioners under subsection (11) of section eight of the principal Act to remit the payment of estate duty or interest thereon shall apply to the other duties which are included in the definition of death duties in subsection (3) of section thirteen of that Act as well as to estate duty.

14. POWER TO ENTERTAIN APPLICATION FOR DISCHARGE FROM CLAIMS FOR ESTATE DUTY MADE AT ANY TIME.—The Commissioners may, if they think fit, entertain any application made for the purpose of subsection (2) of section eleven of the principal Act (which relates to discharge from claims for estate duty), at whatever time the application is made; and, as respects any application so entertained, the provisions of that subsection shall have effect notwithstanding that the application is made before the lapse of the two years mentioned in that subsection.

15. CALCULATION OF THE ALLOWANCE TO BE MADE IN RESPECT OF DUTY PAID BEFORE THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE FINANCE ACT, 1894.—The deduction to be allowed under section twenty-one of the Finance Act 1896 (59 and 60 Vict. c. 28), in respect of death duties previously paid on property on which estate duty is payable shall, instead of being the amount of the duty paid or payable, be the amount which would have been payable on account of the duty if the duty were calculated on the value of the property on which estate duty is payable: Provided that, if as respects any such deduction the person by whom the duty is payable requires the Commissioners, on the first delivery of his account, to calculate the deduction as if this section had not passed, the deduction shall be so calculated.

16. LIMITED AGGREGATION OF CERTAIN SETTLED PROPERTY ABOLISHED.—In the case of persons dying on or after the nineteenth day of April nineteen hundred and seven, any settled property which would, under subsection (2) of section twelve of the Finance Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. c. 7), be aggregated with other property so as to enhance the rate of duty to the limited extent provided in that section, shall, for the purposes of the principal Act, instead of being so aggregated, be treated as an estate by itself.

PART IV.

LOCAL TAXATION ACCOUNT.

17. PROVISION WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN GRANTS TO LOCAL TAXATION ACCOUNTS.—(1) The grants specified in the Second Schedule to this Act shall instead of being charged in manner provided by the Acts relating to those grants, be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund or the growing produce thereof, but in the case of grants which are payable during the continuance of any temporary Act only so long as that Act is continued.

(2) The proceeds of the local taxation (customs and excise) duties, and of the duties on local taxation licences (including any duty charged under subsection (1) of section eight of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 and 60 Vict. c. 36), payable under any Act in force at the commencement of this Act into any local taxation account, shall, instead of being paid into that account, be paid into the Exchequer, and there shall be paid into any such local taxation account out of the Consolidated Fund or the growing produce thereof a sum equal to the amount which would have been paid into that account as the proceeds of the duties if this Act had not passed.

(3) Where under this section or under any other enactment the amount of any sum paid into any local taxation account is made to depend on the proceeds of the duties on local taxation licences, those proceeds shall be calculated, in the event of any alteration of the rate of duties, as if the duties were at the rate in force at the commencement of this Act:

Provided that, if in any year owing to any alteration in the rate of duties the rate of any such duty is higher than the rate in force at the commencement of this Act, and the proceeds of that duty in that year as so calculated are less than the average proceeds of the duty for the three years ending the thirty-first day of March nineteen hundred and seven, the proceeds of the duty instead of being calculated as aforesaid shall be deemed to be the amount of those average proceeds, and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall give their certificates as to the sums ascertained to be the proceeds of those duties accordingly.

(4) In this section the expression "proceeds of duties" includes sums ascertained to be the proceeds of the duties, and any reference in any enactment to the duties or proceeds of the duties referred to in this section shall, so far as relates to the distribution of or mode of dealing with those duties or proceeds, be construed as a reference to the sums to be paid in lieu thereof under this section.

(5) This section shall have effect as from the commencement of the current financial year, and, as respects any payment made or other thing done between the commencement of the current financial year and the date of the passing of this Act, the Treasury may cause such adjustments of accounts to be made as are required to give effect to the provisions of this section.

PART V.

INCOME TAX.

18. INCOME TAX FOR 1907–8.—(1) Income tax for the year beginning on the sixth day of April nineteen hundred and seven shall be charged at the rate of one shilling.

(2) All such enactments relating to income tax as were in force on the fifth day of April nineteen hundred and seven shall, subject to any amendments made by this Act, have full force and effect with respect to the duty of income tax hereby granted.

(3) The annual value of any property which has been adopted for the purpose either of income tax under Schedules A and B in the Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 and 17 Vict. c. 34), or of inhabited house duty, during the year ending on the fifth day of April nineteen hundred and seven, shall be taken as the annual value of such property for the same purpose during the next subsequent year; provided that this subsection—

(a) so far as respects the duty on inhabited houses in Scotland, shall be construed with the substitution of the twenty-fourth day of May for the fifth day of April; and

(b) shall not apply to the Metropolis as defined by the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (32 and 33 Vict. c. 67).

19. Relief in Respect of Earned Income where Total Income Does Not Exceed £2000.—(1) Any individual who claims and proves, in manner provided by this section, that his total income from all sources does not exceed two thousand pounds, and that any part of that income is earned income, shall be entitled, subject to the provisions of this section, to such relief from income tax as will reduce the amount payable on the earned income to the amount which would be payable if the tax were charged on that income at the rate of nine pence.

(2) The relief given by this section shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any exemption or other relief or abatement under the Income Tax Acts, except that where an individual is entitled to relief from income tax under section eight of the Finance Act, 1898 (61 and 62 Vict. c. 10), or, in respect of the payment of premiums, under section fifty-four of the Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 and 17 Vict. c. 34) (as extended by any subsequent enactment), relief shall be given under this section only in respect of such earned income (if any) as remains after deducting therefrom the amount on which he is relieved of income tax under the said sections eight and fifty-four.

(3) Where relief is given under section eight of the Finance Act, 1898, or section fifty-four of the Income Tax Act, 1853, by way of repayment of the tax after relief has been given under this section, the amount repaid shall be adjusted so that the total amount of the relief given under this section and under the said sections eight and fifty-four does not exceed the amount which would have been given if the whole relief had been claimed simultaneously.

(4) An individual who desires relief under this section must, in cases where he is required to make a return for the purpose of the assessment of income tax, claim that relief at the time the return is made and must, in any case, claim that relief before the thirtieth day of September in the year for which the tax is charged.

For the purpose of making a claim for relief under this section with respect to income tax charged under this Act for the current year, any individual may, before the thirtieth day of September nineteen hundred and seven, substitute a fresh return for any return previously made by him.

(5) An individual shall not be entitled to relief under this section in respect of any income the tax on which he is entitled to charge against any other person, or to deduct, retain, or satisfy out of any payment which he is liable to make to any other person.

(6) Subject to the provisions of this section, all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts which relate to claims for exemption, relief, or abatement, or the proof to be given with respect to those claims, shall apply to claims for relief under this section and the proof to be given with respect to those claims.

(7) For the purposes of this section the expression "income" means income as estimated according to the several rules and directions of the Income Tax Acts; and the expression "earned income" means—

(a) any income arising in respect of any remuneration from any office or employment of profit held by the individual, or in respect of any pension, superannuation, or other allowance, deferred pay, or compensation for loss of office given in respect of the past services of the individual or of the husband or parent of the individual in any office or employment of profit, whether the individual or husband or parent of the individual shall have contributed to such pension, superannuation allowance, or deferred pay or not; and

(b) any income from any property which is attached to or forms part of the emoluments of any office or employment of profit held by the individual; and

(c) any income which is charged under Schedules B or D in the Income Tax Act, 1853, or the rules prescribed by Schedule D in the Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. c. 35), and is immediately derived by the individual from the carrying on or exercise by him of his profession, trade, or vocation either as an individual, or, in the case of a partnership, as a partner personally acting therein.

In cases where a wife's profits are deemed to be profits of the husband, any reference in this provision to the individual includes either the husband or the wife.

(8) Section thirty-four of the Finance Act, 1894, shall cease to have effect so far as it gives relief or abatement to persons who are entitled to relief under section eight of the Finance Act, 1898.

20. Special Provisions Applicable to Partners.—Where an individual carrying on or exercising any profession, trade or vocation in partnership with any other person makes any claim for exemption, relief, or abatement under the Income Tax Acts, the income of the individual from the partnership for the year to which the claim relates may be treated separately for the purpose of any such exemption, relief, or abatement; and if so treated shall be deemed to be the share to which he is entitled during the said year in the partnership profits, such profits being estimated according to the several rules and directions of those Acts.

21. Particulars to be Given by Employers.—(1) Every employer, when required to do so by notice from an assessor, shall, within the time limited by the notice, prepare and deliver to the assessor a return of the names and places of residence of any persons employed by him, to whom this provision applies, and of the payments made to those persons in respect of that employment, and section fifty-five of the Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. c. 35), shall apply with respect to any such return as it applies with respect to the lists, declarations, or statements mentioned in that section.

This provision applies to all persons employed by an employer, except persons who are not employed in any other employment, and whose remuneration in the employment for the year does not exceed the sum for the time being fixed as the limit for total exemption from income tax.

(2) Where the employer is a body of persons, corporate or unincorporate (including a company), the secretary of the body, or other officer (by whatever name called) performing the duties of secretary, shall be deemed to be the employer for the purposes of this provision, and any director of a company, or person engaged in the management of a company, shall be deemed to be a person employed.

22. Liability to make Returns.—(1) Every person upon whom notice is served in manner prescribed by section forty-eight of the Income Tax Act, 1842 (which relates to the delivery of notices by assessors), requiring him to make a return of any profits, gains, or income in respect of which he is chargeable with duty under Schedule D or Schedule E in the Income Tax Act, 1853, shall make a return in the form required by the notice, whether he is or is not chargeable with duty, and in default shall be liable to a penalty under section fifty-five of the Income Tax Act, 1842, accordingly:

Provided that a penalty inflicted in the case of a person proceeded against for not complying with this provision, who proves that he was not chargeable to duties, shall not exceed five pounds for any one offence.

(2) The duties imposed on officers of any corporation, company, fraternity, fellowship, or society by sections forty and fifty-four of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and by section eighteen of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1879 (42 and 43 Vict. c. 21), shall in the case of any company, be performed by the secretary of the company or other officer (by whatever name called) performing the duties of secretary.

23. Extension of Time for Certain Proceedings.—(1) Notwithstanding anything in an Acte concerninge Informers, being chapter five of the Acts of the thirty-first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth (31 Eliz. c. 5), or in subsection (4) of section twenty-one of the Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. c. 19), or in subsection (2) of section twenty-two of the Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. c. 21), or in any other enactment, proceedings for the recovery of any fine or penalty incurred under the Income Tax Acts may be commenced within three years next after the fine or penalty is incurred.

(2) The time during which an assessment may be amended or an additional first assessment made under section fifty-two of the Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. c. 19) (which relates to the amendment of assessments), or during which an assessment may be made on the estate of a deceased person under section twenty-four of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. c. 8) (which relates to the power to make such assessments), shall be any time within the year of assessment or within three years after the expiration thereof; and the time during which in cases of omission to charge any person a charge may be made and allowed or signed under section sixty-three of the Taxes Management Act, 1880 (which relates to the powers of surveyors to make such charges), shall be a period of three years after the expiration of the year for which the person ought to have been charged.

(3) Nothing in this section shall affect proceedings for the recovery of fines or penalties incurred before the commencement of this Act, or extend the time during which any assessment may be made or amended, or a charge may be made on any person in respect of income tax charged under any Act passed before the commencement of this Act.

24. Provisions with Respect to Computing Profits by Average of Three Years.—(1) Section one hundred and thirty-three of the Income Tax Act, 1842 (28 and 29 Vict. c. 30), and section six of the Revenue Act, 1865 (which provide for the reduction of assessments or the repayment of duty in certain cases where the profits of the year of assessment fall short of the sum on which the assessment has been made), shall cease to have effect as respects income tax charged for the year beginning the sixth day of April nineteen hundred and seven, or for any subsequent year.

(2) Where a person charged or chargeable with income tax in respect of any profession, trade, or vocation which has been set up or commenced within the period of three years upon the average of which the profits or gains are to be taken under the Income Tax Acts, or within the year of assessment, proves at the end of the year of assessment to the satisfaction of the Commissioners by whom the assessment has been or can be made that the actual profits or gains arising from the profession, trade, or vocation in the year of assessment fall short of the profits or gains as computed in accordance with those Acts, he shall be entitled to be charged on the actual amount of the profits or gains so arising instead of on the amount of the profits or gains so computed, and, if he has paid the full amount of the tax on the profits or gains so computed, be entitled to repayment of the amount overpaid.

(3) Where a profession, trade, or vocation is discontinued in any year, any person charged or chargeable with income tax in respect of that profession, trade, or vocation, shall be entitled to be charged on the actual amount of the profits or gains arising from the profession, trade, or vocation in that year, and shall also, if he proves to the satisfaction of the Commissioners by whom the assessment has been or could have been made that the total amount of the income tax paid during the three previous years in respect of that profession, trade, or vocation, exceeds the total amount which would have been paid if he had been assessed in each of those years on the actual amount of the profits or gains arising in respect of the profession, trade, or vocation, be entitled to repayment of the excess.

25. Payment of Tax on Patent Royalties by Deduction.—(1) In estimating, under any schedule of the Income Tax Acts, the amount of the profits and gains arising from any trade, manufacture, adventure, concern, profession, or vocation, no deduction shall be made on account of any royalty, or other sum, paid in respect of the user of a patent, but the person paying the royalty or sum shall be authorised, on making the payment, to deduct and retain thereout the amount of the rate of income tax chargeable during the period through which the royalty or sum was accruing due.

(2) Subsection (3) of section twenty-four of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 and 52 Vict. c. 8), shall apply to any such royalties or sums as it applies to interest of money or annuities charged with income tax under Schedule D in the Income Tax Act, 1853.

26. Provisions with Respect to Deductions for Wear and Tear of Machinery or Plant.—(1) For the purpose of enabling deductions for wear and tear to be allowed by the additional Commissioners, claims in respect of those deductions shall be included in the annual statement required to be delivered under the Income Tax Acts of the profits or gains of the concern for the purpose of which the machinery or plant is used, and the additional Commissioners in assessing those profits and gains shall make such allowances in respect of those claims as they think just and reasonable.

(2) No deduction for wear and tear or payment on account of any such deduction shall be allowed in any year if the deduction when added to the deductions allowed on that account in any previous years to the person by whom the concern is carried on will make the aggregate amount of the deductions exceed the actual cost to that person of the machinery or plant, including in that actual cost any expenditure in the nature of capital expenditure on the machinery or plant by way of renewal, improvement, or reinstatement.

(3) Where as respects any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern full effect cannot be given to the deduction for wear and tear in any year owing to their being no profits or gains chargeable with income tax in that year, or owing to the profits or gains so chargeable being less than the deduction, the deduction or part of the deduction to which effect has not been given, as the case may be, shall, for the purpose of making the assessment for the following year, be added to the amount of the deduction for wear and tear for that year and deemed to be part of that deduction, or if there is no such deduction for that year, be deemed to be the deduction for that year, and so on for succeeding years.

(4) In this section the expression "deduction for wear and tear" means the deduction allowed, or which would be allowed, under section twelve of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (41 and 42 Vict. c. 15), as representing the diminished value, by reason of wear and tear during the year, of machinery or plant used for the purposes of any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern.

27. POWER OF COMMISSIONERS FOR SPECIAL PURPOSES TO ALLOW RELIEF UNDER S. 23 OF 53 AND 54 VICT. C. 8.—Any application for relief under section twenty-three of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, may be made either to the Commissioners for the general purposes of the Acts relating to income tax as provided in that section or to the Commissioners for the special purposes of those Acts, and the last-named Commissioners shall have the same power under that section as the first-named Commissioners have.

28. DEDUCTIONS BY CLERGYMEN OR MINISTERS OF RELIGION IN RESPECT OF DWELLING-HOUSES IN CERTAIN CASES.—Where a clergyman or minister of any religious denomination pays rent for a dwelling-house, and uses any part thereof mainly and substantially for the purposes of his duty or function as such clergyman or minister, such part of the rent of the dwelling-house, not exceeding one-eighth, as the Commissioners by whom any assessment for income tax is made may allow, shall be treated for the purposes of section fifty-two of the Income Tax Act, 1853, as expenses to which the provisions of that section as to deduction and repayment apply.

PART VI.

NATIONAL DEBT.

29. REDUCTION OF DEBT.—The amount of the permanent annual charge for the National Debt under section one of the Sinking Fund Act, 1875 (38 and 39 Vict. c. 45), shall, during the current financial year, be the sum of twenty-nine and a half million instead of twenty-eight million pounds, and subsection (4) of section seven of the Finance Act, 1905, shall, as respects the current financial year, have effect accordingly.

PART VII.

GENERAL.

30. REPEAL, CONSTRUCTION, AND SHORT TITLE.—(1) The Acts specified in the Third Schedule to this Act are hereby repealed to the extent mentioned in the third column of that Schedule.

(2) Part I. of this Act so far as it relates to duties of customs shall be construed together with the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 and 40 Vict. c. 36), and the Acts amending that Act, and so far as it relates to duties of excise shall be construed together with the Acts which relate to the duties of excise and the management of those duties.

Part II. of this Act shall be construed together with the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 and 55 Vict. c. 39).

Part III. of this Act shall be construed together with the Finance Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. c. 30).

Part V. of this Act shall be construed together with the Income Tax Acts, 1842 and 1853, and any other enactments relating to Income Tax, and those enactments and Part V. of this Act are in this Act referred to as the Income Tax Acts.

(3) This Act may be cited as the Finance Act, 1907.

CHAPTER XV.

An Act to enable Provisional Orders to be made for regulating Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries.

[21*st August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. POWER OF BOARD OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES TO MAKE ORDERS.—With a view to the improvement and development of the salmon fisheries or freshwater fisheries, or either of them, within any area, the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries may, upon such application as is hereinafter mentioned, make a provisional order for the regulation of any such fisheries within the area defined by the order.

2. CONTENTS OF THE ORDER.—(1) A provisional order under this Act may provide for—(a) defining the area within which the order is to apply;

(b) the constitution and incorporation of a board of conservators;

(c) applying to a board of conservators so constituted, and an area so defined, either without modification, or subject to such modifications as may be contained in the order, all or any of the provisions of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts with respect to boards of conservators and fishery districts constituted under those Acts;

(d) the imposition, collection, and recovery of contributions to be assessed on private fisheries regulated by the order or on the owners or occupiers thereof;

(e) enabling the conservators to purchase or take on lease any part of the foreshore specified in the order, together with any easement over any adjoining land necessary for securing access to the foreshore so acquired, and by themselves or their lessees to erect on the foreshore so acquired and work fixed engines for salmon;

Provided that any such order—

(i) shall not authorise a fixed engine for salmon to be worked for a period exceeding five years unless the authority is from time to time extended by licence of the Board for such term as may be specified in the licence and not exceeding at any one time five years, and the Board shall not grant any such licence until they have inquired into the effect of the working of the engine on the salmon fisheries within the area; and

(ii) shall provide that all rents and profits of the fixed engines for salmon authorised by the order to be worked by the conservators shall be appropriated for the purpose of securing the restriction or abolition of the use in the area of nets and other obstructions to the passage of salmon :

(f) modifying in relation to the fisheries within the area any of the provisions of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts which relate to the regulation of fisheries, or of any local Act relating to any fishery within the area;

(g) abolishing any board of conservators established under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts within the area, and transferring their property and liabilities to the board of conservators constituted by the order, and making such adjustments between the two bodies as may appear to the Board to be necessary or expedient;

(h) requiring returns to be made by persons taking fish within the area;

(i) the payment out of any funds in the hands of the board of conservators constituted by the order of the costs of the applicants in obtaining the order and its confirmation by Parliament;

(j) the general regulation of the fisheries within the area, and may contain any incidental, consequential, or supplemental provisions, including provisions for payment of compensation to persons injuriously affected by the order, which may appear to be necessary or proper for the purposes of the order.

(2) For the purpose of the acquisition of any part of the foreshore or any easement necessary for giving access thereto authorised to be taken compulsorily under any such provisional order, the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts which relate to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement, and to the entry upon lands by the promoters of the undertaking, are, subject to the modifications set out in the schedule to this Act, incorporated with this Act.

(3) The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries shall make rules providing for proper notice being given of an application for the inclusion in a provisional order of a power to acquire compulsorily any part of the foreshore or any easement over adjoining land to owners, lessees, and occupiers of the foreshore or land affected, and also for public notice being given of the application by advertisement.

(4) A provisional order under this Act shall not apply to any waters in which the business of artificially propagating or rearing salmon or trout is carried on under a licence granted by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, and any such licence may be granted by the Board, subject to such conditions (if any) as they think fit, and may be revoked if the Board are of opinion that any condition has not been observed.

3. Application for the Order.—A provisional order under this Act shall not be made except on the application of a board of conservators constituted under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts, or of a county council, or of persons who in the opinion of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries are the owners of one-fourth at least in value of the private fisheries proposed to be regulated or constitute a majority of the persons holding licences to fish in public waters within the area of the proposed order, and every such application shall be advertised by the applicants in such manner as the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries direct.

4. Procedure for Making the Order.—(1) The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, if they consider that a primâ facie case is made out by the applicants for the making of a provisional order under this Act, shall hold a local inquiry (of which due notice shall be given) by an inspector or other officer of the Board, who shall report the result of his inquiry to the Board, and they, if satisfied of the propriety of making an order, shall prepare a draft, and shall once in each of two successive weeks notify the making of the draft order in some newspaper in general circulation within the area to which the draft relates, and the notification shall specify the place where copies of the draft can be inspected and obtained, and the time within which and the manner in which notices of objection to the draft are to be sent to the Board.

(2) The Board may, if they think it expedient, and shall, if any county council having authority within the area of the proposed order object, hold a local inquiry by an inspector or other officer of the Board with respect to any objections made to the draft order, and shall, after considering all such objections and the report of the officer who held the inquiry (if any) thereon, settle the terms of the draft order.

5. CONFIRMATION BY PARLIAMENT.—(1) The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries may submit to Parliament for confirmation any provisional order made by them in pursuance of this Act, and any such order shall be of no force whatever unless and until it is confirmed by Parliament.

(2) The Board may revoke either wholly or partially any such order before the order is confirmed by Parliament, but such revocation shall not be made whilst the Bill confirming the order is pending in either House of Parliament.

(3) If while the Bill confirming any such order is pending in either House of Parliament a petition is presented against any order comprised therein, the Bill, so far as it relates to such order, shall be referred to a Select Committee, and the petitioner shall be allowed to appear and oppose as in the case of private Bills.

(4) Any such order may be repealed, altered, or amended by a further provisional order made by the Board in like manner as the original order, and confirmed by Parliament.

6. EXPENSES.—Any expenses incurred by any board of conservators or county council under this Act in respect of any provisional order or confirming Bill made thereunder, or in respect of any application for any such order, shall, whether or not the application for the order was made by the board or the council, be defrayed—

(a) in the case of a board of conservators, as expenses incurred by them under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts; and (b) in the case of a county council, out of the county fund.

7. CONSENTS IN CASE OF CROWN AND DUCHY FORESHORE AND LAND.—Where any portion of the foreshore proposed to be comprised in a provisional order under this Act, or any fishery proposed to be affected by any such order, or any land over which it is proposed to acquire an easement under any such order, belongs to His Majesty in right of the Crown, or forms part of the possessions of the Duchy of Lancaster or the Duchy of Cornwall, the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries shall not make the Order—

(a) In the case of any foreshore under the management of the Commissioners of Woods, or of any fishery or land belonging to His Majesty in right of the Crown, without the consent of the Commissioners of Woods, or one of them;

(b) In the case of any foreshore under the management of the Board of Trade, without the consent of the Board of Trade;

(c) In the case of any foreshore or fishery or land forming part of the possessions of the Duchy of Lancaster, without the consent of the Chancellor of the Duchy;

(d) In the case of any foreshore or fishery or land forming part of the possessions of the Duchy of Cornwall, without the consent of the Duke of Cornwall, or other the persons for the time being empowered to dispose for any purpose of the lands of the Duchy.

8. SHORT TITLE, EXTENT, AND CONSTRUCTION.—(1) This Act may be cited as the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1907, and may be cited with the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts, 1861 to 1892.

(2) This Act shall not apply to Scotland (except the River Esk, in Dumfriesshire, and its tributaries) or to Ireland, or to the River Tweed, as defined by bye-law under the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1862 (25 and 26 Vict. c. 97), or to its tributaries.

(3) In this Act the expression "Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts" means the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Acts, 1861 to 1892, and the Fisheries (Norfolk and Suffolk) Act, 1896 (59 and 60 Vict. c. 18), and other expressions have the same meaning as in those Acts.

SCHEDULE.

MODIFICATIONS OF THE LANDS CLAUSES ACTS (S. 2).

The following modifications shall have effect in the construction of the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts incorporated by this Act for the purposes thereof:—

(a) The expression "special Act" means this Act inclusive of any provisional order authorising the compulsory acquisition of any part of the foreshore, except that the period of three years mentioned in section one hundred and twenty-three of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, shall be calculated from the passing of the Act confirming the provisional order;

(b) The expression "the promoters" means the board of conservators constituted by the order; and

(c) The expression "land" includes easements in or relating to land.

CHAPTER XVI.

An Act to Facilitate the Admission in Evidence of Statutes passed by the Legislatures of British Possessions and Protectorates, including Cyprus. [21*st August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. PROOF OF STATUTES OF BRITISH POSSESSIONS.—(1) Copies of Acts, ordinances, and statutes passed (whether before or after the passing of this Act) by the Legislature of any British possession, and of orders, regulations and other instruments issued or made, whether before or after the passing of this Act, under the authority of any such Act, ordinance, or statute, if purporting to be printed by the Government printer, shall be received in evidence by all courts of justice in the United Kingdom without any proof being given that the copies were so printed.

(2) If any person prints any copy or pretended copy of any such Act, ordinance, statute, order, regulation or instrument which falsely purports to have been printed by the Government printer, or tenders in evidence any such copy or pretended copy which falsely purports to have been so printed, knowing that it was not so printed, he shall on conviction be liable to be sentenced to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding twelve months.

(3) In this Act—

The expression "Government printer" means, as respects any British possession, the printer purporting to be the printer authorised to print the Acts, ordinances, or statutes of the Legislature of that possession, or otherwise to be the Government printer of that possession:

The expression "British possession" means any part of His Majesty's dominions exclusive of the United Kingdom, and, where parts of those dominions are under both a central and a local Legislature, shall include both all parts under the central Legislature and each part under a local Legislature.

(4) Nothing in this Act shall affect the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865 (28 and 29 Vict c. 63).

(5) His Majesty may by Order in Council extend this Act to Cyprus and any British protectorate, and where so extended this Act shall apply as if Cyprus or the protectorate were a British possession, and with such other necessary adaptations as may be made by the Order.

2. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the Evidence (Colonial Statutes) Act, 1907.

PROBATION OF OFFENDERS ACT, 1907.

CHAPTER XVII.

An Act to permit the Release on Probation of Offenders in certain cases, and for other matters incidental thereto. [21*st August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :—

1. POWER OF COURTS TO PERMIT CONDITIONAL RELEASE OF OFFENDERS.—(1) Where any person is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an offence punishable by such court, and the court thinks that the charge is proved, but is of opinion that, having regard to the character, antecedents, age, health, or mental condition of the person charged, or to the trivial nature of the offence, or to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed, it is inexpedient to inflict any punishment or any other than a nominal punishment, or that it is expedient to release the offender on probation, the court may, without proceeding to conviction, make an order either—

(i) dismissing the information or charge ; or

(ii) discharging the offender conditionally on his entering into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to be of good behaviour and to appear for conviction and sentence when called on at any time during such period, not exceeding three years, as may be specified in the order.

(2) Where any person has been convicted on indictment of any offence punishable with imprisonment, and the court is of opinion that, having regard to the character, antecedents, age, health, or mental condition of the person charged, or to the trivial nature of the offence, or to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed, it is inexpedient to inflict any punishment or any other than a nominal punishment, or that it is expedient to release the offender on probation, the court may, in lieu of imposing a sentence of imprisonment, make an order discharging the offender conditionally on his entering into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to be of good behaviour and to appear for sentence when called on at any time during such period, not exceeding three years, as may be specified in the order.

(3) The court may, in addition to any such order, order the offender to pay such damages for injury or compensation for loss (not exceeding in the case of a court of summary jurisdiction ten pounds, or, if a higher limit is fixed by any enactment relating to the offence, that higher limit) and to pay such costs of the proceedings as the court thinks reasonable ; and, if the offender is under the age of sixteen years, and it appears to the court that the parent or guardian of the offender has conduced to the commission of the offence, the court may under and in accordance with the Youthful Offenders Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7 c. 20), order payment of such damages and costs by such parent or guardian.

(4) Where an order under this section is made by a court of summary jurisdiction, the order shall, for the purpose of revesting or restoring stolen property, and of enabling the court to make orders as to the restitution or delivery of property to the owner and as to the payment of money upon or in connexion with such restitution or delivery, have the like effect as a conviction.

2. PROBATION ORDERS AND CONDITIONS OF RECOGNIZANCES.—(1) A recognizance ordered to be entered into under this Act shall, if the court so order, contain a condition that the offender be under the supervision of such person as may be named in the order during the period specified in the order and such other conditions for securing such supervision as may be specified in the order, and an order requiring the insertion of such conditions as aforesaid in the recognizance is in this Act referred to as a probation order.

(2) A recognizance under this Act may contain such additional conditions as the court may, having regard to the particular circumstances of the case, order to be inserted therein with respect to all or any of the following matters :—

(a) for prohibiting the offender from associating with thieves and other undesirable persons, or from frequenting undesirable places ;

(b) as to abstention from intoxicating liquor, where the offence was drunkenness or an offence committed under the influence of drink ;

(c) generally for securing that the offender should lead an honest and industrious life.

(2) The court by which a probation order is made shall furnish to the offender a notice in writing stating in simple terms the conditions he is required to observe.

3. Probation Officers.—(1) There may be appointed as probation officer or officers for a petty sessional division such person or persons of either sex as the authority having power to appoint a clerk to the justices of that division may determine, and a probation officer when acting under a probation order shall be subject to the control of petty sessional courts for the division for which he is so appointed.

(2) There shall be appointed, where circumstances permit, special probation officers, to be called children's probation officers, who shall, in the absence of any reasons to the contrary, be named in a probation order made in the case of an offender under the age of sixteen.

(3) The person named in any probation order shall,—

(a) where the court making the order is a court of summary jurisdiction, be selected from amongst the probation officers for the petty sessional division in or for which the court acts; or

(b) where the court making the order is a court of assize or a court of quarter sessions, be selected from amongst the probation officers for the petty sessional division from which the person charged was committed for trial:

Provided that the person so named may, if the court considers it expedient on account of the place of residence of the offender, or for any other special reason, be a probation officer for some other petty sessional division, and may, if the court considers that the special circumstances of the case render it desirable, be a person who has not been appointed to be probation officer for any petty sessional division.

(4) A probation officer appointed for a petty sessional division may be paid such salary as the authority having the control of the fund out of which the salary of the clerk to the justices of that petty sessional division is paid may determine, and if not so paid by salary may receive such remuneration for acting under a probation order as the court making the order thinks fit, not exceeding such remuneration as may be allowed by the regulations of such authority as aforesaid, and may in either case be paid such out-of-pocket expenses as may be allowed under such regulations as aforesaid, and the salary or remuneration and expenses shall be paid by that authority out of the said funds.

(5) A person named in a probation order not being a probation officer for a petty sessional division may be paid such remuneration and out-of-pocket expenses out of such fund as the court making the probation order may direct, not exceeding such as may be allowed under the regulations of the authority having control of the fund out of which the remuneration is directed to be paid.

(6) The person named in a probation order may at any time be relieved of his duties, and in any such case, or in case of the death of the person so named, another person may be substituted by the court before which the offender is bound by his recognizance to appear for conviction or sentence, or, if he be a probation officer for a petty sessional division, by a court to whose control that officer is subject.

(7) In the application of this Act to the City of London and the metropolitan police court district, the city and each division of that district shall be deemed to be a petty sessional division.

4. Duties of Probation Officers.—It shall be the duty of a probation officer, subject to the directions of the court—

(a) to visit or receive reports from the person under supervision at such reasonable intervals as may be specified in the probation order or, subject thereto, as the probation officer may think fit;

(b) to see that he observes the conditions of his recognizance;

(c) to report to the court as to his behaviour;

(d) to advise, assist, and befriend him, and, when necessary, to endeavour to find him suitable employment.

5. Power to Vary Conditions of Release.—The court before which any person is bound by his recognizance under this Act to appear for conviction or sentence may, upon the application of the probation officer, and after notice to the offender, vary the conditions of the recognizance and may, on being satisfied that the conduct of that person has been such as to make it unneccessary that he should remain longer under supervision, discharge the recognizance.

6. Provision in Case of Offender Failing to Observe Conditions of Release.—(1) If the court before which an offender is bound by his recognizance under this Act to appear for conviction or sentence, or any court of summary jurisdiction, is satisfied by information on oath that the offender has failed to observe any of the conditions of his recognizance, it may issue a warrant for his apprehension, or may, if it thinks fit, instead of issuing a warrant in the first instance, issue a summons to the offender and his sureties (if any) requiring him or them to attend at such court and at such time as may be specified in the summons.

(2) The offender, when apprehended, shall, if not brought forthwith before the court before which he is bound by his recognizance to appear for conviction or sentence, be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction.

(3) The court before which an offender on apprehension is brought, or before which he appears in pursuance of such summons as aforesaid, may, if it is not the court before which he is bound by his recognizance to appear for conviction or sentence, remand him to custody or on bail until he can be brought before the last-mentioned court.

(4) An offender so remanded to custody may be committed during remand to any prison to which the court having power to convict or sentence him has power to commit prisoners. In the case of a child or young person under the age of sixteen, he shall, if remanded, be dealt with wherever practicable in accordance with the provisions of section four, subsection one, of the Youthful Offenders Act, 1901.

(5) A court before which a person is bound by his recognizance to appear for conviction and sentence, on being satisfied that he has failed to observe any condition of his recognizance, may forthwith, without further proof of his guilt, convict and sentence him for the original offence or, if the case was one in which the court in the first instance might, under section fifteen of the Industrial Schools Act, 1866 (29 and 30 Vict. c. 118), have ordered the offender to be sent to a certified industrial school, and the offender is still apparently under the age of twelve years, make such an order.

7. Power to make Rules.—The Secretary of State may make rules for carrying this Act into effect, and in particular for prescribing such matters incidental to the appointment, resignation, and removal of probation officers, and the performance of their duties, and the reports to be made by them, as may appear necessary.

8. Application to Scotland.—This Act shall apply to Scotland, subject to the following modifications:—

(1) There may be appointed as probation officers for a district being a royal, parliamentary, or police burgh, or a county outwith the police boundaries of any such burgh, such persons as the burgh magistrates may determine for the burgh and the sheriff for the county; and a probation officer when acting under a probation order shall be subject to the control of the burgh police court or sheriff court, as the case may be;

(2) The immediately preceding subsection shall be substituted for subsection one of section three of this Act, and references in this Act to a petty sessional division shall be construed as references to a district;

(3) The expression "court of summary jurisdiction" where occurring in section three of this Act shall include the sheriff sitting with a jury;

(4) "Bond" shall be substituted for "recognizance," the "Secretary for Scotland" shall be substituted for "the Secretary of State," and "the High Court of Justiciary" shall be substituted for "a court of assize or a court of quarter sessions";

(5) The authority having power to regulate the remuneration of probation officers shall be the town council in a burgh and the county council in a county, and such remuneration shall be paid out of the burgh general or police assessment or the county general assessment, as the case may be.

9. Application to Ireland.—In the application of this Act to Ireland "Lord Lieutenant" shall be substituted for "Secretary of State," and each division of the police district of Dublin metropolis shall be deemed to be a petty sessional division.

7 EDWARD 7, CHAPTER 17.

10. SHORT TITLE AND REPEAL.—(1) This Act may be cited as the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907.

(2) The enactments mentioned in the schedule to this Act shall be repealed to the extent specified in the third column of that schedule.

(3) This Act shall come into operation on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

BUTTER AND MARGARINE ACT, 1907.

CHAPTER XXI.

An Act to make further provision with respect to the Manufacture, Importation, and Sale of Butter and Margarine and similar Substances. [21*st August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :—

1. REGISTRATION OF FACTORIES AND CONSIGNMENTS.—(1) The provisions of section nine of the Margarine Act, 1887 (50 and 51 Vict. c. 29), as amended by section seven of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 and 63 Vict. c. 51), relating to the registration of manufactories of margarine, shall, with the necessary adaptations, apply to—

(a) Butter factories, that is to say, any premises on which by way of trade butter is blended, reworked, or subjected to any other treatment, but not so as to cease to be butter ; and

(b) Any premises on which there is manufactured any milk-blended butter (that is to say, any mixture produced by mixing or blending butter with milk or cream other than condensed milk or cream) or on which there is carried on the business of a wholesale dealer in milk-blended butter.

(2) The provisions of section seven of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, relating to registers of consignments of margarine, shall, with the necessary adaptations, apply to consignments of milk-blended butter.

(3) Premises shall not be used as a butter factory if they form part of or communicate, otherwise than by a public street or road, with any other premises which are required to be registered under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts or under paragraph (b) of this section, and if any premises are so used the occupier thereof shall be guilty of an offence under this Act, and the local authority shall remove from the register of butter factories kept by them any premises used as a butter factory contrary to this provision :

Provided that this subsection shall not apply to premises which on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and seven were being used as a butter factory and formed part of or communicated with premises which were then registered under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, if and so long as the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries so direct.

2. INSPECTION OF FACTORIES.—(1) Any officer of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries or of the Local Government Board shall have power to enter at all reasonable times any premises registered under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts or this Act, and to inspect any process of manufacture, blending, reworking, or treatment used therein, and to take samples for analysis of any butter, margarine, margarine cheese, milk-blended butter, or of any article capable of being used in the manufacture, treatment, or adulteration of any such article as aforesaid.

(2) An officer of a local authority who is authorised to procure samples under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts shall, if specially authorised in that behalf by the local authority, have the like powers of entry, inspection, and sampling as regards any premises registered with the authority as a butter factory.

(3) If the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries have reason to believe—

(a) that on any unregistered premises there is carried on any process of manufacture, blending, reworking, or treatment or any wholesale dealing which under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts or this Act cannot be carried on except on registered premises ; or

(b) that on any premises butter is by way of trade either made or stored, and that for the purposes of those Acts inspection is desirable, the Board may specially authorise any officer of the Board to enter the premises, and in such case the officer shall have the like powers of entry, inspection, and sampling as if the premises were registered.

(4) Where under this section a special authority is required, an officer of the Board or of a local authority shall not be entitled to exercise any of his powers under this section unless, if so requested by or on behalf of the occupier of the premises to be entered, he produces his authority.

(5) Subsection (2) of section seven of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, is hereby repealed.

3. Prohibition of Adulterants in Butter Factories.—If any substance intended to be used for the adulteration of butter is found in any butter factory, the occupier of the factory shall be guilty of an offence under this Act, and if any oil or fat capable of being so used is found it shall be deemed to be intended to be so used, unless the contrary is proved.

4. Limit of Moisture in Butter, Margarine, and Milk-Blended Butter.—(1) If any butter which, when prepared for sale or consignment, contains more than sixteen per cent. of water is in any butter factory, or if any margarine which, when prepared for sale or consignment, contains more than sixteen per cent. of water is in any margarine factory, or if any such butter or margarine is consigned from a butter factory or margarine factory, the occupier of the factory or consignor, as the case may be, shall (whether the excess of moisture is due to adulteration or not) be guilty of an offence under this Act, unless the occupier or consignor proves to the satisfaction of the court that the butter or margarine was not made, blended, reworked, or treated in the factory.

(2) Any person who manufactures, sells, or exposes or offers for sale, or has in his possession for the purpose of sale, any milk-blended butter which contains more than twenty-four per cent. of water, shall be guilty of an offence under this Act.

5. Provisions as to the Importation of Butter, Margarine, and Milk-Blended Butter.—(1) There shall be included in the list of articles importation of which is made an offence by section one of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, the following articles:—

(e) Butter containing more than sixteen per cent. of water;

(f) Margarine containing more than sixteen per cent. of water, or more than ten per cent. of butter fat;

(g) Milk-blended butter containing more than twenty-four per cent. of water;

(h) Milk-blended butter, except in packages conspicuously marked with such name as may be approved by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries for the purpose;

(j) Butter, margarine, or milk-blended butter which contains a preservative prohibited by any regulation made under this Act, or an amount of a preservative in excess of the limit allowed by any such regulation; and in the said section the words "adulterated or impoverished butter (other than margarine) or," and the words "butter or" shall be repealed.

(2) The maximum fine for an offence under the said section one, as amended by this section, shall, where the article in respect of which the offence was committed is butter, margarine, margarine cheese, or milk-blended butter, be either such as is provided in the said section one, or, at the election of the Commissioners of Customs, a fine equal to the value of the goods imported bearing the same mark or description, to be estimated and taken according to the rate and price for which goods of the like kind but of the best quality were sold at or about the time of the importation.

(3) In any proceeding under the said section one as amended by this section the certificate of the principal chemist of the Government Laboratories, or, if the person who made the analysis be called as a witness, the evidence of that person, that an imported substance is margarine or milk-blended butter shall raise a presumption, until the contrary is proved, that the substance is margarine or milk-blended butter, and the defendant shall not be entitled to require the person who made the analysis to be called as a witness unless he shall, at least three clear days before the return day, give notice to the prosecutor that he requires his attendance, and deposit with the prosecutor a sum sufficient to cover the reasonable costs and expenses of his attendance, which costs and expenses shall be paid by the defendant in the event of his conviction.

(4) Where a sample taken under the said section one as amended by this section is certified by the principal chemist to be margarine or milk-blended butter the Commissioners of Customs shall upon receiving the certificate forthwith notify the importer thereof.

BUTTER AND MARGARINE ACT, 1907.

6. REGULATIONS AS TO MILK-SOLIDS IN BUTTER.—The power of making regulations under section four of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, shall extend to making regulations as to the proportion of any milk-solid other than milk-fat in any sample of butter or milk-blended butter.

7. REGULATIONS AS TO PRESERVATIVES.—(1) The Local Government Board may, after such inquiry as they deem necessary, make regulations for prohibiting the use as a preservative of any substance specified in such regulations in the manufacture or preparation for sale of butter, margarine, or milk-blended butter, or for limiting the extent to which, either generally or as regards any particular substance or substances, preservatives may be used in the manufacture or preparation for sale of butter, margarine, or milk-blended butter.

(2) Any regulations made under this section shall be notified in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette as the case may require, and shall also be made known in such other manner as the Local Government Board may direct.

(3) Any person who manufactures, sells, or exposes or offers for sale, or has in his possession for the purpose of sale, any butter, margarine, or milk-blended butter which contains a preservative prohibited by a regulation under this section, or an amount of a preservative in excess of the limit allowed by any such regulation, shall be guilty of an offence under this Act.

8. MARKING OF WRAPPERS, ETC., USED IN CONNEXION WITH MARGARINE.—If in any wrapper enclosing margarine, or on any package containing margarine, or on any label attached to a parcel of margarine, or in any advertisement or invoice of margarine a person dealing in margarine describes it by any name other than either "margarine," or a name combining the word "margarine" with a fancy or other descriptive name approved by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries and printed in type not larger than and in the same colour as the word "margarine," he shall be guilty of an offence under this Act.

9. REGULATION OF SALE OF MILK-BLENDED BUTTER.—(1) Milk-blended butter shall be dealt with under such name or names as may be approved by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries and under the conditions applicable to the sale or description of margarine, with the substitution of an approved name for the word "margarine," and with this modification, that, in any case where, in order to comply with those conditions, the article is delivered to the purchaser in a wrapper, there shall, in addition to the approved name, be printed on the wrapper in such manner as the Board approve such description of the article, setting out the percentage of moisture or water contained therein, as may be approved by the Board.

(2) Milk-blended butter, whenever forwarded by any public conveyance, shall be duly consigned under the name which, as respects the article consigned, has been approved by the Board under this section; subject to this modification, section eight of the Margarine Act, 1887, shall apply to milk-blended butter in like manner as it applies to margarine.

(3) If any person deals with, sells, or exposes or offers for sale, or has in his possession for the purpose of sale, or describes any milk-blended butter contrary to the provisions of this section, he shall be guilty of an offence under this Act, but any defence which would be a defence under section seven of the Margarine Act, 1887, as respects margarine, shall be a defence under this section as respects milk-blended butter.

10. NAMES OF MARGARINE, ETC.—A name shall not be approved by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries for use in connexion with margarine if it refers to or is suggestive of butter or anything connected with the dairy interest, nor shall such a name be approved as a name under which milk-blended butter may be imported or dealt with.

11. PENALTIES FOR OFFENCES.—(1) Any person guilty of an offence under this Act shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts for a first offence to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds, and for a second offence to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, and for a third or any subsequent offence to a fine not exceeding one hundred pounds, and in cases where imprisonment can be inflicted under section seventeen of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, to such imprisonment as is by that section authorised.

(2) Section five of the Margarine Act, 1887 (which exempts employers from liability in certain cases), and section eleven of the same Act (which relates to the appropriation of penalties), and section twelve of the same Act (which relates to proceedings under that Act), shall apply to proceedings under this Act, with the substitution of references to this Act for references to the Margarine Act, 1887.

12. AMENDMENT OF SECT. 8 OF MARGARINE ACT, 1887.—Except in the Administrative County of London, section eight of the Margarine Act, 1887, shall have effect as if the words "inspector of weights and measures" were inserted after the word "nuisances."

13. DEFINITION OF MARGARINE.—(1) For the purposes of the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts and this Act the expression "margarine" shall mean any article of food, whether mixed with butter or not, which resembles butter and is not milk-blended butter.

(2) The above definition shall be substituted for the definition of margarine in the Margarine Act, 1887.

14. SHORT TITLE, CONSTRUCTION, AND COMMENCEMENT.—(1) This Act may be cited as the Butter and Margarine Act, 1907, and shall be construed as one with the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, and may be cited with the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts as the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 to 1907.

(2) This Act shall come into operation on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS ACT, 1907.

CHAPTER XXIV.

An Act to establish Limited Partnerships. [28*th August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited for all purposes as the Limited Partnerships Act, 1907.

2. COMMENCEMENT OF ACT.—This Act shall come into operation on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

3. INTERPRETATION OF TERMS.—In the construction of this Act the following words and expressions shall have the meanings respectively assigned to them in this section, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction:—

"Firm," "firm name," and "business" have the same meanings as in the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. c. 39).

"General partner" shall mean any partner who is not a limited partner as defined by this Act.

4. DEFINITION AND CONSTITUTION OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.—(1) From and after the commencement of this Act limited partnerships may be formed in the manner and subject to the conditions by this Act provided.

(2) A limited partnership shall not consist, in the case of a partnership carrying on the business of banking, of more than ten persons, and, in the case of any other partnership, of more than twenty persons, and must consist of one or more persons called general partners, who shall be liable for all debts and obligations of the firm, and one or more persons to be called limited partners, who shall at the time of entering into such partnership contribute thereto a sum or sums as capital or property valued at a stated amount, and who shall not be liable for the debts or obligations of the firm beyond the amount so contributed.

(3) A limited partner shall not during the continuance of the partnership, either directly or indirectly, draw out or receive back any part of his contribution, and if he does so draw out or receive back any such part shall be liable for the debts and obligations of the firm up to the amount so drawn out or received back.

(4) A body corporate may be a limited partner.

5. REGISTRATION OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIP REQUIRED.—Every limited partnership must be registered as such in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or in default thereof it shall be deemed to be a general partnership, and every limited partner shall be deemed to be a general partner.

6. MODIFICATIONS OF GENERAL LAW IN CASE OF LIMITED PARNERSHIPS.—(1) A limited partner shall not take part in the management of the partnership business, and shall not have power to bind the firm:

Provided that a limited partner may by himself or his agent at any time inspect the books of the firm and examine into the state and prospects of the partnership business, and may advise with the partners thereon.

If a limited partner takes part in the management of the partnership business he shall be liable for all debts and obligations of the firm incurred while he so takes part in the management as though he were a general partner.

(2) A limited partnership shall not be dissolved by the death or bankruptcy of a limited partner, and the lunacy of a limited partner shall not be a ground for dissolution of the partnership by the court unless the lunatic's share cannot be otherwise ascertained and realised.

(3) In the event of the dissolution of a limited partnership its affairs shall be wound up by the general partners unless the court otherwise orders.

(4) Applications to the court to wind up a limited partnership shall be by petition under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, and the provisions of those Acts relating to the winding-up of companies by the court and of the rules made thereunder (including provisions as to fees) shall, subject to such modifications (if any) as the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the President of the Board of Trade, may by rules provide, apply to the winding-up by the court of limited partnerships, with the substitution of general partners for directors.

(5) Subject to any agreement expressed or implied between the partners—

(a) Any difference arising as to ordinary matters connected with the partnership business may be decided by a majority of the general partners;

(b) A limited partner may, with the consent of the general partners, assign his share in the partnership, and upon such an assignment the assignee shall become a limited partner with all the rights of the assignor;

(c) The other partners shall not be entitled to dissolve the partnership by reason of any limited partner suffering his share to be charged for his separate debt;

(d) A person may be introduced as a partner without the consent of the existing limited partners;

(e) A limited partner shall not be entitled to dissolve the partnership by notice.

7. Law as to Private Partnerships to Apply where not Excluded by this Act.—Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. c. 39), and the rules of equity and of common law applicable to partnerships, except so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of the last-mentioned Act, shall apply to limited partnerships.

8. Manner and Particulars of Registration.—The registration of a limited partnership shall be effected by sending by post or delivering to the registrar at the register office in that part of the United Kingdom in which the principal place of business of the limited partnership is situated or proposed to be situated a statement signed by the partners containing the following particulars:—

(a) The firm name;

(b) The general nature of the business;

(c) The principal place of business;

(d) The full name of each of the partners;

(e) The term, if any, for which the partnership is entered into, and the date of its commencement;

(f) A statement that the partnership is limited, and the description of every limited partner as such;

(g) The sum contributed by each limited partner, and whether paid in cash or how otherwise.

9. Registration of Changes in Partnerships.—(1) If during the continuance of a limited partnership any change is made or occurs in—

(a) the firm name,

(b) the general nature of the business,

(c) the principal place of business,

(d) the partners or the name of any partner,

(e) the term or character of the partnership,

(f) the sum contributed by any limited partner,

(g) the liability of any partner by reason of his becoming a limited instead of a general partner or a general instead of a limited partner, a statement, signed by the firm, specifying the nature of the change shall within seven days be sent by post or delivered to the registrar at the register office in that part of the United Kingdom in which the partnership is registered.

(2) If default is made in compliance with the requirements of this section each of the general partners shall on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts be liable to a fine not exceeding one pound for each day during which the default continues.

10. Advertisement in Gazette of Statement of General Partner Becoming a Limited Partner and of Assignment of Share of Limited Partner.—(1) Notice of any arrangement or transaction under which any person will cease to be a general partner in any firm, and will become a limited partner in that firm, or under which the share of a limited partner in a firm will be assigned to any person, shall be forthwith advertised in the Gazette, and until notice of the arrangement or transaction is so advertised, the arrangement or transaction shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be of no effect.

(2) For the purposes of this section, the expression "the Gazette" means—

In the case of a limited partnership registered in England, the London Gazette;

LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS ACT, 1907.

In the case of a limited partnership registered in Scotland, the Edinburgh Gazette;
In the case of a limited partnership registered in Ireland, the Dublin Gazette.

11. Ad Valorem Stamp Duty on Contributions by Limited Partners.—The statement of the amount contributed by a limited partner, and a statement of any increase in that amount, sent to the registrar for registration under this Act, shall be charged with an ad valorem stamp duty of five shillings for every one hundred pounds, and any fraction of one hundred pounds over any multiple of one hundred pounds, of the amount so contributed, or of the increase of that amount, as the case may be; and in default of payment of stamp duty thereon as herein required, the duty with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per annum from the date of delivery of such statement shall be a joint and several debt to His Majesty, recoverable from the partners, or any of them, in the said statements named, or, in the case of an increase, from all or any of the said partners whose discontinuance in the firm shall not, before the date of delivery of such statement of increase, have been duly notified to the registrar.

12. Making False Returns to be Misdemeanor.—Every one commits a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for a term not exceeding two years, who makes, signs, sends, or delivers for the purpose of registration under this Act any false statement known by him to be false.

13. Registrar to File Statement and Issue Certificate of Registration.—On receiving any statement made in pursuance of this Act the registrar shall cause the same to be filed, and he shall send by post to the firm from whom such statement shall have been received a certificate of the registration thereof.

14. Register and Index to be Kept.—At each of the register offices hereinafter referred to the registrar shall keep, in proper books to be provided for the purpose, a register and an index of all the limited partnerships registered as aforesaid, and of all the statements registered in relation to such partnerships.

15. Registrar of Joint Stock Companies to be Registrar under Act.—The registrar of joint stock companies shall be the registrar of limited partnerships, and the several offices for the registration of joint stock companies in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin shall be the offices for the registration of limited partnerships carrying on business within those parts of the United Kingdom in which they are respectively situated.

16. Inspection of Statements Registered.—(1) Any person may inspect the statements filed by the registrar in the register offices aforesaid, and there shall be paid for such inspection such fees as may be appointed by the Board of Trade, not exceeding one shilling for each inspection; and any person may require a certificate of the registration of any limited partnership, or a copy of or extract from any registered statement, to be certified by the registrar, and there shall be paid for such certificate of registration, certified copy, or extract, such fees as the Board of Trade may appoint, not exceeding two shillings for the certificate of registration, and not exceeding sixpence for each folio of seventy-two words, or in Scotland for each sheet of two hundred words.

(2) A certificate of registration, or a copy of or extract from any statement registered under this Act, if duly certified to be a true copy under the hand of the registrar or one of the assistant registrars (whom it shall not be necessary to prove to be the registrar or assistant registrar) shall, in all legal proceedings, civil or criminal, and in all cases whatsoever, be received in evidence.

17. Power to Board of Trade to make Rules.—The Board of Trade may make rules (but as to fees with the concurrence of the Treasury) concerning any of the following matters:—

(a) The fees to be paid to the registrar under this Act, so that they do not exceed in the case of the original registration of a limited partnership the sum of two pounds, and in any other case the sum of five shillings;
(b) The duties or additional duties to be performed by the registrar for the purposes of this Act;
(c) The performance by assistant registrars and other officers of acts by this Act required to be done by the registrar;
(d) The forms to be used for the purposes of this Act;
(e) Generally the conduct and regulation of registration under this Act and any matters incidental thereto.

CHAPTER XXVII.

An Act to authorise Local Authorities to make Byelaws respecting the Exhibition of Advertisements. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Advertisements Regulation Act, 1907.

2. Local Authorities to have Power to make Byelaws for Regulation of Advertisements.—Any local authority may make byelaws—

(1) For the regulation and control of hoardings and similar structures used for the purpose of advertising when they exceed twelve feet in height:

(2) For regulating, restricting, or preventing the exhibition of advertisements in such places and in such manner, or by such means, as to affect injuriously the amenities of a public park or pleasure promenade, or to disfigure the natural beauty of a landscape:

Provided that a local authority in making byelaws under this section shall provide for the exemption from the operation of such byelaws of any hoardings and similar structures in use for advertising purposes at the time of the making of the byelaws, and of any advertisements exhibited at that time, for such period, not being less than five years from that time, as they may think fit.

3. Byelaws to be Confirmed by Secretary of State.—(1) A byelaw made under this Act shall not have any effect until confirmed by the Secretary of State, and shall not be so confirmed until at least thirty days after the local authority have published it in such manner as the Secretary of State may by general or special order direct.

(2) The Secretary of State shall, before confirming any byelaw, consider any objections to it which may be addressed to him by persons affected or likely to be affected thereby.

(3) The Secretary of State may, before confirming any byelaw, order that a local inquiry be held with respect to the byelaw or with respect to any objections thereto. The person holding any such inquiry shall receive such remuneration as the Secretary of State may determine, and that remuneration and the expenses of the local inquiry shall be paid by the local authority making the byelaw.

(4) Byelaws made under this Act may apply either to the whole of the area of the local authority, or to any specified part thereof.

(5) Byelaws made by a county council shall not be of any force or effect within any borough or urban district the council of which is a local authority under this Act.

(6) The production of a copy of any byelaw certified by a person purporting to be the clerk of the local authority to be a true copy shall, until the contrary is proved, be evidence of the byelaw and of the due making thereof, and, if it is so stated in the certificate, of the byelaw having been duly confirmed.

4. EXPENSES.—Any expenses incurred by a local authority in England or Ireland in carrying into effect the provisions of this Act or any byelaw made thereunder shall be defrayed in the case of a county out of the county fund, in the case of the city of London out of the consolidated rate of that city, in the case of a borough out of the borough fund or borough rate, and in the case of an urban district as part of the general expenses incurred in the execution of the Public Health Acts: Provided that a county council shall not raise any sum on account of their expenses under this Act within any borough or urban district the council of which is a local authority under this Act.

5. POWERS OF ACT TO BE IN ADDITION TO ANY EXISTING POWERS.—The powers and provisions of this Act shall be deemed to be in addition to and not in derogation of any powers and provisions of any local Act, and any powers of making byelaws under any general Act and any such powers and provisions may be exercised and enforced in the same manner as if this Act had not been passed.

6. APPLICATION TO SCOTLAND.—In the application of this Act to Scotland—

(1) The Secretary for Scotland shall be substituted for the Secretary of State:

(2) Byelaws made by a county council shall not be of any force or effect within a royal, parliamentary, or police burgh:

(3) A county council may make byelaws under this Act for preventing the affixing or otherwise exhibiting advertisements upon any wall, tree, fence, gate, or elsewhere on private property, without the consent of either the owner or occupier previously given in writing, or except by virtue of some other sufficient legal authority:

(4) The section of this Act relating to expenses shall apply with the substitution of "general purposes rate" for "county fund," "royal, parliamentary, or police burgh" for "borough," and "burgh general or police assessment" for "borough fund or borough rate."

7. DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this Act the expression "local authority" means—

(1) Within the city of London, the mayor, aldermen, and commons of that city, in common council assembled:

(2) Within any municipal borough in England, the council of that borough:

(3) Within any royal, parliamentary, or police burgh in Scotland, the town council:

(4) Within any urban district in England containing a population according to the last census for the time being of over ten thousand, and within any urban district in Ireland containing a population according to the last census for the time being of over five thousand, the council of that district:

(5) Elsewhere in England, Scotland, or Ireland, the county council.

8. ENFORCEMENT OF BYELAWS OF LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.—It shall be the duty of every metropolitan borough council to enforce within its own area any byelaws made by the London County Council under paragraph (1) of section two of this Act.

9. APPLICATION TO IRELAND.—In the application of this Act to Ireland the Lord Lieutenant, acting with the advice of the Privy Council, shall be substituted for the Secretary of State, the Public Health (Ireland) Acts, 1878 to 1900, shall be substituted for the Public Health Acts, and any references to a borough shall not have effect.

10. PENALTIES.—If any person acts in contravention of or fails to comply with any byelaw made under this Act, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding five pounds, and to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings for every day during which the offence is continued after his conviction thereof.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Patents and Designs. [28*th August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

PART I.

PATENTS.

1. GRANT OF PATENTS TO TWO OR MORE PERSONS.—Where, after the commencement of this Act, a patent is granted to two or more persons jointly, they shall, unless otherwise specified in the patent, be treated for the purpose of the devolution of the legal interest therein as joint tenants, but, subject to any contract to the contrary each of such persons shall be entitled to use the invention for his own profit without accounting to the others, but shall not be entitled to grant a licence without their consent, and, if any such person dies, his beneficial interest in the patent shall devolve on his personal representatives as part of his personal estate.

2. AMENDMENT OF 46 AND 47 VICT. C. 57, S. 5.—Subsections (3) and (4) of section five of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (which Act, as amended by any subsequent enactment, is hereinafter referred to as the principal Act), shall be repealed and in lieu thereof shall be substituted the following:—

"(3) A provisional specification must describe the nature of the invention;

"(4) A complete specification must particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the invention and the manner in which the same is to be performed;

"(4A) In the case of any provisional or complete specification where the comptroller deems it desirable he may require that suitable drawings shall be supplied with the specification, or at any time before the acceptance of the same, and such drawings shall be deemed to form part of the said specification."

3. DEPOSIT OF SAMPLES IN THE CASE OF CHEMICAL INVENTIONS.—The following paragraph shall be inserted in section five of the principal Act:—

"(6) Where the invention in respect of which an application is made is a chemical invention, such typical samples and specimens as may be prescribed shall, if in any particular case the comptroller considers it desirable so to require, be furnished before the acceptance of the complete specification."

4. SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONAL SPECIFICATIONS.—Where the same applicant has put in two or more provisional specifications for inventions which are cognate or modifications one of the other, and has obtained thereby concurrent provisional protection for the same, and the comptroller is of opinion that the whole of such inventions are such as to constitute a single invention and may properly be included in one patent, he may accept one complete specification in respect of the whole of such applications and grant a single patent thereon. Such patent shall bear the date of the earliest of such applications, but, in considering the validity of the same and for the purposes of section eleven of the principal Act as modified by this Act, the court or the comptroller, as the case may be, shall have regard to the respective dates of the provisional specifications relating to the several matters claimed therein.

5. PATENTS OF ADDITION.—(1) Where a patent for an invention has been applied for or granted, and the applicant or the patentee, as the case may be, applies for a further patent in respect of any improvement on or modification of the invention, he may, if he thinks fit, in his application for the further patent, request that the term limited in that patent for the duration thereof be the same as that of the original patent or so much of that term as is unexpired.

(2) Where an application containing such a request is made, a patent (hereinafter referred to as a patent of addition) may be granted for such term as aforesaid.

(3) A patent of addition shall remain in force so long as the patent for the original invention remains in force, but no longer, and in respect of a patent of addition no fees shall be payable for renewal.

(4) The grant of a patent of addition shall be conclusive evidence that the invention is a proper subject for a patent of addition, and the validity of the patent shall not be questioned on the ground that the invention ought to have been the subject of an independent patent.

6.—EXTENSION OF 2 EDW. 7 C. 34, S. 1, TO SPECIFICATIONS PUBLISHED SUBSEQUENTLY TO APPLICATION.—(1) An investigation under section one of the Patents Act, 1902, shall extend to specifications published after the date of the application in respect of which the investigation is made, and being specifications which have been deposited pursuant to prior applications; and that section shall, subject to rules under the principal Act, have effect accordingly.

(2) Where, on such an extended investigation, it appears that the invention claimed in the specification deposited pursuant to an application is wholly or in part claimed in any published specification deposited pursuant to a prior application, the applicant shall, whether or not his specification has been accepted or a patent granted to him, be afforded such facilities as may be prescribed for amending his specification, and in the event of his failing to do so the comptroller shall, in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed, determine what reference, if any, to other specifications ought to be made in his specification by way of notice to the public.

(3) For the purposes of this section an application shall be deemed to be prior to another application if the patent applied for when granted would be of prior date to the patent granted pursuant to that other application.

(4) This section shall come into operation at such date as the Board of Trade may by order direct, and shall apply only to applications made after that date, and the order shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

7. AMENDMENT OF 2 EDW. 7 C. 34, S. 1 (6).—The following proviso shall be added to subsection (6) of section one of the Patents Act, 1902:—

"Provided that the comptroller, if satisfied that the invention claimed has been wholly and specifically claimed in any specification to which the investigation has extended, may, in lieu of requiring references to be made in the applicant's specification as aforesaid, refuse to grant a patent."

8. POWER TO POSTDATE APPLICATION IN CASES OF DISCOMFORMITY.—The following subsection shall be added after subsection (3) of section nine of the principal Act, which relates to the comparison of provisional with complete specifications:—

"(3A) If the examiner reports that the invention described in the complete specification is not substantially the same as that which is described in the provisional specification, the comptroller may, with the consent of the applicant, instead of refusing to accept the complete specification, cancel the provisional specification and treat the application as having been made on the date at which the complete specification was left, and the application shall have effect as if made on that date:

"Provided that where the complete specification includes an invention not included in the provisional specification, the comptroller may allow the original application to proceed so far as the invention included both in the provisional and in the complete specification is concerned, and treat the claim for the additional invention included in the complete specification as an application for that invention made on the date at which the complete specification was left."

9. DISCONFORMITY.—A patent shall not be held invalid on the ground that the complete specification claims a further or different invention to that contained in the provisional, if the invention therein claimed, so far as it is not contained in the provisional, was novel at the date when the complete specification was put in, and the applicant was the first and true inventor thereof.

PATENTS AND DESIGNS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1907.

10. GROUNDS OF OPPOSITION.—In subsection (1) of section eleven of the principal Act (which relates to the grounds on which the grant of a patent may be opposed), for the words "on the ground that the invention has been patented in this country on an application of prior date" there shall be substituted the words "on the ground that the invention has been claimed in any complete specification for a British patent which is or will be of prior date to the patent the grant of which is opposed, other than a specification deposited pursuant to an application made more than fifty years before the date of the application for such last-mentioned patent, or on the ground that the nature of the invention or the manner in which it is to be performed is not sufficiently or fairly described and ascertained in the complete specification."

11. EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR SEALING PATENTS IN CERTAIN CASES.—(1) Where in consequence of the neglect or failure of the applicant to pay any fee a patent cannot be sealed within the period allowed by section twelve of the principal Act, that period may, on payment of the prescribed fee and on compliance with the prescribed conditions, be extended to such an extent as may be prescribed.

(2) APPLICATIONS FOR EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PAYMENT OF FEES, ETC.—In such cases as may be prescribed and subject to the prescribed conditions this section shall apply where the period allowed for the sealing of the patent has expired before the commencement of this Act.

12. Where an application is made for an extension of time under section seventeen of the principal Act, it shall not be necessary for the patentee to allege or prove the cause of his failure to pay the prescribed fee within the prescribed time, and where under that section or under section three of the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks (Amendment) Act, 1885 (48 and 49 Vict. c. 63), an application is made for an extension of time, the comptroller shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, grant an extension of time to the full amount applied for, not exceeding the amount which he is entitled to grant under those sections.

13. AMENDMENT OF SPECIFICATION BY DISCLAIMERS.—The following section shall be substituted for section nineteen of the principal Act:—

"In any action for infringement of a patent or proceedings before the court for the revocation of a patent, the court may by order allow the patentee to amend his specification by way of disclaimer in such manner and subject to such terms as to costs, advertisement, or otherwise, as the court may think fit:

"Provided that no amendment shall be so allowed that would make the specification, as amended, claim an invention substantially larger than, or substantially different from, the invention claimed by the specification as it stood before the amendment, and where an application for such an order is made to the court, notice of the application shall be given to the comptroller, and the comptroller shall have the right to appear and be heard, and shall appear if so directed by the court."

14. POWER OF COMPTROLLER TO REVOKE PATENTS ON CERTAIN GROUNDS.—(1) Any person who would have been entitled to oppose the grant of a patent, or is the successor in interest of a person who was so entitled, may, within two years from the date of the patent, in the prescribed manner apply to the comptroller for an order revoking the patent on any one or more of the grounds on which the grant of the patent might have been opposed:

Provided that when an action for infringement or proceedings for the revocation of the patent are pending in any court, an application under this section shall not be made except with the leave of the Court.

(2) The comptroller shall give notice of the application to the patentee, and after hearing the parties, if desirous of being heard, may make an order revoking the patent or requiring the specification relating thereto to be amended by disclaimer, correction, or explanation, or dismissing the application; but the comptroller shall not make an order revoking the patent unless the circumstances are such as would have justified him in refusing to grant the patent had the proceedings been proceedings in an opposition to the grant of a patent.

(3) A patentee may at any time by giving notice in the prescribed manner to the comptroller offer to surrender his patent, and the comptroller may, if after giving notice of the offer and hearing all parties who desire to be heard he thinks fit, accept the offer, and thereupon make an order for the revocation of the patent.

(4) Any decision of the comptroller under this section shall be subject to appeal to the court.

15. Revocation of Patents Worked Outside the United Kingdom.—(1) At any time not less than four years after the date of a patent, and not less than one year after the passing of this Act, any person may apply to the comptroller for the revocation of the patent on the ground that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on exclusively or mainly outside the United Kingdom.

(2) The comptroller shall consider the application, and, if after inquiry he is satisfied that the allegations contained therein are correct, then, subject to the provisions of this section, and unless the patentee proves that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on to an adequate extent in the United Kingdom, or gives satisfactory reasons why the article or process is not so manufactured or carried on, the comptroller may make an order revoking the patent either—

(a) forthwith; or

Provided that no such order shall be made which is at variance with any treaty, convention, arrangement, or engagement with any foreign country or British possession.

(3) If within the time limited in the order the patented article or process is not manufactured or carried on within the United Kingdom to an adequate extent, but the patentee gives satisfactory reasons why it is not so manufactured or carried on, the comptroller may extend the period mentioned in the previous order for such period not exceeding twelve months as may be specified in the subsequent order.

(4) Any decision of the comptroller under this section shall be subject to appeal to the court, and on any such appeal the law officer, or such other counsel as he may appoint, shall be entitled to appear and be heard.

16. Compulsory Licences.—(1) Petitions for the grant of a compulsory licence or for the revocation of a patent under section three of the Patents Act, 1902, shall be referred by the Board of Trade to the court instead of to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and accordingly in that section for references to the Judicial Committee there shall be substituted references to the court, and for references to Orders in Council there shall be substituted references to orders of the court, and subsections (8), (9) and (10) of that section shall be repealed.

(2) In lieu of subsections (5) and (6) of the same section the following subsection shall be substituted:—

"(5) For the purposes of this section the reasonable requirements of the public shall not be deemed to have been satisfied—

"(a) if by reason of the default of the patentee to manufacture to an adequate extent and supply on reasonable terms the patented article or any parts thereof which are necessary for its efficient working or to carry on the patented process to an adequate extent or to grant licences on reasonable terms, any existing trade or industry, or the establishment of any new trade or industry, in the United Kingdom is unfairly prejudiced, or the demand for the patented article or the article produced by the patented process is not reasonably met; or

"(b) if any trade or industry in the United Kingdom is unfairly prejudiced by the conditions attached by the patentee before or after the passing of this Act to the purchase, hire, or use of the patented article or to the using or working the patented process."

17. Procedure on Petitions for Extension of Term of Patent.—The following section shall be substituted for section twenty-five of the principal Act:—

"(1) A patentee may, after advertising in manner provided by rules of the Supreme Court his intention to do so, present a petition to the court praying that his patent may be extended for a further term, but such petition must be presented at least six months before the time limited for the expiration of the patent;

"(2) Any person may give notice to the court of objection to the extension;

"(3) On the hearing of any petition under this section, the patentee and any person who has given such notice of objection shall be made parties to the proceeding, and the comptroller shall be entitled to appear and be heard, and shall appear if so directed by the court;

"(4) The court, in considering its decision, shall have regard to the nature and merits of the invention in relation to the public, to the profits made by the patentee as such, and to all the circumstances of the case;

"(5) If it appears to the court that the patentee has been inadequately remunerated by his patent, the court may by order extend the term of the patent for a further term not exceeding seven, or, in exceptional cases, fourteen years, or may order the grant of a new patent for such term as may be specified in the order and containing any restriction, conditions, and provisions the Court may think fit."

18. Date of Patent Substituted for Patent Obtained by Fraud.—A patent granted under subsection (8) of section twenty-six of the principal Act to an inventor in lieu of a patent revoked on the ground of fraud shall bear the same date as the revoked patent, and accordingly in that subsection the words "the date of revocation of," and the words "but the patent so granted shall cease on the expiration of the term for which the revoked patent was granted," shall be repealed:

Provided that no action shall be brought for any infringement of the patent so granted committed before the actual date when such patent was granted.

19. Repeal of Provisions as to Procedure.—Rules of the Supreme Court may be made for regulating the matters dealt with in subsections (5), (6), and (7) of section twenty-six and in section twenty-nine of the principal Act, which relate to the particulars to be delivered and the procedure to be adopted in proceedings upon petition for the revocation of a patent and in an action for infringement, and on the coming into operation of any rules of court made for that purpose the said enactments shall be repealed.

20. Time for Applications by Representatives of Deceased Inventors.—In section thirty-four of the principal Act (which relates to the grant of a patent on the application of representatives of a deceased inventor) the words "must be made within six months of the decease of such person and" are hereby repealed.

21. Secret Patents.—(1) Section forty-four of the principal Act (which relates to secret patents) shall apply to the Admiralty in like manner as it applies to the Secretary of State for War.

(2) Rules may be made under the principal Act, after consultation with the Secretary of State and the Admiralty, for the purpose of ensuring secrecy with respect to patents to which the said section as so extended applies, and those rules may modify any of the provisions of the principal Act in their application to such patents as aforesaid so far as may appear necessary for the purpose aforesaid.

22. Anticipation.—A patent shall not be held to be invalid by reason only of the invention in respect of which the patent was granted, or any part thereof having been published prior to the date of the patent, if the patentee proves to the satisfaction of the court that the publication was made without his knowledge and consent, and that the matter published was derived or obtained from him, and if he learnt of the publication before the date of his application for the patent that he applied for and obtained protection for his invention with all reasonable diligence after learning of the publication.

23. Restoration of Lapsed Patents.—When any patent has become void owing to the failure of the patentee to pay any prescribed fee within the prescribed time, the patentee may apply to the comptroller in the prescribed manner for an order for the restoration of the patent. Every such application shall contain a statement of the circumstances which have led to the omission of the payment of the said prescribed fee. If it appears from such statement that the omission was unintentional and that no undue delay has occurred in making the application, the comptroller shall advertise the application in the prescribed manner, and within such time as may be prescribed any person may give notice of opposition at the Patent Office. Where such notice is given, the comptroller shall notify the applicant thereof. After the expiration of the prescribed period the comptroller shall hear the case and, subject to an appeal to the court, issue an order either restoring the patent or dismissing the application: Provided that in every order under this section restoring a patent, such provisions as may be prescribed shall be inserted for the protection of persons who may have availed themselves of the subject-matter of the patent after the patent had been announced as void in the illustrated official journal.

24. AVOIDANCE OF CERTAIN CONDITIONS ATTACHED TO THE SALE, ETC. OF PATENTED ARTICLES.—(1) It shall not be lawful in any contract made after the passing of this Act in relation to the sale or lease of, or licence to use or work any article or process protected by a patent to insert a condition the effect of which will be—

(a) to prohibit or restrict the purchaser, lessee, or licensee from using any article or class of articles, whether patented or not, or any patented process, supplied or owned by any person other than the seller, lessor, or licensor, or his nominees; or

(b) to require the purchaser, lessee, or licensee to acquire from the seller, lessor, or licensor, or his nominees, any article or class of articles not protected by the patent;

and any such condition shall be null and void, as being in restraint of trade and contrary to public policy: Provided that this subsection shall not apply if—

(i) the seller, lessor, or licensor proves that at the time the contract was entered into the purchaser, lessee, or licensee had the option of purchasing the article or obtaining a lease or licence on reasonable terms, without such conditions as aforesaid; and

(ii) the contract entitles the purchaser, lessee, or licensee to relieve himself of his liability to observe any such condition on giving the other party three months' notice in writing and on payment in compensation for such relief in the case of a purchase, of such sum, or in the case of a lease or license of such rent or royalty for the residue of the term of the contract, as may be fixed by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade.

(2) Any contract relating to the lease of or licence to use or work any patented article or patented process, whether made before or after the passing of this Act, may at any time after the patent or all the patents by which the article or process was protected at the time of the making of the contract, has or have ceased to be in force, and notwithstanding anything in the same or in any other contract to the contrary, be determined by either party on giving three months' notice in writing to the other party; but where any such notice is given determining any contract made before the passing of this Act, the party giving the notice shall be liable to pay such compensation as failing agreement may be awarded by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade.

(3) Any contract made before the passing of this Act relating to the lease of or licence to use or work any patented article or process and containing any condition which, had the contract been made after the passing of this Act, would by virtue of this section have been null and void may, at any time before the contract is determinable under the last preceding subsection, and, notwithstanding anything in the same or any other contract to the contrary, be determined by either party on giving three months' notice in writing to the other party, but, where any such notice is given, the party giving the notice shall be liable to pay such compensation as, failing agreement, may be awarded by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade.

(4) The insertion by the patentee in a contract made after the passing of this Act of any condition which by virtue of this section is null and void shall be available as a defence to an action for infringement of the patent to which the contract relates brought while that contract is in force.

(5) Nothing in this section shall—

(a) affect any condition in a contract whereby a person is prohibited from selling any goods other than those of a particular person; or

(b) be construed as validating any contract which would, apart from this section, be invalid; or

(c) affect any right of determining a contract or condition in a contract exercisable independently of this section; or

(d) affect any condition in a contract for the lease of or licence to use a patented article, whereby the lessor or licensor reserves to himself or his nominees the right to supply such new parts of the patented article as may be required to put or keep it in repair.

25. DEFENCES TO ACTIONS FOR INFRINGEMENT, ETC.—Any ground on which a patent may be revoked under this Act or as an alternative to the grant of a compulsory licence under section three of the Patents Act, 1902, as amended by this Act, shall be available by way of a defence to an action for infringement, and shall also be a ground of revocation under section twenty-six of the principal Act.

26. POWER TO COUNTERCLAIM FOR REVOCATION IN AN ACTION FOR INFRINGEMENT.—A defendant in an action for infringement of a patent, if entitled to present a petition to the court for the revocation of the patent, may, without presenting such a petition, apply in accordance with the rules of the Supreme Court by way of counter-claim in the action for the revocation of the patent.

27. EXEMPTION OF INNOCENT INFRINGER FROM LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES.—A patentee shall not be entitled to recover any damages in respect of any infringement of a patent granted after the commencement of this Act from any defendant who proves that at the date of such infringement he was not aware nor had reasonable means of making himself aware of the existence of the patent, and the marking of an article with the word "patent," "patented," or any word or words expressing or implying that a patent has been obtained for the article, stamped, engraved, impressed on, or otherwise applied to the article, shall not be deemed to constitute notice of the existence of the patent unless the word or words are accompanied by the year and number of the patent:

Provided that nothing in this section shall affect any proceedings for an injunction.

28. PROVISIONS AS TO APPEALS AND REFERENCES TO THE COURT.—Where by virtue of this Act a decision of the comptroller is subject to an appeal to the court, or a petition may be referred or presented to the court, the appeal shall, subject to and in accordance with rules of the Supreme Court, be made and the petition referred or presented to such judge of the High Court as the Lord Chancellor may select for the purpose, and the decision of that judge shall be final except in the case of an appeal from a decision of the comptroller revoking a patent on any ground on which the grant of such patent might have been opposed.

PART II.

DESIGNS.

29. APPLICATION FOR THE REGISTRATION OF DESIGNS.—The following subsections shall be inserted at the end of section forty-seven of the principal Act (which relates to applications for the registration of designs):—

"(8) An application which owing to any default or neglect on the part of the applicant has not been completed so as to enable registration to be affected within the prescribed time shall be deemed to be abandoned.

"(9) Where an application has been abandoned or refused the application and any drawings, photographs, tracings, representations, or specimens left in connexion with the application shall not at any time be open to public inspection or be published by the comptroller.

"(10) A design when registered shall be registered as of the date of the application for registration."

30. RULES AS TO APPLICATIONS FOR REGISTRATION OF DESIGNS.—Rules may be made under the principal Act for regulating the matters dealt with in subsections two and three of section forty-seven and in section forty-eight of the principal Act, which relate to the form and manner in which applications for the registration of designs are to be made, and on the coming into operation of any such rules the said enactments shall be repealed.

31. COPYRIGHT IN DESIGNS.—(1) At the end of subsection (1) of section fifty of the principal Act (which relates to the term of copyright in a registered design) the following paragraph shall be added:—

"If within the prescribed time before the expiration of the said five years application for the extension of the period of copyright is made to the comptroller in the prescribed manner, the comptroller shall on payment of the prescribed fee extend the period of copyright for a second period of five years from the expiration of the original period of five years. If within the prescribed time before the expiration of such second period of five years application for the extension of the period of copyright is made to the comptroller in the prescribed manner, the comptroller may, subject to any rules under the principal Act, on payment of the prescribed fee, extend the period of copyright for a third period of five years from the expiration of the second period of five years."

(2) The disclosure of a design by the proprietor to any other person, in such circumstances as would make it contrary to good faith for that other person to use or publish the design, and the disclosure of a design in breach of good faith by any person other than the proprietor of the design, and the acceptance of a first and confidential order for goods bearing a new or original textile design intended for registration, shall not be deemed to be a publication of the design sufficient to invalidate the copyright thereof if registration thereof is obtained subsequently to the disclosure or acceptance.

32. MARKING OF REGISTERED DESIGNS.—(1) So much of section fifty-one of the principal Act as provides that the copyright in a registered design shall cease if the proprietor fails to comply with the requirements of that section with respect to the marking of articles to which the design has been applied is hereby repealed; but, in the event of any failure to comply with any such requirements, the proprietor of the design shall not be entitled to recover any penalty or damages in respect of any infringement of his copyright in the design, unless he shows that he took all proper steps to ensure the marking of the articles, or unless he shows that the infringement took place after the person guilty thereof knew or had received notice of the existence of copyright in the design.

(2) Where a representation is made to the Board of Trade by or on behalf of any trade or industry that in the interests of the trade or industry it is expedient to dispense with or modify as regards any class or description of articles any of the requirements of the said section fifty-one as to marking, the Board may, if they think fit, by rule under the principal Act dispense with or modify such requirements as regards any such class or description of articles to such extent and subject to such conditions as they think fit.

33. REGISTRATION OF DESIGNS.—Where a design has been registered in one or more classes of goods the application of the proprietor of the design to register it in some one or more other classes shall not be refused nor shall the registration thereof be invalidated:

(a) on the ground of the design not being a new and original design by reason only that it was so previously registered; or

(b) on the ground of the design having been previously published in the United Kingdom by reason only that it has been applied to goods of any class in which it was so previously registered.

34. INSPECTION OF REGISTERED DESIGNS.—(1) In section fifty-two of the principal Act (which prohibits the inspection of a design during the existence of the copyright in the design) after the words "during the existence of copyright in a design" there shall be inserted the words "or such shorter period, not being less than two years from the registration of a design as may be prescribed," and for the words "when the copyright in a design has ceased" there shall be substituted the words "after the expiration of the copyright in the design or such shorter period as aforesaid."

(2) At the end of the same section the following subsection shall be added:—

"(3) Different periods may be prescribed under this section for different classes of goods."

35. CANCELLATION OF REGISTRATION OF DESIGNS USED WHOLLY OR MAINLY ABROAD.—At any time after the registration of a design any person may apply to the comptroller for the cancellation of the registration on the ground that the design is used for manufacture exclusively or mainly outside the United Kingdom, and where such an application is made the provisions of this Act with respect to the revocation of patents worked outside the United Kingdom including those relating to costs shall apply with the necessary modifications, except that there shall be no appeal from the decision of the comptroller. Such ground as aforesaid shall be available by way of a defence to an action for infringement of the copyright in the design.

36. PENALTY AND DAMAGES IN RESPECT OF PIRACY OF REGISTERED DESIGN.—(1) In section fifty-eight of the principal Act (which imposes penalties on the piracy of registered designs), at the end of paragraph (a) there shall be inserted the words "or to do anything with a view to enabling the design to be so applied."

(2) In the same section, after the words "publish or expose" there shall be inserted the words "or cause to be published or exposed."

(3) The following shall be substituted for section fifty-nine of the principal Act (which relates to actions for damages for infringement of registered designs):—

"Notwithstanding the remedy given by this Act for the recovery of such penalty as aforesaid, the registered proprietor of any design may, if he elects to do so, bring an action for the recovery of any damages arising from any acts to which a penalty is attached by this Act, and for an injunction against the repetition thereof."

37. APPLICATION OF SECTIONS 31 AND 32 OF PRINCIPAL ACT TO DESIGNS.—Section thirty-one of the principal Act (which relates to the certificates of validity of a patent), and section thirty-two of the same Act (which relates to the remedy in case of groundless threats of legal proceedings) shall apply in the case of registered designs in like manner as they apply in the case of patents, with the substitution of references to the copyright in a design for references to a patent, and of references to the proprietor of a design for references to the patentee, and of references to the design for references to the invention.

PART III.

GENERAL.

38. RULES AS TO BRANCH OFFICES.—Rules under the principal Act may provide for the establishment of branch offices for designs at Manchester or elsewhere, and for any document or thing required by the principal Act to be sent to or done at the Patent Office being sent to or done at any branch office which may be established.

39. ENTRIES IN REGISTERS.—In section eighty-seven of the principal Act (which relates to entries in registers of patents and designs) the following paragraph shall be inserted after the words "as the case may be," where they first occur:—

"When any person becomes entitled as mortgagee, licensee, or otherwise to any interest in a patent or design, the comptroller shall, on request and on proof of title to his satisfaction, cause notice of the interest to be entered in the prescribed manner in the register of patents or designs as the case may be."

40. RECTIFICATION OF REGISTERS BY COURT.—The following section shall be substituted for section ninety of the principal Act (which relates to the rectification of registers of patents and designs by the court):—

"(1) The court may, on the application in the prescribed manner of any person aggrieved by the non-insertion in or omission from the register of patents or designs of any entry, or by any entry made in either such register without sufficient cause, or by any entry wrongly remaining on either such register, or by an error or defect in any entry in either such register, make such order for making, expunging, or varying such entry as it may think fit.

"(2) The court may in any proceeding under this section decide any question that it may be necessary or expedient to decide in connexion with the rectification of a register.

"(3) The prescribed notice of any application under this section shall be given to the comptroller, who shall have the right to appear and be heard thereon, and shall appear if so directed by the court.

"(4) Any order of the court rectifying a register shall direct that notice of the rectification be served upon the comptroller in the prescribed manner, who shall upon the receipt of such notice rectify the register accordingly."

7 EDWARD 7, Chapter 28.

41. Correction of Clerical Errors.—The following section shall be substituted for section ninety-one of the principal Act, which relates to the correction of clerical errors:—

"The comptroller may on request in writing accompanied by the prescribed fee—

"(a) correct any clerical error in or in connexion with an application for a patent or in any patent or any specification;

"(b) cancel the registration of a design either wholly or in respect of any particular goods in connexion with which the design is registered;

"(c) correct any clerical error in the representation of a design or in the name or address of the proprietor of any patent or design, or in any other matter which is entered upon the register of patents or the register of designs."

42. Excluded Days.—Where the last day fixed by the principal Act for doing anything under that Act falls on any day specified in rules under that Act as an excluded day, the rules may provide for the thing being done on the next following day not being an excluded day, and section ninety-eight of the principal Act is hereby repealed.

43. Penalties for False Representations.—The following subsection shall be added to section one hundred and five of the principal Act (which imposes penalties for false representations):—

"(3) Any person who, after the copyright in a design has expired, puts or causes to be put on any article to which the design has been applied the word 'registered,' or any word or words implying that there is a subsisting copyright in the design, shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five pounds."

44. Royal Arms.—The following section shall be substituted for section one hundred and six of the principal Act:—

"(1) The grant of a patent under this Act shall not be deemed to authorise the patentee to use the Royal Arms or to place the Royal Arms on any patented article.

"(2) If any person, without the authority of His Majesty, uses in connexion with any business, trade, calling, or profession the Royal Arms (or arms so nearly resembling them as to be calculated to deceive) in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that he is duly authorised to use the Royal Arms, he shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds: Provided that nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the right, if any, of the proprietor of a trade mark containing such arms to continue to use such trade mark."

45. Evidence Before Comptroller.—(1) Subject to rules under the principal Act in any proceeding under the principal Act or this Act before the comptroller the evidence shall be given by statutory declaration in the absence of directions to the contrary; but in any case in which the comptroller thinks it right so to do, he may take evidence vivâ voce in lieu of or in addition to evidence by declaration, or allow any declarant to be cross-examined on his declaration. Any such statutory declaration may in the case of appeal be used before the court in lieu of evidence by affidavit, but, if so used, shall have all the incidents and consequences of evidence by affidavit.

(2) In case any part of the evidence is taken vivâ voce, the comptroller shall, in respect of requiring the attendance of witnesses and taking evidence on oath, be in the same position in all respects as an official referee of the Supreme Court.

46. Costs and Security for Costs.—(1) The comptroller shall, in proceedings relating to an opposition to the grant of a patent or to an application for the amendment of a specification or the revocation of a patent, have power, by order, to award to any party such costs as he may consider reasonable, and to direct how and by what parties they are to be paid, and any such order may be made a rule of the court.

(2) If a party giving notice of opposition to the grant of a patent or to the amendment of a specification, or applying to the comptroller for the revocation of a patent, or giving notice of appeal from any decision of the comptroller, neither resides nor carries on business in the United Kingdom or the Isle of Man, the comptroller or, in case of appeal to the law officer, the law officer may require such party to give security for costs of the proceedings or appeal, and in default of such security being given may treat the proceedings or appeal as abandoned.

47. Misuse of Title of "Patent Office."—If any person uses on his place of business, or on any document issued by him, or otherwise, the words "Patent Office," or any other words suggesting that his place of business is officially connected with, or is, the Patent Office, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds.

48. Agents for Patents.—(1) Rules under the principal Act may authorise the comptroller to refuse to recognise as agent in respect of any business under that Act any person whose name has been erased from the register of patent agents, or who is proved to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade, after being given an opportunity of being heard, to have been convicted of such an offence or to have been guilty of such misconduct as would have rendered him liable, if his name had been on the register of patent agents, to have his name erased therefrom, and may authorise the comptroller to refuse to recognise as agent in respect of any business under the principal Act any company which, if it had been an individual, the comptroller could refuse to recognise as such agent.

(2) Where a company or firm acts as agent, such rules as aforesaid may authorise the comptroller to refuse to recognise the company or firm as agent if any person whom the comptroller could refuse to recognise as an agent acts as director or manager of the company or is a partner in the firm.

(3) The comptroller shall refuse to recognise as agent in respect of any business under the principal Act any person who neither resides nor has a place of business in the United Kingdom or the Isle of Man.

49. Construction.—Except where otherwise expressly provided, this Act shall apply to patents granted, designs registered, and to applications made as well before as after the commencement of this Act.

50. Application of Act to Scotland.—The expression "Rules of the Supreme Court" shall in this Act, except in section twenty-eight, as applying to Scotland mean Act of Sederunt; and notwithstanding anything contained in the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1902, or in this Act. The expression "Court" in section sixteen of this Act shall, in reference to petitions which are referred by the Board of Trade to the Court in Scotland, mean any Lord Ordinary of the Court of Session, and in section seventeen of this Act shall in reference to proceedings in Scotland mean such Lord Ordinary.

51. Short Title, Commencement, and Repeal.—(1) This Act may be cited as the Patents and Designs (Amendment) Act, 1907, and may be cited, and shall be construed as one, with the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1902.

(2) This Act shall, save as otherwise expressly provided, come into operation on the first of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

(3) The enactments mentioned in the Schedule to this Act are hereby repealed to the extent specified in the third column of that schedule.

CHAPTER XXIX.

An Act to consolidate the enactments relating to Patents for Inventions and the Registration of Designs and certain enactments relating to Trade Marks.

[28*th August* 1907.]

BE it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

PART I.

PATENTS.

Application for and Grant of Patent.

1. APPLICATION.—(1) An application for a patent may be made by any person who claims to be the true and first inventor of an invention, whether he is a British subject or not, and whether alone or jointly with any other person.

(2) The application must be made in the prescribed form, and must be left at, or sent by post to, the patent office in the prescribed manner.

(3) The application must contain a declaration to the effect that the applicant is in possession of an invention, whereof he, or in the case of a joint application one at least of the applicants, claims to be the true and first inventor, and for which he desires to obtain a patent, and must be accompanied by either a provisional or complete specification.

(4) The declaration required by this section may be either a statutory declaration or not, as may be prescribed.

2. SPECIFICATIONS.—(1) A provisional specification must describe the nature of the invention.

(2) A complete specification must particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the invention and the manner in which the same is to be performed.

(3) In the case of any provisional or complete specification where the comptroller deems it desirable he may require that suitable drawings shall be supplied with the specification, or at any time before the acceptance of the same, and such drawings shall be deemed to form part of the said specification.

(4) A specification, whether provisional or complete, must commence with the title, and in the case of a complete specification must end with a distinct statement of the invention claimed.

(5) Where the invention in respect of which an application is made is a chemical invention, such typical samples and specimens as may be prescribed shall, if in any particular case the comptroller considers it desirable so to require, be furnished before the acceptance of the complete specification.

7 EDWARD 7, CHAPTER 29.

3. PROCEEDINGS UPON APPLICATION.—(1) The Comptroller General of Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks (hereinafter referred to as the comptroller) shall refer every application to an examiner.

(2) If the examiner reports that the nature of the invention is not fairly described, or that the application, specification, or drawings have not been prepared in the prescribed manner, or that the title does not sufficiently indicate the subject-matter of the invention, the comptroller may refuse to accept the application or require that the application, specification, or drawings be amended before he proceeds with the application; and in the latter case the application shall, if the comptroller so directs, bear date as from the time when the requirement is complied with.

(3) Where the comptroller refuses to accept an application or requires an amendment, the applicant may appeal from his decision to the law officer, who shall, if required, hear the applicant and the comptroller, and may make an order determining whether and subject to what conditions (if any) the application shall be accepted.

(4) The comptroller shall, when an application has been accepted, give notice thereof to the applicant.

4. PROVISIONAL PROTECTION.—Where an application for a patent in respect of an invention has been accepted, the invention may during the period between the date of the application and the date of sealing such patent be used and published without prejudice to the patent to be granted for the invention; and such protection from the consequences of use and publication is in this Act referred to as provisional protection.

5. TIME FOR LEAVING COMPLETE SPECIFICATION.—(1) If the applicant does not leave a complete specification with his application, he may leave it at any subsequent time within six months from the date of the application.

Provided that where an application is made for an extension of the time for leaving a complete specification, the comptroller shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, grant an extension of time to the extent applied for but not exceeding one month.

(2) Unless a complete specification is so left the application shall be deemed to be abandoned.

6. COMPARISON OF PROVISIONAL AND COMPLETE SPECIFICATION.—(1) Where a complete specification is left after a provisional specification, the comptroller shall refer both specifications to an examiner.

(2) If the examiner reports that the complete specification has not been prepared in the prescribed manner, the comptroller may refuse to accept the complete specification until it has been amended to his satisfaction.

(3) If the examiner reports that the invention particularly described in the complete specification is not substantially the same as that which is described in the provisional specification the comptroller may—

(a) refuse to accept the complete specification until it has been amended to his satisfaction; or

(b) (with the consent of the applicant) cancel the provisional specification and treat the application as having been made on the date at which the complete specification was left, and the application shall have effect as if made on that date:

Provided that where the complete specification includes an invention not included in the provisional specification, the comptroller may allow the original application to proceed so far as the invention included both in the provisional and in the complete specification is concerned, and treat the claim for the additional invention included in the complete specification as an application for that invention made on the date at which the complete specification was left.

(4) A refusal of the comptroller to accept a complete specification shall be subject to appeal to the law officer, who shall, if required, hear the applicant and the comptroller and may make an order determining whether and subject to what conditions (if any) the complete specification shall be accepted.

(5) Unless a complete specification is accepted within twelve months from the date of the application, the application shall (except where an appeal has been lodged) become void.

Provided that where an application is made for an extension of time for the acceptance of a complete specification, the comptroller shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, grant an extension of time to the extent applied for but not exceeding three months.

7. INVESTIGATION OF PREVIOUS SPECIFICATIONS IN UNITED KINGDOM ON APPLICATIONS FOR PATENTS.—(1) Where an application for a patent has been made and a complete specification has been left, the examiner shall, in addition to the other inquiries which he is directed to make by this Act, make a further investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether the invention claimed has been wholly or in part claimed or described in any specification (other than a provisional specification not followed by a complete specification) published before the date of the application, and left pursuant to any application for a patent made in the United Kingdom within fifty years next before the date of the application.

(2) If on investigation it appears that the invention has been wholly or in part claimed or described in any such specification, the applicant shall be informed thereof, and the applicant may, within such time as may be prescribed, amend his specification, and the amended specification shall be investigated in like manner as the original specification.

(3) If the comptroller is satisfied that no objection exists to the specification on the ground that the invention claimed thereby has been wholly or in part claimed or described in a previous specification as before mentioned, he shall, in the absence of any other lawful ground of objection, accept the specification.

(4) If the comptroller is not so satisfied, he shall, after hearing the applicant, and unless the objection is removed by amending the specification to the satisfaction of the comptroller determine whether a reference to any, and, if so, what prior specifications ought to be made in the specification by way of notice to the public.

Provided that the comptroller, if satisfied that the invention claimed has been wholly and specifically claimed in any specification to which the investigation has extended, may, in lieu of requiring references to be made in the applicant's specification as aforesaid, refuse to grant a patent.

(5) An appeal shall lie from the decision of the comptroller under this section to the law officer.

(6) The investigations and reports required by this section shall not be held in any way to guarantee the validity of any patent, and no liability shall be incurred by the Board of Trade or any officer thereof by reason of, or in connexion with, any such investigation or report, or any proceeding consequent thereon.

8. INVESTIGATION OF SPECIFICATIONS PUBLISHED SUBSEQUENTLY TO APPLICATION.—(1) An investigation under the last preceding section shall extend to specifications published after the date of the application in respect of which the investigation is made, and being specifications which have been deposited pursuant to prior applications; and that section shall, subject to rules under this Act, have effect accordingly.

(2) Where, on such an extended investigation, it appears that the invention claimed in the specification deposited pursuant to an application is wholly or in part claimed in any published specification deposited pursuant to a prior application, the applicant shall, whether or not his specification has been accepted or a patent granted to him, be afforded such facilities as may be prescribed for amending his specification, and in the event of his failing to do so the comptroller shall, in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed, determine what reference, if any, to other specifications ought to be made in his specification by way of notice to the public.

(3) For the purposes of this section an application shall be deemed to be prior to another application if the patent applied for when granted would be of prior date to the patent granted pursuant to that other application.

(4) This section shall come into operation at such date as the Board of Trade may by order direct, and shall apply only to applications made after that date, and the order shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

9. ADVERTISEMENT ON ACCEPTANCE OF COMPLETE SPECIFICATION.—On the acceptance of the complete specification the comptroller shall advertise the acceptance; and the application and specifications with the drawings (if any) shall be open to public inspection.

10. EFFECT OF ACCEPTANCE OF COMPLETE SPECIFICATION.—After the acceptance of a complete specification and until the date of sealing a patent in respect thereof, or the expiration of the time for sealing, the applicant shall have the like privileges and rights as if a patent for the invention had been sealed on the date of the acceptance of the complete specification. Provided that an applicant shall not be entitled to institute any proceeding for infringement until a patent for the invention has been granted to him.

11. OPPOSITION TO GRANT OF PATENT.—(1) Any person may at any time within two months from the date of the advertisement of the acceptance of a complete specification give notice at the Patent Office of opposition to the grant of the patent on any of the following grounds:—

(a) that the applicant obtained the invention from him, or from a person of whom he is the legal representative; or

(b) that the invention has been claimed in any complete specification for a British patent which is or will be of prior date to the patent the grant of which is opposed, other than a specification deposited pursuant to an application made more than fifty years before the date of the application for such last-mentioned patent; or

(c) that the nature of the invention or the manner in which it is to be performed is not sufficiently or fairly described and ascertained in the complete specification; or

(d) that the complete specification describes or claims an invention other than that described in the provisional specification, and that such other invention forms the subject of an application made by the opponent in the interval between the leaving of the provisional specification and the leaving of the complete specification, but on no other ground.

(2) Where such notice is given the comptroller shall give notice of the opposition to the applicant, and shall, on the expiration of those two months, after hearing the applicant and the opponent, if desirous of being heard, decide on the case.

(3) The decision of the comptroller shall be subject to appeal to the law officer, who shall, if required, hear the applicant and the opponent, if the opponent is, in his opinion, a person entitled to be heard in opposition to the grant of the patent, and shall decide the case; and the law officer may, if he thinks fit, obtain the assistance of an expert, who shall be paid such remuneration as the law officer with the consent of the Treasury may determine.

12. GRANT AND SEALING OF PATENT.—(1) If there is no opposition, or, in case of opposition, if the determination is in favour of the grant of a patent, a patent shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, be granted to the applicant, or in the case of a joint application to the applicants jointly, and the comptroller shall cause the patent to be sealed with the seal of the patent office.

(2) A patent shall be sealed as soon as may be, and not after the expiration of fifteen months from the date of application, provided that—

(a) Where the comptroller has allowed an extension of the time within which a complete specification may be left or accepted, a further extension of four months after the said fifteen months shall be allowed for the sealing of the patent:

(b) Where the sealing is delayed by an appeal to the law officer, or by opposition to the grant of the patent, the patent may be sealed at such time as the law officer may direct:

(c) Where the patent is granted to the legal representative of an applicant who has died before the expiration of the time which would otherwise be allowed for sealing the patent, the patent may be sealed at any time within twelve months after the date of his death:

(d) Where in consequence of the neglect or failure of the applicant to pay any fee a patent cannot be sealed within the period allowed by this section, that period may, on payment of the prescribed fee and on compliance with the prescribed conditions, be extended to such an extent as may be prescribed, and this provision shall, in such cases as may be prescribed and subject to the prescribed conditions, apply where the period allowed for the sealing of the patent has expired before the commencement of this Act.

PATENTS AND DESIGNS ACT, 1907.

13. DATE OF PATENT.—Except as otherwise expressly provided by this Act, a patent shall be dated and sealed as of the date of the application: Provided that no proceedings shall be taken in respect of an infringement committed before the publication of the complete specification.

14. EFFECT, EXTENT, AND FORM OF PATENT.—(1) A patent sealed with the seal of the Patent Office shall have the same effect as if it were sealed with the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, and shall have effect throughout the United Kingdom and the Isle of Man.

Provided that a patentee may assign his patent for any place in or part of the United Kingdom, or Isle of Man, as effectually as if the patent were originally granted to extend to that place or part only.

(2) Every patent may be in the prescribed form and shall be granted for one invention only, but the specification may contain more than one claim; and it shall not be competent for any person in an action or other proceeding to take any objection to a patent on the ground that it has been granted for more than one invention.

15. FRAUDULENT APPLICATIONS FOR PATENTS.—(1) A patent granted to the true and first inventor shall not be invalidated by an application in fraud of him, or by provisional protection obtained thereon, or by any use or publication of the invention subsequent to that fraudulent application during the period of provisional protection.

(2) Where a patent has been revoked on the ground of fraud, the comptroller may, on the application of the true inventor made in accordance with the provisions of this Act, grant to him a patent in lieu of and bearing the same date as the patent so revoked:

Provided that no action shall be brought for any infringement of the patent so granted committed before the actual date when such patent was granted.

16. SINGLE PATENT FOR COGNATE INVENTIONS.—(1) Where the same applicant has put in two or more provisional specifications for inventions which are cognate or modifications one of the other, and has obtained thereby concurrent provisional protection for the same, and the comptroller is of opinion that the whole of such inventions are such as to constitute a single invention and may properly be included in one patent, he may accept one complete specification in respect of the whole of such applications and grant a single patent thereon.

(2) Such patent shall bear the date of the earliest of such applications, but in considering the validity of the same and for the purpose of the provisions of this Act with respect to oppositions to the grant of patents, the court or the comptroller, as the case may be, shall have regard to the respective dates of the provisional specifications relating to the several matters claimed therein.

Term of Patent.

17. TERM OF PATENT.—(1) The term limited in every patent for the duration thereof shall, save as otherwise expressly provided by this Act, be fourteen years from its date.

(2) A patent shall, notwithstanding anything therein or in this Act, cease if the patentee fails to pay the prescribed fees within the prescribed times; provided that the comptroller, upon the application of the patentee, shall, on receipt of such additional fee, not exceeding ten pounds, as may be prescribed, enlarge the time to such an extent as may be applied for but not exceeding three months.

(3) If any proceeding is taken in respect of an infringement of the patent committed after a failure to pay any fee within the prescribed time, and before any enlargement thereof, the court before which the proceeding is proposed to be taken may, if it thinks fit, refuse to award any damages in respect of such infringement.

18. EXTENSION OF TERM OF PATENT.—(1) A patentee may, after advertising in manner provided by rules of the Supreme Court his intention to do so, present a petition to the court praying that his patent may be extended for a further term, but such petition must be presented at least six months before the time limited for the expiration of the patent.

(2) Any person may give notice to the court of objection to the extension.

(3) On the hearing of any petition under this section the patentee and any person who has given such notice of objection shall be made parties to the proceeding, and the comptroller shall be entitled to appear and be heard, and shall appear if so directed by the court.

(4) The court, in considering its decision, shall have regard to the nature and merits of the invention in relation to the public, to the profits made by the patentee as such, and to all the circumstances of the case.

(5) If it appears to the court that the patentee has been inadequately remunerated by his patent, the court may by order extend the term of the patent for a further term not exceeding seven, or, in exceptional cases, fourteen years, or may order the grant of a new patent for such term as may be specified in the order and containing any restriction, conditions, and provisions the court may think fit.

19. Patents of Addition.—(1) Where a patent for an invention has been applied for or granted, and the applicant or the patentee, as the case may be, applies for a further patent in respect of any improvement in or modification of the invention, he may, if he thinks fit, in his application for the further patent, request that the term limited in that patent for the duration thereof be the same as that of the original patent or so much of that term as is unexpired.

(2) Where an application containing such a request is made, a patent (hereinafter referred to as a patent of addition) may be granted for such term as aforesaid.

(3) A patent of addition shall remain in force so long as the patent for the original invention remains in force, but no longer, and in respect of a patent of addition no fees shall be payable for renewal.

(4) The grant of a patent of addition shall be conclusive evidence that the invention is a proper subject for a patent of addition, and the validity of the patent shall not be questioned on the ground that the invention ought to have been the subject of an independent patent.

Restoration of Lapsed Patents.

20. Restoration of Lapsed Patents.—(1) Where any patent has become void owing to the failure of the patentee to pay any prescribed fee within the prescribed time, the patentee may apply to the comptroller in the prescribed manner for an order for the restoration of the patent.

(2) Every such application shall contain a statement of the circumstances which have led to the omission of the payment of the prescribed fee.

(3) If it appears from such statement that the omission was unintentional and that no undue delay has occurred in the making of the application, the comptroller shall advertise the application in the prescribed manner, and within such time as may be prescribed any person may give notice of opposition at the Patent Office.

(4) Where such notice is given the comptroller shall notify the applicant thereof.

(5) After the expiration of the prescribed period the comptroller shall hear the case and, subject to an appeal to the court, issue an order either restoring the patent or dismissing the application: Provided that in every order under this section restoring a patent such provisions as may be prescribed shall be inserted for the protection of persons who may have availed themselves of the subject-matter of the patent after the patent had been announced as void in the illustrated official journal.

Amendment of Specification.

21. Amendment of Specification by Comptroller.—(1) An applicant or a patentee may at any time, by request in writing left at the Patent Office, seek leave to amend his specification, including drawings forming part thereof, by way of disclaimer, correction, or explanation, stating the nature of, and the reasons for, the proposed amendment.

(2) The request and the nature of the proposed amendment shall be advertised in the prescribed manner, and at any time within one month from its first advertisement any person may give notice at the Patent Office of opposition to the amendment.

(3) Where such a notice is given the comptroller shall give notice of the opposition to the person making the request, and shall hear and decide the case.

(4) Where no notice of opposition is given, or the person so giving notice of opposition does not appear, the comptroller shall determine whether and subject to what conditions, if any, the amendment ought to be allowed.

(5) The decision of the comptroller in either case shall be subject to an appeal to the law officer, who shall, if required, hear the person making the request to amend and, where notice of opposition has been given, the person giving that notice, if he is, in the opinion of the law officer, entitled to be heard in opposition to the request, and, where there is no opposition, the comptroller, and may make an order determining whether and subject to what conditions (if any) the amendment ought to be allowed.

(6) No amendment shall be allowed that would make the specification, as amended, claim an invention substantially larger than or substantially different from the invention claimed by the specification as it stood before amendment.

(7) Leave to amend shall be conclusive as to the right of the party to make the amendment allowed, except in case of fraud; and the amendment shall be advertised in the prescribed manner, and shall in all courts and for all purposes be deemed to form part of the specification.

(8) This section shall not apply when and so long as any action for infringement or proceeding before the Court for the revocation of a patent is pending.

22. Amendment of Specification by the Court.—In any action for infringement of a patent or proceedings before a court for the revocation of a patent the court may by order allow the patentee to amend his specification by way of disclaimer in such manner, and subject to such terms as to costs, advertisement or otherwise, as the court may think fit:

Provided that no amendment shall be so allowed that would make the specification, as amended, claim an invention substantially larger than, or substantially different from, the invention claimed by the specification as it stood before the amendment, and where an application for such an order is made to the court notice of the application shall be given to the comptroller, and the comptroller shall have the right to appear and be heard, and shall appear if so directed by the court.

23. Restriction on Recovery of Damages.—Where an amendment of a specification by way of disclaimer, correction, or explanation, has been allowed under this Act, no damages shall be given in any action in respect of the use of the invention before the disclaimer, correction, or explanation, unless the patentee establishes to the satisfaction of the court that his original claim was framed in good faith and with reasonable skill and knowledge.

Compulsory Licences and Revocation.

24. Compulsory Licences and Revocation.—(1) Any person interested may present a petition to the Board of Trade alleging that the reasonable requirements of the public with respect to a patented invention have not been satisfied, and praying for the grant of a compulsory licence, or, in the alternative, for the revocation of the patent.

(2) The Board of Trade shall consider the petition, and if the parties do not come to an arrangement between themselves the Board of Trade, if satisfied that a primâ facie case has been made out, shall refer the petition to the court, and, if the Board are not so satisfied, they may dismiss the petition.

(3) Where any such petition is referred by the Board of Trade to the court, and it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the reasonable requirements of the public with reference to the patented invention have not been satisfied, the patentee may be ordered by the court to grant licences on such terms as the court may think just, or, if the court is of opinion that the reasonable requirements of the public will not be satisfied by the grant of licences, the patent may be revoked by order of the court.

Provided that an order of revocation shall not be made before the expiration of three years from the date of the patent, or if the patentee gives satisfactory reasons for his default.

(4) On the hearing of any petition under this section the patentee and any person claiming an interest in the patent as exclusive licensee or otherwise, shall be made parties to the proceeding, and the law officer or such other counsel as he may appoint shall be entitled to appear and be heard.

(5) For the purposes of this section the reasonable requirements of the public shall not be deemed to have been satisfied—

(a) if by reason of the default of the patentee to manufacture to an adequate extent and supply on reasonable terms the patented article, or any parts thereof which are necessary for its efficient working, or to carry on the patented process to an adequate extent or to grant licences on reasonable terms, any existing trade or industry, or the establishment of any new trade or industry in the United Kingdom is unfairly prejudiced, or the demand for the patented article or the article produced by the patented process is not reasonably met; or

(b) if any trade or industry in the United Kingdom is unfairly prejudiced by the conditions attached by the patentee before or after the passing of this Act to the purchase, hire, or use of the patented article or to the using or working of the patented process.

(6) An order of the court directing the grant of any licence under this section shall, without prejudice to any other method of enforcement, operate as if it were embodied in a deed granting a licence and made between the parties to the proceeding.

25. REVOCATION OF PATENT.—(1) Revocation of a patent may be obtained on petition to the court.

(2) Every ground on which—

(a) a patent might, immediately before the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, have been repealed by scire facias; or

(b) a patent may be revoked under this Act either by the comptroller or as an alternative to the grant of a compulsory licence; shall be available by way of defence to an action of infringement and shall also be a ground of revocation under this section.

(3) A petition for revocation of a patent may be presented—

(a) by the Attorney-General or any person authorised by him; or

(b) by any person alleging—

(i) that the patent was obtained in fraud of his rights, or of the rights of any person under or through whom he claims; or

(ii) that he, or any person under or through whom he claims, was the true inventor of any invention included in the claim of the patentee; or

(iii) that he, or any person under or through whom he claims an interest in any trade, business, or manufacture, had publicly manufactured, used, or sold, within this realm, before the date of the patent, anything claimed by the patentee as his invention.

26. POWER OF COMPTROLLER TO REVOKE PATENTS ON CERTAIN GROUNDS.—(1) Any person who would have been entitled to oppose the grant of a patent, or is the successor in interest of a person who was so entitled, may, within two years from the date of the patent, in the prescribed manner apply to the comptroller for an order revoking the patent on any one or more of the grounds on which the grant of the patent might have been opposed.

Provided that when an action for infringement or proceedings for the revocation of the patent are pending in any court, an application under this section shall not be made except with the leave of the court.

(2) The comptroller shall give notice of the application to the patentee, and after hearing the parties, if desirous of being heard, may make an order revoking the patent or requiring the specification relating thereto to be amended by disclaimer, correction, or explanation, or dismissing the application; but the comptroller shall not make an order revoking the patent unless the circumstances are such as would have justified him in refusing to grant the patent had the proceedings been proceedings in an opposition to the grant of a patent.

(3) A patentee may at any time by giving notice in the prescribed manner to the comptroller offer to surrender his patent, and the comptroller may, if after giving notice of the offer and hearing all parties who desire to be heard he thinks fit, accept the offer, and thereupon make an order for the revocation of the patent.

(4) Any decision of the comptroller under this section shall be subject to appeal to the court.

27. REVOCATION OF PATENTS WORKED OUTSIDE THE UNITED KINGDOM.—(1) At any time not less than four years after the date of a patent and not less than one year after the passing of this Act, any person may apply to the comptroller for the revocation of the patent on the ground that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on exclusively or mainly outside the United Kingdom.

(2) The comptroller shall consider the application, and, if after enquiry he is satisfied that the allegations contained therein are correct, then, subject to the provisions of this section, and unless the patentee proves that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on to an adequate extent in the United Kingdom, or gives satisfactory reasons why the article or process is not so manufactured or carried on, the comptroller may make an order revoking the patent either—

(a) forthwith; or

Provided that no such order shall be made which is at variance with any treaty, convention, arrangement, or engagement with any foreign country or British possession.

(3) If within the time limited in the order the patented article or process is not manufactured or carried on within the United Kingdom to an adequate extent, but the patentee gives satisfactory reasons why it is not so manufactured or carried on, the comptroller may extend the period mentioned in the previous order for such period not exceeding twelve months as may be specified in the subsequent order.

(4) Any decision of the comptroller under this section shall be subject to appeal to the court, and on any such appeal the law officer or such other counsel as he may appoint shall be entitled to appear and be heard.

Register of Patents.

28. REGISTER OF PATENTS.—(1) There shall be kept at the Patent Office a book called the register of patents, wherein shall be entered the names and addresses of grantees of patents, notifications of assignments and of transmissions of patents, of licences under patents, and of amendments, extensions, and revocations of patents, and such other matters affecting the validity or proprietorship of patents as may be prescribed.

(2) The register of patents existing at the commencement of this Act shall be incorporated with and form part of the register of patents under this Act.

(3) The register of patents shall be primâ facie evidence of any matters by this Act directed or authorised to be inserted therein.

(4) Copies of deeds, licences, and any other documents affecting the proprietorship in any letters patent or in any licence thereunder, must be supplied to the comptroller in the prescribed manner for filing in the Patent Office.

Crown.

29. PATENT TO BIND CROWN.—A patent shall have to all intents the like effect as against His Majesty the King as it has against a subject:

Provided that any Government department may, by themselves, their agents, contractors, or others, at any time after the application, use the invention for the services of the Crown on such terms as may, either before or after the use thereof, be agreed on, with the approval of the Treasury, between the department and the patentee, or, in default of agreement, as may be settled by the Treasury after hearing all parties interested.

30. ASSIGNMENT TO SECRETARY FOR WAR OR THE ADMIRALTY OF CERTAIN INVENTIONS.—(1) The inventor of any improvement in instruments or munitions of war may (either for or without valuable consideration) assign to the Secretary of State for War or the Admiralty on behalf of His Majesty all the benefit of the invention and of any patent obtained or to be obtained for the invention; and the Secretary of State or the Admiralty may be a party to the assignment.

(2) The assignment shall effectually vest the benefit of the invention and patent in the Secretary of State or the Admiralty on behalf of His Majesty, and all covenants and agreements therein contained for keeping the invention secret and otherwise shall be valid and effectual (notwithstanding any want of valuable consideration), and may be enforced accordingly by the Secretary of State or the Admiralty.

(3) Where any such assignment has been made, the Secretary of State or the Admiralty may at any time before the publication of the complete specification certify to the comptroller that, in the interest of the public service, the particulars of the invention and of the manner in which it is to be performed should be kept secret.

(4) If the Secretary of State or the Admiralty so certify the application and specifications, with the drawings (if any), and any amendment of the complete specification, and any copies of such documents and drawings shall, instead of being left in the ordinary manner at the Patent Office, be delivered to the comptroller in a packet sealed by authority of the Secretary of State or the Admiralty.

(5) The packet shall, until the expiration of the term during which a patent for the invention may be in force, be kept sealed by the comptroller, and shall not be opened save under the authority of an order of the Secretary of State or the Admiralty or of the law officer.

(6) The sealed packet shall be delivered at any time during the continuance of the patent to any person authorised by the Secretary of State or the Admiralty to receive it, and shall if returned to the comptroller be again kept sealed by him.

(7) On the expiration of the term of the patent, the sealed packet shall be delivered to the Secretary of State or the Admiralty.

(8) Where the Secretary of State or the Admiralty certify as aforesaid, after an application for a patent has been left at the Patent Office, but before the publication of the complete specification, the application and specifications, with the drawings (if any), shall be forthwith placed in a packet sealed by authority of the comptroller, and the packet shall be subject to the foregoing provisions respecting a packet sealed by authority of the Secretary of State or the Admiralty.

(9) No proceeding by petition or otherwise shall lie for revocation of a patent granted for an invention in relation to which a certificate has been given by the Secretary of State or the Admiralty as aforesaid.

(10) No copy of any specification or other document or drawing, by this section required to be placed in a sealed packet, shall in any manner whatever be published or open to the inspection of the public, but, save as in this section otherwise directed, the provisions of this Act shall apply in respect of any such invention and patent as aforesaid.

(11) The Secretary of State or the Admiralty may at any time waive the benefit of this section with respect to any particular invention, and the specifications, documents, and drawings shall be thenceforth kept and dealt with in the ordinary way.

(12) The communication of any invention for any improvement in instruments or munitions of war to the Secretary of State or the Admiralty, or to any person or persons authorised by the Secretary of State or the Admiralty to investigate the same or the merits thereof, shall not, nor shall anything done for the purposes of the investigation, be deemed use of publication of such invention so as to prejudice the grant or validity of any patent for the same.

(13) Rules may be made under this Act, after consultation with the Secretary of State and the Admiralty, for the purpose of ensuring secrecy with respect to patents to which this section applies, and those rules may modify any of the provisions of this Act in their application to such patents as aforesaid so far as may appear necessary for the purpose aforesaid.

Legal Proceedings.

31. Hearing with Assessor.—(1) In an action or proceeding for infringement or revocation of a patent, the court may, if it think fit, and shall on the request of either of the parties to the proceeding, call in the aid of an assessor specially qualified, and try the case wholly or partially with his assistance; the action shall be tried without a jury unless the court otherwise directs.

(2) The Court of Appeal may, if they think fit, in any proceeding before them call in the aid of an assessor as aforesaid.

(3) The remuneration, if any, to be paid to an assessor under this section shall be determined by the Court or the Court of Appeal, as the case may be, and be paid as part of the expenses of the execution of this Act.

32. Power to Counterclaim for Revocation in an Action for Infringement.—A defendant in an action for infringement of a patent, if entitled to present a petition to the court for the revocation of the patent, may, without presenting such a petition, apply in accordance with the rules of the Supreme Court by way of counterclaim in the action for the revocation of the patent.

33. Exemption of Innocent Infringer from Liability for Damages.—A patentee shall not be entitled to recover any damages in respect of any infringement of a patent granted after the commencement of this Act from any defendant who proves that at at the date of the infringement he was not aware, nor had reasonable means of making himself aware, of the existence of the patent; and the marking of an article with the word "patent," "patented," or any word or words expressing or implying that a patent has been obtained for the article, stamped, engraved, impressed on, or otherwise applied to the article, shall not be deemed to constitute notice of the existence of the patent, unless the word or words are accompanied by the year and number of the patent:

Provided that nothing in this section shall affect any proceedings for an injunction.

34. Order for Inspection, etc. in Action.—In an action for infringement of a patent, the court may on the application of either party make such order for an injunction inspection or account, and impose such terms and give such directions respecting the same and the proceedings thereon as the court may see fit.

35. Certificate of Validity Questioned and Costs thereon.—In an action for infringement of a patent, the court may certify that the validity of the patent came in question; and, if the court so certifies, then in any subsequent action for infringement the plaintiff in that action on obtaining a final order or judgment in his favour shall, unless the court trying the action otherwise directs, have his full costs, charges, and expenses as between solicitor and client.

36. Remedy in case of Groundless Threats of Legal Proceedings.—Where any person claiming to be the patentee of an invention, by circulars, advertisements, or otherwise, threatens any other person with any legal proceedings or liability in respect of any alleged infringement of the patent, any person aggrieved thereby may bring an action against him, and may obtain an injunction against the continuance of such threats, and may recover such damage (if any) as he has sustained thereby, if the alleged infringement to which the threats related was not in fact an infringement of any legal rights of the person making such threats:

Provided that this section shall not apply if the person making such threats with due diligence commences and prosecutes an action for infringement of his patent.

Miscellaneous.

37. Grant of Patents to two or more Persons.—Where, after the commencement of this Act, a patent is granted to two or more persons jointly, they shall, unless otherwise specified in the patent, be treated for the purpose of the devolution of the legal interest therein as joint tenants, but, subject to any contract to the contrary, each of such persons shall be entitled to use the invention for his own profit without accounting to the others, but shall not be entitled to grant a licence without their consent, and, if any such person dies, his beneficial interest in the patent shall devolve on his personal representatives as part of his personal estate.

38. Avoidance of Certain Conditions Attached to the Sale, etc. of Patented Articles.—(1) It shall not be lawful in any contract made after the passing of this Act in relation to the sale or lease of, or licence to use or work, any article or process protected by a patent to insert a condition the effect of which will be—

(a) to prohibit or restrict the purchaser, lessee, or licensee from using any article or class of articles, whether patented or not, or any patented process, supplied or owned by any person other than the seller, lessor, or licensor or his nominees; or

(b) to require the purchaser, lessee, or licensee to acquire from the seller, lessor, or licensor, or his nominees, any article or class of articles not protected by the patent;

and any such condition shall be null and void, as being in restraint of trade and contrary to public policy.

Provided that this subsection shall not apply if—

(i) the seller, lessor, or licensor proves that at the time the contract was entered into the purchaser, lessee, or licensee had the option of purchasing the article or obtaining a lease or licence on reasonable terms, without such conditions as aforesaid; and

(ii) the contract entitles the purchaser, lessee, or licensee to relieve himself of his liability to observe any such condition on giving the other party three months' notice in writing and on payment in compensation for such relief in the case of a purchase of such sum, or in the case of a lease or licence of such rent or royalty for the residue of the term of the contract, as may be fixed by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade.

(2) Any contract relating to the lease of or licence to use or work any patented article or patented process, whether made before or after the passing of this Act, may at any time after the patent or all the patents by which the article or process was protected at the time of the making of the contract has or have ceased to be in force, and notwithstanding anything in the same or in any other contract to the contrary, be determined by either party on giving three months' notice in writing to the other party; but where any such notice is given determining any contract made before the passing of this Act, the party giving the notice shall be liable to pay such compensation as failing agreement may be awarded by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade.

(3) Any contract made before the passing of this Act relating to the lease of or licence to use or work any patented article or process and containing any condition which, had the contract been made after the passing of this Act, would by virtue of this section have been null and void may, at any time before the contract is determinable under the last preceding subsection, and notwithstanding anything in the same or any other contract to the contrary, be determined by either party on giving three months' notice in writing to the other party, but where any such notice is given the party giving the notice shall be liable to pay such compensation as, failing agreement, may be awarded by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade.

(4) The insertion by the patentee in a contract made after the passing of this Act of any condition which by virtue of this section is null and void shall be available as a defence to an action for infringement of the patent to which the contract relates brought while that contract is in force.

(5) Nothing in this section shall—

(a) affect any condition in a contract whereby a person is prohibited from selling any goods other than those of a particular person; or

(b) be construed as validating any contract which would, apart from this section, be invalid; or

(c) affect any right of determining a contract or condition in a contract exerciseable independently of this section; or

(d) affect any condition in a contract for the lease of or licence to use a patented article, whereby the lessor or licensor reserves to himself or his nominees the right to supply such new parts of the patented article as may be required to put or keep it in repair.

39. COSTS AND SECURITY FOR COSTS.—(1) The comptroller shall, in proceedings relating to an opposition to the grant of a patent or to an application for the amendment of a specification or the revocation of a patent, have power by order to award to any party such costs as he may consider reasonable, and to direct how and by what parties they are to be paid, and any such order may be made a rule of the court.

(2) If a party giving notice of opposition to the grant of a patent or to the amendment of a specification, or applying to the comptroller for the revocation of a patent, or giving notice of appeal from any decision of the comptroller, neither resides nor carries on business in the United Kingdom or the Isle of Man, the comptroller, or, in case of appeal to the law officer, the law officer, may require such party to give security for costs of the proceedings or appeal, and in default of such security being given may treat the proceedings or appeal as abandoned.

40. PROCEDURE ON APPEAL TO LAW OFFICER.—The law officer may examine witnesses on oath and administer oaths for that purpose, and may make rules regulating references and appeals to the law officer and the practice and procedure before him under this Part of this Act; and in any proceeding before the law officer under this Part of this Act, the law officer may order costs to be paid by either party, and any such order may be made a rule of the court.

41. PROVISIONS AS TO ANTICIPATION.—(1) An invention covered by any patent applied for on or after the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and five shall not be deemed to have been anticipated by reason only of its publication in a specification left pursuant to an application made in the United Kingdom not less than fifty years before the date of the application for the patent, or of its publication in a provisional specification of any date not followed by a complete specification

(2) A patent shall not be held to be invalid by reason only of the invention in respect of which the patent was granted, or any part thereof, having been published prior to the date of the patent, if the patentee proves to the satisfaction of the court that the publication was made without his knowledge and consent, and that the matter published was derived or obtained from him, and, if he learnt of the publication before the date of his application for the patent, that he applied for and obtained protection for his invention with all reasonable diligence after learning of the publication.

42. DISCONFORMITY.—A patent shall not be held to be invalid on the ground that the complete specification claims a further or different invention to that contained in the provisional, if the invention therein claimed, so far as it is not contained in the provisional, was novel at the date when the complete specification was put in, and the applicant was the first and true inventor thereof.

43. PATENT ON APPLICATION OF REPRESENTATIVE OF DECEASED INVENTOR.—(1) If the person claiming to be inventor of an invention dies without making an application for a patent for the invention, application may be made by, and a patent for the invention granted to, his legal representative.

(2) Every such application must contain a declaration by the legal representative that he believes him to be the true and first inventor of the invention.

44. LOSS OR DESTRUCTION OF PATENT.—If a patent is lost or destroyed, or its non-production is accounted for to the satisfaction of the comptroller, the comptroller may at any time seal a duplicate thereof.

45. PROVISIONS AS TO EXHIBITIONS.—(1) The exhibition of an invention at an industrial or international exhibition, certified as such by the Board of Trade, or the publication of any description of the invention during the period of the holding of the exhibition, or the use of the invention for the purpose of the exhibition in the place where the exhibition is held, or the use of the invention during the period of the holding of the exhibition by any person elsewhere, without the privity or consent of the inventor, shall not prejudice the right of the inventor to apply for and obtain a patent in respect of the invention or the validity of any patent granted on the application, provided that—

(a) the exhibitor, before exhibiting the invention, gives the comptroller the prescribed notice of his intention to do so; and

(b) the application for a patent is made before or within six months from the date of the opening of the exhibition.

(2) His Majesty may by Order in Council apply this section to any exhibition mentioned in the Order in like manner as if it were an industrial or international exhibition certified as such by the Board of Trade, and any such Order may provide that the exhibitor shall be relieved from the condition of giving notice to the comptroller of his intention to exhibit, and shall be so relieved either absolutely or upon such terms and conditions as may be stated in the Order.

46. PUBLICATION OF ILLUSTRATED JOURNAL, INDEXES, ETC.—(1) The comptroller shall issue periodically an illustrated journal of patented inventions, as well as reports of patent cases decided by courts of law, and any other information that he may deem generally useful or important.

(2) Provision shall be made by the comptroller for keeping on sale copies of such journal, and also of all complete specifications of patents in force, with any accompanying drawings.

(3) The comptroller shall continue, in such form as he deems expedient, the indexes and abridgments of specifications hitherto published, and shall prepare and publish such other indexes, abridgments of specifications, catalogues, and other works relating to inventions, as he thinks fit.

47. PATENT MUSEUM.—(1) The control and management of the Patent Museum and its contents shall remain vested in the Board of Education, subject to such directions as His Majesty in Council may think fit to give.

(2) The Board of Education may at any time require a patentee to furnish them with a model of his invention on payment to the patentee of the cost of the manufacture of the model, the amount to be settled, in case of dispute, by the Board of Trade.

48. FOREIGN VESSELS IN BRITISH WATERS.—(1) A patent shall not prevent the use of an invention for the purposes of the navigation of a foreign vessel within the jurisdiction of any of His Majesty's Courts in the United Kingdom, or Isle of Man, or the use of an invention in a foreign vessel within that jurisdiction, provided it is not used therein for or in connection with the manufacture or preparation of anything intended to be sold in or exported from the United Kingdom or Isle of Man.

(2) This section shall not extend to vessels of any foreign state of which the laws do not confer corresponding rights with respect to the use of inventions in British vessels while in the ports of that state, or in the waters within the jurisdiction of its courts.

PART II.

DESIGNS.

Registration of Designs.

49. APPLICATION FOR REGISTRATION OF DESIGNS.—(1) The comptroller may, on the application made in the prescribed form and manner of any person claiming to be the proprietor of any new or original design not previously published in the United Kingdom, register the design under this Part of this Act.

(2) The same design may be registered in more than one class, and, in case of doubt as to the class in which a design ought to be registered, the comptroller may decide the question.

(3) The comptroller may, if he thinks fit, refuse to register any design presented to him for registration, but any person aggrieved by any such refusal may appeal to the Board of Trade, and the Board shall, after hearing the applicant and the comptroller, if so required, make an order determining whether, and subject to what conditions, if any, registration is to be permitted.

(4) An application which, owing to any default or neglect on the part of the applicant, has not been completed so as to enable registration to be effected within the prescribed time shall be deemed to be abandoned.

(5) A design when registered shall be registered as of the date of the application for registration.

50. REGISTRATION OF DESIGNS IN NEW CLASSES.—Where a design has been registered in one or more classes of goods the application of the proprietor of the design to register it in some one or more other classes shall not be refused, nor shall the registration thereof be invalidated—

(a) on the ground of the design not being a new and original design, by reason only that it was so previously registered; or

(b) on the ground of the design having been previously published in the United Kingdom, by reason only that it has been applied to goods of any class in which it was so previously registered.

51. CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRATION.—(1) The comptroller shall grant a certificate of registration to the proprietor of the design when registered.

(2) The comptroller may, in case of loss of the original certificate, or in any other case in which he deems it expedient, furnish one or more copies of the certificate.

52. REGISTER OF DESIGNS.—(1) There shall be kept at the Patent Office a book called the Register of Designs wherein shall be entered the names and addresses of proprietors of registered designs, notifications of assignments and of transmissions of registered designs, and such other matters as may be prescribed.

(2) The register of designs existing at the commencement of this Act shall be incorporated with and form part of the register of designs under this Act.

(3) The register of designs shall be primâ facie evidence of any matters by this Act directed or authorised to be entered therein.

Copyright in Registered Designs.

53. COPYRIGHT ON REGISTRATION.—(1) When a design is registered, the registered proprietor of the design shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have copyright in the design during five years from the date of registration.

(2) If within the prescribed time before the expiration of the said five years application for the extension of the period of copyright is made to the comptroller in the prescribed manner, the comptroller shall on payment of the prescribed fee extend the period of copyright for a second period of five years from the expiration of the original period of five years.

(3) If within the prescribed time before the expiration of such second period of five years application for the extension of the period of copyright is made to the comptroller in the prescribed manner, the comptroller may, subject to any rules under this Act, on payment of the prescribed fee, extend the period of copyright for a third period of five years from the expiration of the second period of five years.

54. REQUIREMENTS BEFORE DELIVERY ON SALE.—(1) Before delivery on sale of any articles to which a registered design has been applied, the proprietor shall—

(a) (if exact representations or specimens were not furnished on the application for registration), furnish to the comptroller the prescribed number of exact representations or specimens of the design; and if he fails to do so, the the comptroller may erase his name from the register, and thereupon the copyright in the design shall cease; and

(b) cause each such article to be marked with the prescribed mark, or with the prescribed words or figures, denoting that the design is registered; and if he fails to do so the proprietor shall not be entitled to recover any penalty or damages in respect of any infringement of his copyright in the design unless he shows that he took all proper steps to ensure the marking of the article, or unless he shows that the infringement took place after the person guilty thereof knew or had received notice of the existence of the copyright in the design.

(2) Where a representation is made to the Board of Trade by or on behalf of any trade or industry that in the interests of the trade or industry it is expedient to dispense with or modify as regards any class or description of articles any of the requirements of this section as to marking, the Board may, if they think fit, by rule under this Act dispense with or modify such requirements as regards any such class or description of articles to such extent and subject to such conditions as they think fit.

55. EFFECT OF DISCLOSURE ON COPYRIGHT.—The disclosure of a design by the proprietor to any other person, in such circumstances as would make it contrary to good faith for that other person to use or publish the design, and the disclosure of a design in breach of good faith by any person other than the proprietor of the design, and the acceptance of a first and confidential order for goods bearing a new or original textile design intended for registration, shall not be deemed to be a publication of the design sufficient to invalidate the copyright thereof if registration thereof is obtained subsequently to the disclosure or acceptance.

56. INSPECTION OF REGISTERED DESIGNS.—(1) During the existence of copyright in a design, or such shorter period not being less than two years from the registration of the design as may be prescribed, the design shall not be open to inspection except by the proprietor or a person authorised in writing by him, or a person authorised by the comptroller or by the court, and furnishing such information as may enable the comptroller to identify the design, and shall not be open to the inspection of any person except in the presence of the comptroller, or of an officer acting under him, and on payment of the prescribed fee; and the person making the inspection shall not be entitled to take any copy of the design, or of any part thereof:

Provided that where registration of a design is refused on the ground of identity with a design already registered, the applicant for registration shall be entitled to inspect the design so registered.

(2) After the expiration of the copyright in a design, or such shorter period as aforesaid, the design shall be open to inspection, and copies thereof may be taken by any person on payment of the prescribed fee.

(3) Different periods may be prescribed under this section for different classes of goods.

57. INFORMATION AS TO EXISTENCE OF COPYRIGHT.—On the request of any person furnishing such information as may enable the comptroller to identify the design, and on payment of the prescribed fee, the comptroller shall inform such person whether the registration still exists in respect of the design, and if so, in respect of what classes of goods, and shall state the date of registration, and the name and address of the registered proprietor.

58. CANCELLATION OF REGISTRATION OF DESIGNS USED WHOLLY OR MAINLY ABROAD.—(1) At any time after the registration of a design any person may apply to the comptroller for the cancellation of the registration on the ground that the design is used for manufacture exclusively or mainly outside the United Kingdom, and where such an application is made the provisions of this Act with respect to the revocation of patents worked outside the United Kingdom (including those relating to costs) shall apply with the necessary modifications, except that there shall be no appeal from the decision of the comptroller.

(2) Such ground as aforesaid shall be available by way of a defence to an action for infringement of the copyright in the design.

Industrial and International Exhibitions.

59. PROVISIONS AS TO EXHIBITIONS.—(1) The exhibition at an industrial or international exhibition certified as such by the Board of Trade, or the exhibition elsewhere during the period of the holding of the exhibition, without the privity or consent of the proprietor, of a design, or of any article to which a design is applied, or the publication during the holding of any such exhibition, of a description of a design, shall not prevent the design from being registered, or invalidate the registration thereof: Provided that—

(a) The exhibitor, before exhibiting the design or article, or publishing a description of the design, gives the comptroller the prescribed notice of his intention to do so; and

(b) The application for registration is made before or within six months from the date of the opening of the exhibition.

(2) His Majesty may, by Order in Council, apply this section to any exhibition mentioned in the order in like manner as if it were an industrial or international exhibition certified as such by the Board of Trade, and any such Order may provide that the exhibitor shall be relieved from the condition of giving notice to the comptroller of his intention to exhibit, and shall be so relieved either absolutely or upon such terms and conditions as may be stated in the order.

Legal Proceedings.

60. PIRACY OF REGISTERED DESIGN.—(1) During the existence of copyright in any design it shall not be lawful for any person—

(a) For the purposes of sale to apply or cause to be applied to any article in any class of goods in which the design is registered the design or any fraudulent or obvious imitation thereof, except with the licence or written consent of the registered proprietor, or to do any thing with a view to enable the design to be so applied; or

(b) Knowing that the design or any fraudulent or obvious imitation thereof has been applied to any article without the consent of the registered proprietor, to publish or expose or cause to be published or exposed for sale that article.

(2) If any person acts in contravention of this section he shall be liable for every contravention to pay to the registered proprietor of the design a sum not exceeding fifty pounds, recoverable as a simple contract debt, or if the proprietor elects to bring an action for the recovery of damages for such contravention, and for an injunction against the repetition thereof, he shall be liable to pay such damages as may be awarded and to be restrained by injunction accordingly:

Provided that the total sum recoverable as a simple contract debt in respect of any one design shall not exceed one hundred pounds.

61. Application of Certain Provisions of the Act as to Patents to Designs.—The provisions of this Act with regard to certificates of the validity of a patent, and to the remedy in case of groundless threats of legal proceedings by a patentee, shall apply in the case of registered designs in like manner as they apply in the case of patents, with the substitution of references to the copyright in a design for references to a patent, and of references to the proprietor of a design for references to the patentee, and of references to the design for references to the invention.

Part III.

General.

Patent Office and Proceedings thereat.

62. Patent Office.—(1) The Treasury may continue to provide for the purposes of this Act and the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7 c. 15), an office with all requisite buildings and conveniences, which shall be called, and is in this Act referred to as, the Patent Office.

(2) The Patent Office shall be under the immediate control of the comptroller, who shall act under the superintendence and direction of the Board of Trade.

(3) Any act or thing directed to be done by or to the comptroller may be done by or to any officer authorised by the Board of Trade.

(4) Rules under this Act may provide for the establishment of branch offices for designs at Manchester or elsewhere, and for any document or thing required by this Act to be sent to or done at the Patent Office being sent to or done at any branch office which may be established.

63. Officers and Clerks.—(1) There shall continue to be a comptroller-general of patents, designs, and trade marks, and the Board of Trade may, subject to the approval of the Treasury, appoint the comptroller, and so many examiners and other officers and clerks, with such designations and duties as the Board of Trade think fit, and may remove any of those officers and clerks.

(2) The salaries of those officers and clerks shall be appointed by the Board of Trade, with the concurrence of the Treasury, and those salaries and the other expenses of the execution of this Act and the Trade Marks Act, 1905, shall continue to be paid out of money provided by Parliament.

64. Seal of Patent Office.—Impressions of the seal of the Patent Office shall be judicially noticed and admitted in evidence.

Fees.

65. Fees.—There shall be paid in respect of the grant of patents and the registration of designs, and applications therefor, and in respect of other matters with relation to patents and designs under this Act, such fees as may be, with the sanction of the Treasury, prescribed by the Board of Trade, so however that the fees prescribed in respect of the instruments and matters mentioned in the first Schedule to this Act shall not exceed those specified in that Schedule.

7 EDWARD 7, Chapter 29.

Provisions as to Registers and other Documents in Patent Office.

66. Trust not to be Entered in Registers.—There shall not be entered in any register kept under this Act, or be receivable by the comptroller, any notice of any trust expressed, implied or constructive.

67. Inspection of and Extracts from Registers.—Every register kept under this Act shall at all convenient times be open to the inspection of the public, subject to the provisions of this Act and to such regulations as may be prescribed; and certified copies, sealed with the seal of the Patent Office, of any entry in any such register shall be given to any person requiring the same on payment of the prescribed fee.

68. Privilege of Reports of Examiners.—Reports of examiners made under this Act shall not in any case be published or be open to public inspection, and shall not be liable to production or inspection in any legal proceeding, unless the court or officer having power to order discovery in such legal proceeding certifies that such production or inspection is desirable in the interests of justice, and ought to be allowed.

69. Prohibition of Publication of Specification, Drawings, etc. where Application Abandoned, etc.—(1) Where an application for a patent has been abandoned, or become void, the specifications and drawings (if any) accompanying or left in connexion with such application, shall not, save as otherwise expressly provided by this Act, at any time be open to public inspection or be published by the comptroller.

(2) Where an application for a design has been abandoned or refused the application and any drawings, photographs, tracings, representations, or specimens left in connexion with the application shall not at any time be open to public inspection or be published by the comptroller.

70. Power for Comptroller to correct Clerical Errors.—The comptroller may, on request in writing accompanied by the prescribed fee,—

(a) correct any clerical error in or in connexion with an application for a patent or in any patent or any specification;

(b) cancel the registration of a design either wholly or in respect of any particular goods in connexion with which the design is registered;

(c) correct any clerical error in the representation of a design or in the name or address of the proprietor of any patent or design, or in any other matter which is entered upon the register of patents or the register of designs.

71. Entry of Assignments and Transmissions in Registers.—(1) Where a person becomes entitled by assignment, transmission, or other operation of law to a patent, or to the copyright in a registered design, the comptroller shall, on request and on proof of title to his satisfaction, register him as the proprietor of a patent or design.

(2) Where any person becomes entitled as mortgagee, licensee, or otherwise to any interest in a patent or design, the comptroller shall, on request and on proof of title to his satisfaction, cause notice of the interest to be entered in the prescribed manner in the register of patents or designs, as the case may be.

(3) The person registered as the proprietor of a patent or design shall, subject to the provisions of this Act and to any rights appearing from the register to be vested in any other person, have power absolutely to assign, grant licences as to, or otherwise deal with, the patent or design and to give effectual receipts for any consideration for any such assignment, licence, or dealing: Provided that any equities in respect of the patent or design may be enforced in like manner as in respect of any other personal property.

72. Rectification of Registers by Court.—(1) The court may, on the application in the prescribed manner of any person aggrieved by the non-insertion in or omission from the register of patents or designs of any entry, or by any entry made in either such register without sufficient cause, or by any entry wrongly remaining on either such register, or by an error or defect in any entry on either such register, make such order for making, expunging, or varying such entry as it may think fit.

(2) The court may in any proceeding under this section decide any question that it may be necessary or expedient to decide in connexion with the rectification of a register.

(3) The prescribed notice of any application under this section shall be given to the comptroller, who shall have the right to appear and be heard thereon, and shall appear if so directed by the court.

(4) Any order of the court rectifying a register shall direct that notice of the rectification be served on the comptroller in the prescribed manner, who shall upon the receipt of such notice rectify the register accordingly.

Powers and Duties of Comptroller.

73. Exercise of Discretionary Power by Comptroller.—Where any discretionary power is by or under this act given to the comptroller, he shall not exercise that power adversely to the applicant for a patent, or for amendment of a specification, or for registration of a design, without (if so required within the prescribed time by the applicant) giving the applicant an opportunity of being heard.

74. Power of Comptroller to take Directions of Law Officers.—The comptroller may, in any case of doubt or difficulty arising in the administration of any of the provisions of this Act, apply to a law officer for directions in the matter.

75. Refusal to grant Patent, etc. in certain Cases.—The comptroller may refuse to grant a patent for an invention, or to register a design, of which the use would, in his opinion, be contrary to law or morality.

76. Annual Reports of Comptroller.—The comptroller shall, before the first day of June in every year, cause a report respecting the execution by or under him of this Act to be laid before both Houses of Parliament, and therein shall include for the year to which the report relates all general rules made in that year under or for the purposes of this Act, and an account of all fees, salaries, and allowances, and other money received and paid under this Act.

Evidence, etc.

77. Evidence before Comptroller.—(1) Subject to rules under this Act in any proceeding under this Act before the comptroller the evidence shall be given by statutory declaration in the absence of directions to the contrary; but in any case in which the comptroller thinks it right so to do, he may take evidence vivâ voce in lieu of or in addition to evidence by declaration or allow any declarant to be cross-examined on his declaration. Any such statutory declaration may in the case of appeal be used before the court in lieu of evidence by affidavit, but if so used shall have all the incidents and consequences of evidence by affidavit.

(2) In case any part of the evidence is taken vivâ voce, the comptroller shall, in respect of requiring the attendance of witnesses and taking evidence on oath, be in the same position in all respects as an official referee of the Supreme Court.

78. Certificate of Comptroller to be Evidence.—A certificate purporting to be under the hand of the comptroller as to any entry, matter, or thing which he is authorised by this Act, or any general rules made thereunder, to make or do, shall be primâ facie evidence of the entry having been made, and of the contents thereof, and of the matter or thing having been done or left undone.

79. Evidence of Documents in Patent Office.—Printed or written copies or extracts, purporting to be certified by the comptroller and sealed with the seal of the Patent Office, of or from patents, specifications, and other documents in the Patent Office, and of or from registers and other books kept there, shall be admitted in evidence in all courts in His Majesty's dominions, and in all proceedings, without further proof or production of the originals.

80. Transmission of Certified Printed Copies of Specifications, etc.—(1) Copies of all specifications, drawings, and amendments left at the Patent Office after the commencement of this Act, printed for and sealed with the seal of the Patent Office, shall be transmitted to the Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art, and to the Enrolments Office of the Chancery Division in Ireland, and to the Rolls Office in the Isle of Man, within twenty-one days after they have been accepted or allowed at the Patent Office.

(2) Certified copies of or extracts from any such documents and of any documents so transmitted in pursuance of any enactment repealed by this Act shall be given to any person on payment of the prescribed fee; and any such copy or extract shall be admitted in evidence in all courts in Scotland and Ireland and in the Isle of Man without further proof or production of the originals.

81. Applications and Notices by Post.—Any application, notice, or other document authorised or required to be left, made, or given at the Patent Office or to the comptroller, or to any other person under this Act, may be sent by post.

82. Excluded Days.—Where the last day fixed by this Act for doing anything under this Act falls on any day specified in rules under this Act as an excluded day, the rules may provide for the thing being done on the next following day not being an excluded day.

83. Declaration by Infant, Lunatic, etc.—(1) If any person is, by reason of infancy, lunacy, or other disability, incapable of making any declaration or doing anything required or permitted by or under this Act, the guardian or committee (if any) of the person subject to the disability, or, if there be none any person appointed by any court possessing jurisdiction in respect of his property, may make such declaration or a declaration as nearly corresponding thereto as circumstances permit, and do such thing in the name and on behalf of the person subject to the disability.

(2) An appointment may be made by the court for the purposes of this section upon the petition of any person acting on behalf of the person subject to the disability or of any other person interested in the making of the declaration or the doing of the thing.

Register of Patent Agents.

84. Register of Patent Agents.—(1) A person shall not be entitled to describe himself as a patent agent, whether by advertisement, by description on his place of business, by any document issued by him, or otherwise, unless he is registered as a patent agent in pursuance of this Act or an Act repealed by this Act.

(2) Every person who proves to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade that prior to the twenty-fourth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, he had been bonâ fide practising as a patent agent shall be entitled to be registered as a patent agent in pursuance of this Act.

(3) If any person knowingly describes himself as a patent agent in contravention of this section he shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds.

(4) In this section "patent agent" means exclusively an agent for obtaining patents in the United Kingdom.

85. Agents for Patents.—(1) Rules under this Act may authorise the comptroller to refuse to recognise as agent in respect of any business under this Act any person whose name has been erased from the register of patent agents, or who is proved to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade, after being given an opportunity of being heard, to have been convicted of such an offence or to have been guilty of such misconduct as would have rendered him liable, if his name had been on the register of patent agents, to have his name erased therefrom, and may authorise the comptroller to refuse to recognise as agent in respect of any business under this Act any company which, if it had been an individual, the comptroller could refuse to recognise as such agent.

(2) Where a company or firm acts as agents, such rules as aforesaid may authorise the comptroller to refuse to recognise the company or firm as agent if any person whom the comptroller could refuse to recognise as an agent acts as director or manager of the company or is a partner in the firm.

(3) The comptroller shall refuse to recognise as agent in respect of any business under this Act any person who neither resides nor has a place of business in the United Kingdom or the Isle of Man.

Powers, etc. of Board of Trade.

86. Power for Board of Trade to make General Rules.—(1) The Board of Trade may make such general rules and do such things as they think expedient, subject to the provisions of this Act—

(a) For regulating the practice of registration under this Act:

(b) For classifying goods for the purposes of designs:

(c) For making or requiring duplicates of specifications, drawings, and other documents:

(d) For securing and regulating the publishing and selling of copies, at such prices and in such manner as the Board of Trade think fit, of specifications, drawings, and other documents:

(e) For securing and regulating the making, printing, publishing, and selling of indexes to, and abridgments of, specifications and other documents in the Patent Office; and providing for the inspection of indexes and abridgments and other documents:

(f) For regulating (with the approval of the Treasury) the presentation of copies of Patent Office publications to patentees and to public authorities, bodies, and institutions at home and abroad:

(g) For regulating the keeping of the register of patent agents under this Act:

(h) Generally for regulating the business of the Patent Office, and all things by this Act placed under the direction or control of the comptroller, or of the Board of Trade.

(2) General rules shall whilst in force be of the same effect as if they were contained in this Act.

(3) Any rules made in pursuance of this section shall be advertised twice in the official journal to be issued by the comptroller, and shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as practicable after they are made, and if either House of Parliament, within the next forty days after any rules have been so laid before that House, resolves that the rules or any of them ought to be annulled, the rules or those to which the resolution applies shall after the date of such resolution be of no effect, without prejudice to the validity of anything done in the meantime under the rules or to the making of any new rules.

87. Proceedings of the Board of Trade.—(1) All things required or authorised under this Act to be done by, to, or before the Board of Trade, may be done by, to, or before the President or a secretary or an assistant secretary of the Board.

(2) All documents purporting to be orders made by the Board of Trade and to be sealed with the seal of the Board, or to be signed by a secretary or assistant secretary of the Board, or by any person authorised in that behalf by the President of the Board, shall be received in evidence, and shall be deemed to be such orders without further proof, unless the contrary is shown.

(3) A certificate, signed by the President of the Board of Trade, that any order made or act done is the order or act of the Board, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact so certified.

88. Provision as to Order in Council.—An Order in Council under this Act shall, from a date to be mentioned for the purpose in the Order, take effect as if it had been contained in this Act; but may be revoked or varied by a subsequent Order.

Offences.

89. Offences.—(1) If any person makes or causes to be made a false entry in any register kept under this Act, or a writing falsely purporting to be a copy of an entry in any such register, or produces or tenders or causes to be produced or tendered in evidence any such writing, knowing the entry or writing to be false, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

(2) If any person falsely represents that any article sold by him is a patented article, or falsely describes any design applied to any article sold by him as registered, he shall be liable for every offence, on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, to a fine not exceeding five pounds.

(3) If any person sells an article having stamped, engraved, or impressed thereon or otherwise applied thereto the word "patent," "patented," "registered," or any other word expressing or implying that the article is patented or that the design applied thereto is registered, he shall be deemed for the purposes of this section to represent that the article is a patented article or that the design applied thereto is a registered design.

(4) Any person who, after the copyright in a design has expired, puts or causes to be put on any article to which the design has been applied the word "registered," or any word or words implying that there is a subsisting copyright in the design, shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding five pounds.

(5) If any person uses on his place of business, or on any document issued by him, or otherwise, the words "Patent Office," or any other words suggesting that his place of business is officially connected with, or is, the Patent Office, he shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds.

90.—(1) The grant of a patent under this Act shall not be deemed to authorise the patentee to use the Royal Arms or to place the Royal Arms on any patented article.

(2) UNAUTHORISED ASSUMPTION OF ROYAL ARMS.—If any person, without the authority of His Majesty, uses in connexion with any business, trade, calling, or profession the Royal Arms (or arms so nearly resembling them as to be calculated to deceive) in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that he is duly authorised to use the Royal Arms, he shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds.

Provided that nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the right, if any, of the proprietor of a trade mark containing such arms to continue to use such trade mark.

International and Colonial Arrangements.

91. INTERNATIONAL AND COLONIAL ARRANGEMENTS.—(1) If His Majesty is pleased to make any arrangement with the government of any foreign state for mutual protection of inventions, or designs, or trade marks, then any person who has applied for protection for any invention, design, or trade mark in that state shall be entitled to a patent for his invention or to registration of his design or trade mark under this Act or the Trade Marks Act, 1905, in priority to other applicants; and the patent or registration shall have the same date as the date of the application in the foreign state.

Provided that—

(a) The application is made, in the case of a patent within twelve months, and in the case of a design or trade mark within four months, from the application for protection in the foreign state; and

(b) Nothing in this section shall entitle the patentee or proprietor of the design or trade mark to recover damages for infringements happening prior to the actual date on which his complete specification is accepted, or his design or trade mark is registered, in this country.

(2) The patent granted for the invention or the registration of a design or trade mark shall not be invalidated—

(a) in the case of a patent, by reason only of the publication of a description of, or use of, the invention; or

(b) in the case of a design, by reason only of the exhibition or use of, or the publication of a description or representation of, the design; or in the United Kingdom or the Isle of Man during the period specified in this section as that within which the application may be made.

(c) in the case of a trade mark, by reason only of the use of the trade mark,

(3) The application for the grant of a patent, or the registration of a design, or the registration of a trade mark under this section, must be made in the same manner as an ordinary application under this Act or the Trade Marks Act, 1905: Provided that—

(a) In the case of patents the application shall be accompanied by a complete specification, which, if it is not accepted within the twelve months from the application for protection in the foreign state, shall with the drawings (if any) be open to public inspection at the expiration of that period; and

(b) In the case of trade marks, any trade mark the registration of which has been duly applied for in the country of origin may be registered under the Trade Marks Act, 1905.

(4) The provisions of this section shall apply only in the case of those foreign states with respect to which His Majesty by Order in Council declares them to be applicable, and so long only in the case of each state as the Order in Council continues in force with respect to that state.

(5) Where it is made to appear to His Majesty that the legislature of any British possession has made satisfactory provision for the protection of inventions, designs, and trade marks, patented or registered in this country, it shall be lawful for His Majesty, by Order in Council, to apply the provisions of this section to that possession, with such variations or additions, if any, as may be stated in the Order.

Definitions.

92. Provisions as to "the Court."—(1) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, "the court" means, subject to the provisions as to Scotland, Ireland, and the Isle of Man, the High Court in England.

(2) Where by virtue of this Act a decision of the comptroller is subject to an appeal to the court, or a petition may be referred or presented to the court, the appeal shall, subject to and in accordance with rules of the Supreme Court, be made and the petition referred or presented to such judge of the High Court as the Lord Chancellor may select for the purpose, and the decision of that judge shall be final, except in the case of an appeal from a decision of the comptroller revoking a patent on any ground on which the grant of such patent might have been opposed.

93. Definitions.—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

"Law officer" means the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General for England:

"Prescribed" means prescribed by general rules under this Act:

"British possession" does not include the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands:

"Patent" means letters patent for an invention:

"Patentee" means the person for the time being entitled to the benefit of a patent:

"Invention" means any manner of new manufacture the subject of letters patent and grant of privilege within section twenty-six of the Statute of Monopolies (that is, the Act of the twenty-first year of the reign of King James the First, chapter three, intituled "An Act concerning monopolies and dispensations with penal laws and the forfeiture thereof"), and includes an alleged invention:

"Inventor" and "applicant" shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, include the legal representative of a deceased inventor or applicant:

"Design" means any design (not being a design for a sculpture or other thing within the protection of the Sculpture Copyright Act, 54 Geo. 3 c. 56, 1814) applicable to any article, whether the design is applicable for the pattern, or for the shape or configuration, or for the ornament thereof, or for any two or more of such purposes, and by whatever means it is applicable, whether by printing, painting, embroidering, weaving, sewing, modelling, casting, embossing, engraving, staining, or any other means whatever, manual, mechanical, or chemical, separate or combined:

"Article" means (as respects designs) any article of manufacture and any substance artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural:

"Copyright" means the exclusive right to apply a design to any article in any class in which the design is registered:

"Proprietor of a new and original design,"—

(a) Where the author of the design, for good consideration, executes the work for some other person, means the person for whom the design is so executed; and

(b) Where any person acquires the design or the right to apply the design to any article, either exclusively of any other person or otherwise, means, in the respect and to the extent in and to which the design or right has been so acquired, the person by whom the design or right is so acquired; and

(c) In any other case, means the author of the design; and where the property in, or the right to apply, the design has devolved from the original proprietor upon any other person, includes that other person.

Application to Scotland, Ireland, and the Isle of Man.

94. APPLICATION TO SCOTLAND.—In the application of this Act to Scotland—

(1) In any action for infringement of a patent in Scotland the provisions of this Act with respect to calling in the aid of an assessor shall apply, and the action shall be tried without a jury, unless the court otherwise direct, but otherwise nothing shall affect the jurisdiction and forms of process of the courts in Scotland in such an action or in any action or proceeding respecting a patent hitherto competent to those courts; and for the purposes of the provisions so applied "court of appeal" shall mean any court to which such action is appealed:

(2) Any offence under this Act declared to be punishable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts may be prosecuted in the sheriff court:

(3) Proceedings for revocation of a patent shall be in the form of an action of reduction at the instance of the Lord Advocate, or at the instance of a party having interest with his concurrence, which concurrence may be given on just cause shown only, and service of all writs and summonses in that action shall be made according to the forms and practice existing at the commencement of this Act:

(4) The provisions of this Act conferring a special jurisdiction on the court as defined by this Act, shall not, except so far as the jurisdiction extends, affect the jurisdiction of any court in Scotland in any proceedings relating to patents or to designs; and with reference to any such proceedings, the term "the Court" shall mean any Lord Ordinary of the Court of Session, and the term "Court of Appeal" shall mean either Division of that Court:

(5) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the expression "the court" shall, as respects petitions for compulsory licences on revocation which are referred by the Board of Trade to the Court in Scotland, mean any Lord Ordinary of the Court of Session, and shall in reference to proceedings in Scotland for the extension of the time of a patent mean such Lord Ordinary:

(6) The expression "Rules of the Supreme Court" shall, except in section ninety-two of this Act, mean act of sederunt:

(7) If any rectification of a register under this Act is required in pursuance of any proceeding in a court, a copy of the order, decree, or other authority for the rectification, shall be served on the comptroller, and he shall rectify the register accordingly:

(8) The expression "injunction" means "interdict."

95. APPLICATION TO IRELAND.—In the application of this Act to Ireland—

(1) All parties shall, notwithstanding anything in this Act, have in Ireland their remedies under or in respect of a patent as if the same had been granted to extend to Ireland only:

(2) The provisions of this Act conferring a special jurisdiction on the court, as defined by this Act, shall not, except so far as the jurisdiction extends, affect the jurisdiction of any court in Ireland in any proceedings relating to patents or to designs; and with reference to any such proceedings the term "the Court" means the High Court in Ireland:

(3) If any rectification of a register under this Act is required in pursuance of any proceeding in a court, a copy of the order, decree, or other authority for the rectification shall be served on the comptroller, and he shall rectify the register accordingly.

96. ISLE OF MAN.—This Act shall extend to the Isle of Man, subject to the following modifications:—

(1) Nothing in this Act shall affect the jurisdiction of the courts in the Isle of Man in proceedings for infringement, or in any action or proceeding respecting a patent or design competent to those courts:

(2) The punishment for a misdemeanour under this Act in the Isle of Man shall be imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding one hundred pounds, at the discretion of the court:

(3) Any offence under this Act committed in the Isle of Man which would in England be punishable on summary conviction may be prosecuted, and any fine in respect thereof recovered, at the instance of any person aggrieved, in the manner in which offences punishable on summary conviction may for the time being be prosecuted.

Repeal, Savings, and Short Title.

97. SAVING FOR PREROGATIVE.—Nothing in this Act shall take away, abridge, or prejudicially affect the prerogative of the Crown in relation to the granting of any letters patent or to the withholding of a grant thereof.

98. REPEAL AND SAVINGS.—(1) The enactments mentioned in the Second Schedule to this Act are hereby repealed to the extent specified in the third column of that schedule—

(a) As respects the enactments mentioned in Part I. of that Schedule, as from the commencement of this Act;

(b) As respects the enactments mentioned in Part II. of that Schedule, as from the date when rules of the Supreme Court regulating the matters dealt with in those enactments come into operation;

(c) As respects the enactments mentioned in Part III. of that Schedule, as from the date when rules under this Act regulating the matters dealt with in those enactments come into operation; and the enactments mentioned in Part II. and Part III. of that Schedule shall, until so repealed, have effect as if they formed part of this Act:

Provided that this repeal shall not affect any convention, Order in Council, rule, or table of fees having effect under any enactment so repealed, but any such convention, Order in Council, rule, or table of fees in force at the commencement of this Act shall continue in force, and may be repealed, altered or amended, as if it had been made under this Act.

(2) Except where otherwise expressly provided, this Act shall extend to all patents granted and all designs registered before the commencement of this Act, and to applications then pending, in substitution for such enactments as would have applied thereto if this Act had not been passed.

99. SHORT TITLE AND COMMENCEMENT.—This Act may be cited as the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, and shall, save as otherwise expressly provided, come into operation on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

CHAPTER XXX.

An Act to amend sections fifty-seven, fifty-eight, and fifty-nine of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, relating to the prevention of infectious diseases.

[28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

PUBLIC HEALTH (SCOTLAND) AMENDMENT ACT, 1907.

1. Substitution of Precautionary for Prohibitory Provisions as to Infection.—(1) Section fifty-seven of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. c. 38), shall be read as if the words "that proper precautions against spreading disease or infection have been taken, and that such child may attend school without the risk of infecting others" were substituted for the words "that such child has become free from disease and infection, and that the house and everything therein exposed to infection has been disinfected to the satisfaction of such medical officer or medical practitioner."

(2) Section fifty-eight of the said Act shall be read as if the words "shall (a) without proper precautions against spreading such disease or infection, milk any animal, or pick fruit, or engage in any occupation connected with food, or shall (b)" were substituted for the words "shall milk any animal, or pick fruit, or shall engage in any occupation connected with food, or"; and as if the words "or infection, and any person who knowingly" were substituted for the words "and any person who knowing himself to be suffering from any infectious disease."

(3) Section fifty-nine of the said Act shall be read as if the words "unless in every such case as aforesaid proper precautions have been taken against spreading such disease or infection; and any person contravening any of the foregoing provisions shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds; and if without such precautions" were substituted for the words "and any person contravening any of the foregoing provisions shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds; and if."

2. Short Title and Extent.—This Act shall apply to Scotland only, and may be cited as the Public Health (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1907; and the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, and this Act may be cited collectively as the Public Health (Scotland) Acts, 1897 to 1907.

CHAPTER XXXI.

An Act to substitute a Statutory Declaration for the Certificate required under section two of the Vaccination Act, 1898, of Conscientious Objection. [28*th August* 1907.]

CHAPTER XXXII.

An Act to enable Regulations to be made for the Prevention of Danger arising to Public Health from the Importation, Preparation, Storage, and Distribution of Articles of Food. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Power to make Regulations as to the Importation, Preparation, Storage, and Distribution of Articles of Food.—(1) The power of making regulations under the Public Health Act, 1896 (59 and 60 Vict c. 19), and the enactments mentioned in that Act, shall include the power of making regulations authorising measures to be taken for the prevention of danger arising to public health from the importation, preparation, storage, and distribution of articles of food or drink (other than drugs or water) intended for sale for human consumption, and, without prejudice to the generality of the powers so conferred, the regulations may—

(a) provide for the examination and taking of samples of any such articles;

(b) apply, as respects any matters to be dealt with by the regulations, any provision in any Act of Parliament dealing with the like matters, with the necessary modifications and adaptations;

(c) provide for the recovery of any charges authorised to be made by the regulations for the purposes of the regulations or any services performed thereunder.

(2) For the purposes of regulations made under this Act, articles commonly used for the food or drink of man shall be deemed to be intended for sale for human consumption unless the contrary is proved.

(3) In the application of this Act to Scotland, Part IV. of the Public Health

(Scotland) Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. c. 38), shall be substituted for the Public Health Act, 1896.

2. Publication of Regulations.—All regulations made under this Act shall be laid as soon as may be before Parliament, and the Rules Publication Act, 1893 (56 and 57 Vict. c. 66), shall apply to such regulations as if they were statutory rules within the meaning of section one of that Act, and that Act as so applied shall, notwithstanding anything in subsection five of section one thereof, extend to Scotland, with the substitution of a reference to the Edinburgh Gazette for the reference to the London Gazette.

3. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Public Health (Regulations as to Food) Act, 1907.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the capacity of Women to be elected and act as Members of County or Borough Councils. [28*th August* 1907.]

CHAPTER XXXIV.

An Act to continue various Expiring Laws. [28*th August* 1907.]

Whereas the Acts mentioned in the Schedule to this Act are, in so far as they are in force and are temporary in their duration, limited to expire on the thirty-first day of December nineteen hundred and seven:

And whereas it is expedient to provide for the continuance as in this Act mentioned of those Acts, and of the enactments amending or affecting the same:

And whereas by the Indian Railways Act Amendment Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7 c. 9), section nine of the Indian Railways Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. c. 12) (by which the duration of that Act was limited) was repealed, and it is expedient that the reference to that Act in the Schedule to the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7 c. 51) should be repealed:

Be it therefore enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Continuance of Acts in Schedule.—(1) The Acts mentioned in the Schedule to this Act shall, to the extent specified in column three of that Schedule, be continued until the thirty-first day of December nineteen hundred and eight, and shall then expire, unless further continued.

(2) Any unrepealed enactments amending or affecting the enactments continued by this Act shall, in so far as they are temporary in their duration, be continued in like manner, whether they are mentioned in the Schedule to this Act or not.

(3) So much of the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1906, as refers to the Indian Railways Act, 1894, shall be repealed, and the Indian Railways Act Amendment Act, 1906, shall have effect as if the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1906, had never contained any reference to the Indian Railways Act, 1894.

2. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1907.

7 EDWARD 7, Chapter 36.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

An Act to grant Money for the purpose of certain Local Loans out of the Local Loans Fund, and for other purposes relating to Local Loans. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Grants for Public Works.—(1) For the purpose of local loans there may be issued by the National Debt Commissioners the following sums, namely:—

(a) For the purpose of loans by the Public Works Loan Commissioners any sum or sums not exceeding in the whole the sums of three million pounds;

(b) For the purpose of loans by the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland any sum or sums not exceeding in the whole the sum of seven hundred thousand pounds.

(2) The sums so issued shall be issued during a period ending on the day on which a further Act granting money for the purposes of those loans comes into operation and in accordance with the provisions of the National Debt and Local Loans Act, 1887 (50 and 51 Vict. c. 16).

2. Certain Debts not to be Reckoned as Assets of Local Loans Fund.—Whereas it is expedient that the principal of the several local loans specified in the First Schedule to this Act should, to the extent specified in the last column of that Schedule, not be reckoned as assets of the local loans fund established under the National Debt and Local Loans Act, 1887; therefore, the principal of the said loans shall to that extent be written off from the assets of the local loans fund, and the provisions to section fifteen of the said Act shall, so far as applicable, apply thereto.

3. Transfer of Volunteer Corps Mortgages from Commissioners to Secretary of State.—Whereas the Public Works Loan Commissioners have from time to time, under the powers conferred on them by the Military Lands Acts, 1892 to 1900, lent various sums of money to volunteer corps in England and Scotland upon the security of certain lands belonging to, and certain parliamentary grants payable to, those corps:

And whereas by an agreement dated the twenty-first day of March nineteen hundred and seven, and made between Robert Philpot, the secretary of the said Commissioners, of the one part, and the Secretary of State for the War Department of the other part (which agreement is hereinafter referred to as the English agreement and copies whereof have been deposited with the Clerk of the Parliaments and the Clerk of the House of Commons), the said Robert Philpot in consideration of the payment by the Secretary of State into the Bank of England to the credit of the Commissioners of the sum herein mentioned, being the total amount then due to the Commissioners for principal and interest in respect of the mortgages specified in the schedule to the English agreement, agreed upon the request of the Secretary of State to transfer to him those mortgages and the securities for the same:

And whereas by an agreement made between the same parties and executed by them on the sixteenth and nineteenth days respectively of March nineteen hundred and seven (which agreement is hereinafter referred to as the Scottish agreement and copies whereof have been deposited with the Clerk of the Parliaments and the Clerk of the House of Commons) the said Robert Philpot in consideration of the payment by the Secretary of State into the Bank of England to the credit of the Commissioners of the sum therein mentioned, being the total amount then due to the Commissioners for principal and interest in respect of the securities specified in the schedule to the Scottish agreement, bound himself and the Commissioners when called upon by the Secretary of State to transfer to him those securities:

And whereas it is expedient that the mortgages and securities specified in the respective schedules to the English and Scotch agreements and the several properties comprised in those mortgages and securities should become forthwith vested in the Secretary of State:

Therefore by virtue of this Act, and without any further assurance:—

PUBLIC WORKS LOANS ACT, 1907.

(1) The right of the Public Works Loan Commissioners to demand, sue for, and recover, and give receipts for the several sums secured by the mortgages and securities specified in the respective schedules to the English and Scottish agreements, and the benefit of all securities for those sums, and the benefit of and the right to sue on all covenants with the Commissioners, and the right to exercise all powers vested in the Commissioners under or by virtue of those mortgages and securities, shall become vested in the Secretary of State for the War Department for the time being absolutely; and

(2) The several properties comprised in the said mortgages and securities shall become vested in the Secretary of State for the War Department for the time being for all the estate and interest therein of the Commissioners, but subject to all rights of redemption now existing therein.

4. Public Loan to Jamaica.—(1) The Treasury may advance by way of loan to the Government of Jamaica, for the purpose of restoring, replacing, or improving public and other buildings damaged by the recent earthquake and subsequent fire in the colony or purchasing sites for new buildings to replace the same, or for the purpose of making loans to persons within the colony on such security and terms of repayment as may be authorised by the Legislature of the colony for the purposes of restoring or replacing buildings so damaged, or in other ways repairing the loss and damage caused by the earthquake and fire, any sums not exceeding in the whole eight hundred thousand pounds.

(2) The advance shall bear interest at the rate for the time being applicable to loans made out of the Local Loans Fund on the security of local rates in England.

(3) The provisions of the Colonial Loans Act, 1899 (62 and 63 Vict. c. 36), set out in the Second Schedule to this Act, shall apply with respect to the advance authorised by this section as if they were herein re-enacted.

5. Public Loan to Nigeria.—(1) The Treasury may advance by way of loan to the Government of Southern Nigeria, for the purpose of constructing and improving railway and other communication in Southern and Northern Nigeria, any sums not exceeding in the whole two million pounds.

(2) The advance shall bear interest at the rate for the time being applicable to loans made out of the Local Loans Fund, on the security of local rates in England.

(3) The provisions of the Colonial Loans Act, 1899 (62 and 63 Vict. c. 36), set out in the Second Schedule to this Act shall apply with respect to the advance authorised by this section as if they were herein re-enacted, but with the substitution in paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section two as set out in the said schedule of the words "charges not existing at the date of the passing of this Act" for the words "subsequent charges."

6. Extension of Period for Repayment of Former Loans under the Labourers (Ireland) Acts.—(1) The period for the repayment of any loan made by the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland under the Labourers (Ireland) Acts, 1883 to 1903, to rural district councils shall be extended by a period of eighteen and a half years, and the annual sum to be paid on account of the repayment of the outstanding principal of the loan and interest shall be re-calculated accordingly in accordance with regulations made by the Treasury for the purpose, and the payments to be made on the first day of May one thousand nine hundred and eight and thereafter in respect of that annual sum, shall be made on the basis of the sum as so re-calculated.

(2) Where any sums advanced by the Commissioners under the Labourers (Ireland) Acts, 1883 to 1903, have been issued by more than one instalment, the several instalments shall, for the purposes of this section, be treated as one advance, and the date from which the period for repayment is to be calculated for the purposes of this section shall be some convenient date fixed in accordance with regulations made by the Treasury, as nearly as may be midway between the gale day next after the issue of the first instalment and the gale day next after the issue of the last instalment.

(3) Nothing in this section shall affect the rate of interest on any such loan, nor prejudice any securities held by the Commissioners of Public Works in respect of the loan.

7. Transfer to Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland of Powers of Public Works Loan Commissioners to make Loans to Harbour Authorities in Ireland.—The Power of the Public Works Loan Commissioners under Part I. of the Harbours and Passing Tolls, etc. Act, 1861 (24 and 25 Vict. c. 47), or any other Act, to make advances to harbour authorities shall, as regards advances to harbour authorities in Ireland, be transferred to the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland, and, as respects any such advances, references in those Acts or in section seven of the Public Works Loans Act, 1882 (45 and 46 Vict. c. 62), or in any other Act or document to the Public Works Loan Commissioners, shall be construed as references to the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland:

Provided that nothing in this section shall affect any loan made to a harbour authority in Ireland before the passing of this Act, or the powers and duties of the Public Works Loan Commissioners in relation thereto.

8. Amendment as to Loans for Planting in Ireland.—Planting, whether for shelter or for any other object, shall be a purpose for which loans may be made under the Landed Property Improvement (Ireland) Acts, and the words "for shelter" in section five of the Drainage and Improvement of Land (Ireland) Act, 1866 (29 and 30 Vict. c. 40), are hereby repealed.

9. Remission of Certain Claims against Cullen Harbour Commissioners.—Whereas the Public Works Loan Commissioners in the years eighteen hundred and eighty-six and eighteen hundred and eighty-seven advanced to the Cullen Harbour Commissioners, on the security of the harbour revenues, undertaking, and property, sums amounting to four thousand pounds towards defraying the cost of works authorised by the Cullen Harbour Order, 1884, the said loan being repayable with interest at the rate of three pounds fifteen shillings per cent. per annum within a period expiring on the fourth day of April nineteen hundred and twenty-seven:

And whereas the interest and instalments of principal due in respect of the loan were duly paid until the fourth day of October eighteen hundred and ninety-two, since which date the income of the harbour has proved insufficient to meet the payments due in respect of the loan, and there are now due to the Public Works Loan Commissioners arrears of interest which amounted on the thirty-first day of March last to one thousand four hundred and sixty-nine pounds five shillings and sixpence, while the principal outstanding amounts to three thousand six hundred and eighty-four pounds thirteen shillings and elevenpence:

And whereas repairs and improvements to the harbour are needed in order to render the accommodation adequate and safe, and the Cullen Harbour Commissioners are unable to raise the money for carrying out the necessary works as long as the said debt remains, and it is expedient that the said principal debt should be extinguished and the arrears of interest remitted:

Therefore the said principal debt so far as not repaid together with all claims for interest thereon shall be extinguished, and the amount thereof shall be deemed a free grant from Parliament.

SECOND SCHEDULE (ss. 4 and 5).

Provisions of Colonial Loans Act, 1899, Applied.

1. Power to make Advances to Certain Colonies and Places.—(1) . . . . . .

(2) The advances authorised by this Act shall be local loans within the meaning of the National Debt and Local Loans Act, 1887 (50 and 51 Vict. c. 16), and that Act shall apply accordingly.

(3) Every such advance . . . . . shall be repaid within such period (not exceeding fifty years from the date thereof) as the Treasury and the Secretary of State determine in each case, and either by means of equal instalments of principal, or by means of an annuity of principal and interest combined as may be similarly determined.

2. Security for Loan.—(1) An advance shall not be made in pursuance of this Act until the legislative authority of the colony or place to the Government of which the advance is to be made have provided to the satisfaction of the Treasury and the Secretary of State—

(a) for raising and appropriating and duly applying the loan ;

(b) for charging on the general revenues and assets of the colony, with priority over any subsequent charges, the principal of the loan ; and

(c) for so charging and also for remitting to the Treasury in such manner as the Treasury determine—

(i) such yearly or half-yearly payments on account of the interest on, and the repayment of the principal of, the loan as the Treasury fix ; and

(ii) interest at such rate as the Treasury fix on any such payment in arrear ; and (d) for raising or securing the raising of sufficient revenue to meet the above charges.

(2) Every Act or ordinance of the legislative authority of the colony or place which in any way impairs the validity or priority of any such charge or diminishes the revenue to be raised as above mentioned shall, so far as it impairs or diminishes the same, be void unless the consent of the Treasury and the Secretary of State has been previously obtained.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

An Act to Authorise the Treasury to guarantee the payment of a Loan to be raised by the Colony of the Transvaal. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :—

1. Power to Treasury to Guarantee Transvaal Loan.—(1) The Treasury may, subject to the provisions of this Act, guarantee in such manner as they think fit the payment of the interest on any loan raised by the Colony of the Transvaal for the purposes set out in the First Schedule to this Act, not exceeding in the aggregate an amount of stock sufficient to raise five million pounds, or stock of a nominal amount of five million pounds, whichever is least, and also the sinking fund payments for the repayment of the principal of the loan as fixed in accordance with this Act.

(2) Subsections (2) to (6) of section one of the South African Loan and War Contribution Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7 c. 27), which are set out in the Second Schedule to this Act, with the modifications shown in that schedule, shall apply, with respect to the guarantee, and the raising of the loan under this Act, as if they were herein re-enacted.

(3) The Treasury may guarantee the payment of sums secured by any Transvaal Treasury bills, or other securities which may be issued with their approval by the Governor of the Colony of the Transvaal, for the purpose of temporarily raising any sums in anticipation of the loan in the same manner as they may guarantee the interest on and the sinking fund payments for the loan, and the provisions of this section shall apply with respect to any such guarantee accordingly.

2. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Transvaal Loan (Guarantee) Act, 1907.

SCHEDULES.

1. (1) . . . . . .

(2) POWER TO TREASURY TO GUARANTEE LOANS.—A guarantee shall not be given in pursuance of this Act until the Government of the Transvaal have provided to the satisfaction of the Treasury and the Secretary of State—

(a) for raising, appropriating, and duly applying the loan for the purposes and in the manner set out in the First Schedule to this Act, subject to any arrangements which may be made for the application of savings on one head of expenditure to another head of expenditure :

(b) for the establishment and regulation of a sinking fund for the purpose of the repayment within a period not exceeding fifty years from the first day of July nineteen hundred and eight of the principal of the loan :

(c) for charging on the general revenues and assets of the colony or on any other revenues or assets which may be made available for the purpose, with priority over any charges not existing at the date of the passing of this Act, the principal and interest of the loan and any sinking fund payments for the repayment of the principal of the loan :

(d) for charging on the general revenues and assets of the colony immediately after the last-mentioned charge the repayment to the Treasury of any sum issued out of the Consolidated Fund under this Act on account of the guarantee of the loan, with interest thereon at the rate of four per cent. per annum :

(e) for raising or securing the raising of sufficient money to meet the above charges.

(3) If any loan guaranteed under this Act is raised by stock to which the Colonial Stock Act, 1877 (40 and 41 Vict. c. 59) applies, section nineteen of that Act shall not apply.

(4) Every Act or Ordinance of the Legislature of the Transvaal which in any way impairs the validity or priority of any such charge shall, so far as it impairs the same, be void unless the consent of the Treasury and the Secretary of State has been previously obtained.

(5) Any sums required by the Treasury for fulfilling their guarantee given under this Act shall be charged on and issued out of the Consolidated Fund or the growing produce thereof, and any sums paid on account of the repayment of any amount so issued out of the Consolidated Fund shall be paid into the Exchequer.

(6) The Treasury shall lay before both Houses of Parliament a statement of any guarantee given under this Act, and an account of any sums issued out of the Consolidated Fund for the purpose of any such guarantee as soon as may be after any guarantee is so given or any sum is so issued.

* Modifications are shown in italics.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

An Act to amend the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, with respect to Laundries, and to extend that Act to certain Institutions and to provide for the inspection of certain premises. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :—

Laundries.

1. Application of 1 Edw. 7 c. 22 to Laundries.—The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (which Act, as amended by any subsequent enactment, including this Act, is hereinafter referred to as the principal Act), shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, apply to laundries as if at the end of Part II. of the Sixth Schedule to that Act, enumerating non-textile factories and workshops, the following paragraph were added :—

"(29) Laundries carried on by way of trade or for the purpose of gain, or carried on as ancillary to another business or incidentally to the purposes of any public institution."

2. Hours of Employment of Women and Young Persons in Laundries.—(1) In laundries, other than laundries ancillary to a business carried on in any premises which, apart from the provisions of this Act, are a factory or workshop,—

(a) The period of employment of women may on any three days in the week, other than Saturday, begin at six o'clock in the morning and end at seven o'clock in the evening, or begin at seven o'clock in the morning and end at eight o'clock in the evening, or begin at eight o'clock in the morning and end at nine o'clock in the evening.

Provided that a corresponding reduction is made in the periods of employment on other days of the week, so that the total number of hours of the periods of employment of women, including the intervals allowed for meals, shall not exceed sixty-eight in any one week ;

(b) Where the occupier of a laundry so elects, the following provisions shall apply to the laundry in lieu of the provisions of the last preceding paragraph :—

The period of employment of women may, on not more than four days, other than Saturday, in any one week, and on not more than sixty days in any calendar year, begin at six o'clock in the morning and end at seven o'clock in the evening, or begin at seven o'clock in the morning and end at eight o'clock in the evening, or begin at eight o'clock in the morning and end at nine o'clock in the evening;

(c) Different periods of employment may be fixed for different days of the week.

(2) The foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed to be special exceptions within the meaning of section sixty of the principal Act, but it shall not be lawful for the occupier of a laundry to change from the system of employment under the above paragraph (a) to the system of employment under the above paragraph (b), or vice versâ, oftener than once a year. The entry required to be made in the prescribed register by subsection four of the said section sixty as so applied shall, in the case of overtime employment under paragraph (b), be made before the commencement of the overtime employment on each day on which it is intended that there should be such employment, and, in reckoning the sixty days for the purposes of paragraph (b), every day on which any woman had been employed overtime shall be taken into account.

(3) Subject as aforesaid, the provisions of the principal Act as to hours of employment shall apply to laundries.

3. Special Regulations to be Complied with in Laundries.—In every laundry—

(a) If mechanical power is used, a fan or other efficient means shall be provided, maintained, and used for regulating the temperature in every ironing room, and for carrying away the steam in every washhouse;

(b) All stoves for heating irons must be sufficiently separated from any ironing room or ironing table, and gas irons emitting any noxious fumes must not be used; and

(c) The floors must be kept in good condition and drained in such manner as will allow the water to flow off freely.

A laundry in which there is a contravention of any of these provisions shall be deemed to be a factory or workshop not kept in conformity with the principal Act.

4. Application of Provisions as to Domestic Workshops.—Subsection (2) of section one hundred and fourteen of the principal Act (which provides that certain domestic workshops are not to be deemed workshops within the meaning of that Act) shall apply to laundries as if for the words "the altering, repairing, ornamenting, or finishing of any article" there were substituted the words "the altering, repairing, ornamenting, washing, cleaning, or finishing of any article."

Institutions.

5. Application of Factory and Workshop Acts to Certain Institutions.—(1) Where in any premises forming part of an institution carried on for charitable or reformatory purposes, and not being premises subject to inspection by or under the authority of any Government Department, any manual labour is exercised in or incidentally to the making, altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing, washing, cleaning, or adapting for sale, of articles not intended for the use of the institution, the provisions of the principal Act shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, apply to those premises notwithstanding that the work carried on therein is not carried on by way of trade or for the purposes of gain, or that the persons working therein are not working under a contract of service or apprenticeship.

(2) If in any institution to which this section applies the persons having the control of the institution (hereinafter referred to as the managers) satisfy the Secretary of State that the only persons working therein are persons who are inmates of and supported by the institution, or persons engaged in the supervision of the work or the management of machinery, and that such work as aforesaid is carried on in good faith for the purposes of the support, education, training, or reformation of persons engaged in it, the Secretary of State may by order direct that so long as the order is in force the principal Act shall apply to the institution subject to the following modifications:—

(a) The managers may submit for the approval of the Secretary of State a scheme for the regulation of the hours of employment, intervals for meals, and holidays of the workers, and of the education of children, and, if the Secretary of State is satisfied that the provisions of the scheme are not less favourable than the corresponding provisions of the principal Act, the Secretary of State may approve the scheme, and upon the scheme being so approved the principal Act shall, until the approval is revoked, apply as if the provisions of the scheme were substituted for the corresponding provisions of the principal Act; any scheme when so approved shall be laid as soon as possible before both Houses of Parliament, and if either House, within the next forty days after such scheme has been laid before that House, resolve that the scheme ought to be annulled, the scheme shall, after the date of the resolution, be of no effect without prejudice to the validity of anything done in the meantime thereunder, or to the making of any new scheme;

(b) The medical officer of the institution (if any) may, on the application of the managers, be appointed by the chief inspector of factories to be the certifying surgeon for the institution;

(c) The provisions of section one hundred and twenty-eight of the principal Act as to the affixing of an abstract of the principal Act and of notices shall not apply, but amongst the particulars required to be shown in the general register there shall be included the prescribed particulars of the scheme, or where no scheme is in force the prescribed particulars as to hours of employment, intervals for meals, and holidays, and education of children, and other matters dealt with in the principal Act;

(d) In the case of premises forming part of an institution carried on for reformatory purposes, if the managers of the institution so give notice to the chief inspector of factories, an inspector shall not, without the consent of the managers or of the person having charge of the institution under the managers, examine an inmate of the institution save in the presence of one of the managers or of such person as aforesaid:

Provided that the Secretary of State, on being satisfied that there is reason to believe that a contravention of the principal Act is taking place in any such institution, may suspend the operation of this provision as respects that institution to such extent as he may consider necessary;

(e) The managers shall not later than the fifteenth day of January in each year send to the Secretary of State a correct return in the prescribed form, specifying the names of the managers and the name of the person (if any) having charge of the institution under the managers, and such particulars as to the number, age, sex, and employment of the inmates and other persons employed in the work carried on in the institution as the Secretary of State may require, and shall, if any requirement of this paragraph is not complied with, be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds.

Supplemental.

6. Inspection of Certain Premises.—Where in any premises which are subject to inspection by or under the authority of any Government Department any manual labour is exercised, otherwise than for the purposes of instruction, in or incidental to the making, altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing, washing, cleaning, or adapting for sale, of any article, and the premises do not constitute a factory or workshop by reason that the work carried on therein is not carried on by way of trade or for the purposes of gain, or by reason that the persons employed in the work are not working under a contract of service or apprenticeship, the Secretary of State may arrange with the department that the premises shall, as respects the matters dealt with by the principal Act, be inspected by an inspector appointed under that Act, and where such an arrangement is made, inspectors appointed under the principal Act shall have, as respects such matters as aforesaid, the like right of entry and inspection as is conferred on inspectors of the department concerned.

7. Short Title, Construction, Commencement, and Repeal.—(1) This Act may be cited as the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907, and shall be construed as one with the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901; and the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and this Act may be cited together as the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 and 1907.

(2) This Act shall come into operation on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

(3) Section one hundred and three of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, is hereby repealed.

NOTIFICATION OF BIRTHS ACT, 1907.

CHAPTER XL.

An Act to provide for the early Notification of Births. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :—

1. Provisions for the earlier Notification of Births.—The provisions of this section shall have effect in the area of any local authority in which this Act is adopted by that authority in accordance with the provisions of this Act—

(1) In the case of every child born in an area in which this Act is adopted it shall be the duty of the father of the child, if he is actually residing in the house where the birth takes place at the time of its occurrence, and of any person in attendance upon the mother at the time of, or within six hours after, the birth, to give notice in writing of the birth to the medical officer of health of the district in which the child is born, in manner provided by this section.

(2) Notice under this section shall be given by posting a prepaid letter or postcard addressed to the medical officer of health at his office or residence, giving the necessary information of the birth within thirty-six hours after the birth, or by delivering a written notice of the birth at the office or residence of the medical officer within the same time; and the local authority shall supply without charge addressed and stamped postcards containing the form of notice to any medical practitioner or midwife residing or practising in their area, who applies for the same.

(3) Any person who fails to give notice of a birth in accordance with this section shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings: Provided that a person shall not be liable to a penalty under this provision if he satisfies the court that he had reasonable grounds to believe that notice had been duly given by some other person.

(4) The notification required to be made under this Act shall be in addition to and not in substitution for the requirements of any Act relating to the registration of births; and any registrar of births and deaths whose sub-district or any part thereof is situate within any area in which this Act is adopted shall at all reasonable times have access to notices of births received by the medical officer of health under this Act, or to any book in which those notices may be recorded, for the purpose of obtaining information concerning births which may have occurred in his sub-district.

(5) This section shall apply to any child which has issued forth from its mother after the expiration of the twenty-eighth week of pregnancy, whether alive or dead.

(6) Any expenses incurred by a local authority in the execution of this Act shall be paid as part of the expenses of that authority in the execution of the Acts relating to public health, and in the case of a rural district council shall be paid as general expenses.

2. Adoption of Act, and Definition of Local Authority.—(1) A local authority may by resolution adopt this Act in their area, and the provisions set out in the schedule to this Act shall have effect with respect to the resolution of adoption.

(2) A resolution of adoption shall not take effect until the consent of the Local Government Board has been obtained thereto.

(3) It shall be the duty of any local authority by whom this Act is adopted, as soon as the consent of the Local Government Board is given to the resolution of adoption, to bring the provisions of this Act to the attention of all medical practitioners and midwives practising in their area.

(4) In this Act, the expression "local authority" means the council of a borough (including the council of a metropolitan borough and the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city of London in common council assembled), and the council of an urban or a rural district, and the council of a county (other than the county of London) who may adopt the Act either for their whole county or for any county district therein:

Provided that—

(a) where the Act is adopted by the council of a county the county medical officer of health shall be substituted for the medical officer of health of the district, and the expenses of the execution of the Act shall be paid as general county expenses or special county expenses, as the case requires; and

(b) if, where the Act has been adopted by the council of a county for any county district, the council of the district, or, where the Act has been adopted by the council of a county district for their district, the council of the county, subsequently apply to the Local Government Board to be made the authority for the purposes of this Act, the Board may, if they think fit, make an order declaring that the Act shall take effect as if it had been adopted by the council of the county district instead of the council of the county, or by the council of the county instead of the council of the county district, as the case may be, and on any such order being made the Act shall take effect in accordance with the order.

(5) In London, the medical officer of health of every metropolitan borough (including the city of London) in which this Act is in force for the time being shall send weekly to the London County Council, in a form prescribed by the Local Government Board, a list of all notices of birth received by him under this Act during the past week.

3. Power of Local Government Board to put Act in Force in the Area of any Local Authority.—The Local Government Board may by order declare that this Act shall be in force in the area of any local authority who have power to adopt the Act, although it has not been so adopted, if they think it expedient, having regard to the circumstances of the area, and in that case the order of the Local Government Board shall have the same effect for the purpose as a resolution of adoption duly passed by the local authority of the area and assented to by the Local Government Board.

4. Application to Scotland.—In the application of this Act to Scotland—

(1) The expression "Local Government Board" means the Local Government Board for Scotland;

(2) The expression "sub-district" means parish or district;

(3) The expression "local authority" and the expression "council" mean the local authority under the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. c. 38), and subsection four of section two shall not apply;

(4) An offence may be tried before the sheriff or before any magistrate of a royal, parliamentary, or police burgh officiating under the provisions of any local or general Police Act; and an offender failing to make payment of a penalty shall be liable to imprisonment in terms of the Summary Jurisdiction Acts.

5. Application to Ireland.—In the application of this Act to Ireland, the Local Government Board for Ireland shall be substituted for the Local Government Board, and the expression "sub-district" means a registrar's district under the Acts relating to the registration of births.

6. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Notification of Births Act, 1907.

SCHEDULE.

Resolution of Adoption (s. 2).

1. A resolution of adoption must be passed at a meeting of the council.

2. One calendar month at least before the meeting of the council special notice of the meeting and of the intention to propose the resolution shall be given to every member of the council.

3. A resolution of adoption after being passed shall be published by advertisement in some one or more newspapers circulating within the area of the council by whom the resolution is passed, and otherwise in such manner as the council thinks sufficient for giving notice thereof to all persons interested.

4. A copy of the resolution of adoption shall be sent to the Local Government Board.

5. The resolution of adoption shall come into operation at such time, not less than one month after the first publication of the advertisement, as may be fixed by the Local Government Board.

1. Prohibition of exercise of whaling industry without licence.
2. Licences may be granted by Fishery Board for Scotland on certain conditions.
3. Offences by holder of licence and others.
4. Inspection of whaling factories, etc.
5. Saving for certain whales and whaling industries.
6. Penalties.
7. Local inquiry.
8. Definition.
9. Application, commencement, and short title.

CHAPTER XLI.

An Act to regulate Whale Fisheries in Scotland. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Prohibition of Exercise of Whaling Industry without Licence.—No person shall in any part of Scotland land any whale, or engage in any way in the manufacture from whales of oil or other primary products, without a licence granted and issued subject to the conditions hereinafter provided, and any person acting in contravention of this section shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding five hundred pounds.

2. Licences may be Granted by Fishery Board for Scotland on certain Conditions.—It shall be lawful for the Fishery Board for Scotland (in this Act referred to as the Board) to issue licences under this Act, subject to the following conditions:—

(1) A person applying to the Board for a licence shall, at least two months before making such application, publish notice thereof once in each of two consecutive weeks with an interval between each publication of not less than six days in one or more newspaper or newspapers circulating in the district in which the factory or station existing or to be erected is situate:

Such notice shall state the name and address of the applicant, and shall contain a description of the site or intended site of the factory or station where the process of manufacture as aforesaid is to be conducted:

(2) It shall be lawful for the local authority under the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. c. 38), or for any persons interested, within fourteen days after the publication of such notice as aforesaid to lodge with the Board objections to the granting of any such licence, and the Board shall consider any such objections, and, after such inquiry, if any, as they may think necessary, shall grant or refuse such licence:

(3) Each licence shall contain a description of the site of the factory or station erected or proposed to be erected as aforesaid, and no such factory or station shall be removed from the site in the said licence described to any other site, unless and until such other site shall have been approved by the Board, and their approval shall have been endorsed on the licence:

(4) Subject as hereinafter mentioned the holder of a licence shall not use or employ more than one whaling steamer; provided that the Board shall, on the application of any person who before the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and seven has erected a factory or station for the prosecution of the whaling industry, authorise such person, by special permission endorsed on his licence, to use or employ not more than three additional whaling steamers, when the Board, after due inquiry, are satisfied that such additional steamer or steamers are necessary for the full and proper working of such factory or station as it existed at that date:

(5) No licence shall be granted except to a British subject or to a Company registered in Great Britain. Provided that this subsection shall not apply to the case of a person who has erected a factory or station for the prosecution of the whaling industry before the date mentioned in the immediately preceding subsection:

(6) The Board may at any time, on the application of the holder of a licence, cancel the licence, or in the case of the holder of a licence endorsed with a special permission, vary the number of whaling steamers (but in no case to exceed four) the use of which is authorised thereby; but it shall not be lawful to transfer or assign any licence without the consent of the Board, and any transfer or assignment shall be endorsed upon the licence:

(7) There shall be paid to the Board in respect of every licence issued under the provisions of this Act a sum of one hundred pounds for each whaling steamer the use of which is authorised thereby, and such sum shall be payable on the issue of the licence and thereafter annually during its continuance:

(8) Every licence shall be subject to all the conditions contained in this Act, and it shall be lawful for the Board, in the event of the infringement of any such condition by the holder of a licence, or of the conviction of such holder or any person employed by him of an offence under this Act, without compensation to cancel any licence or to suspend any licence for a specified period.

3. Offences by Holder of Licence and Others.—(1) No holder of a licence or person employed by him shall in the prosecution of the whaling industry use any vessel, other than the whaling steamer from or by which a whale shall have been captured or killed, for the purpose of bringing or towing such whale to or towards any factory or station for manufacture.

(2) Every whaling steamer employed by the holder of a licence shall carry such distinctive mark as the Board, with the consent of the Board of Trade, may from time to time prescribe, and such mark shall be specified in the licence.

(3) No holder of a licence or person employed by him shall use, in the pursuit or capture of whales, any method or contrivance which does not include a harpoon with a whaling line attached thereto, and fixed or fastened to the whaling steamer from which the whale is captured or killed.

(4) No person shall pursue, kill, or shoot at any whale within three miles of low-water mark of any part of the coast of Scotland, and no holder of a licence or person employed by him shall pursue, kill, or shoot at any whale within the distance of one mile from any boat or vessel lying at anchor or engaged in fishing.

(5) No holder of a licence or person employed by him shall kill or shoot any herring-hog whale, or any whale which is accompanied by a calf.

(6) No holder of a licence or person employed by him shall in any year pursue, kill, or shoot whales between the first day of November and the thirty-first day of March, both days inclusive, or pursue, kill, or shoot whales within a distance of forty miles from low-water mark of any part of the coast of Scotland within such limits and during such period, not exceeding in any case five weeks during the summer herring fishing, as the Board may from time to time prescribe.

(7) In this section the expression "mile" means a nautical mile.

(8) Any person acting in contravention of this section shall be guilty of an offence under this Act.

(9) Where a whale which has been lawfully shot at and struck shall carry with it a fixed line within an area prohibited in terms of this section, nothing in this section contained shall make it unlawful to continue the pursuit of such whale and to kill it in such area.

4. Inspection of Whaling Factories, etc.—(1) The Board shall give every assistance in carrying out the provisions of this Act, and, where necessary, shall employ their officers to facilitate its execution, and may, with the consent of the Secretary for Scotland, provide for the inspection of the factories or stations and vessels employed by the holders of licences, and such holders of licences and all persons employed by them shall give all reasonable facilities for such inspection, and shall make such returns on any matter connected with their whaling business as the Board may from time to time prescribe, and if required by the Board shall verify such returns by statutory declaration.

(2) The expenses incurred in any year by the Board in the execution of this Act shall, to the amount approved by the Treasury, be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament.

5. Saving for certain Whales and Whaling Industries.—(1) Nothing in this Act contained shall make it unlawful for any person to drive ashore and appropriate, sell, or otherwise make use of the smaller whales known as bottle-nose and caa-ing whales, or to appropriate, sell, or otherwise make use of such whales as he may find dead, whether floating on the sea or stranded on the shore.

(2) Nothing in this Act contained shall make it unlawful for any person to pursue any of the whaling industries commonly followed in Arctic or Antarctic waters, or to engage in the manufacture of oil or other products from whales captured in the exercise of any such industry.

6. Penalties.—Any person guilty of an offence under this Act shall, save as otherwise provided, be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding one hundred pounds, and on failure to make payment of the penalty which may have been imposed immediately or within a specified period shall be liable to imprisonment in accordance with the provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction Acts. Every offence under this Act may be prosecuted in any sheriff court which the Board may declare by a notice under the hand of the Chairman of or the Secretary to the Board to the procurator-fiscal of such sheriff court to be the court nearest to the spot where the offence was committed, or otherwise the most convenient for the trial of the case.

7. Local Inquiry.—For the purposes of this Act subsection one of section ninety-three of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. c. 50), respecting the holding of local inquiries shall apply as if it were enacted herein with the substitution of the Board for the Secretary for Scotland; provided that the nomination of a person to hold an inquiry shall be certified by writing under the hand of the Chairman of or the Secretary to the Board, and such person shall be paid his reasonable expenses and such remuneration as may be approved by the Treasury.

8. Definition.—In this Act the expression "whaling steamer" includes any ship used for the purpose of capturing or killing whales, whether propelled by steam power or otherwise.

9. Application, Commencement, and Short Title.—(1) This Act shall apply to Scotland only, and shall commence on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

(2) This Act may be cited as the Whale Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1907.

CHAPTER XLII.

An Act to provide for the payment to the Fishery Board for Scotland of the penalties or other moneys recovered in respect of illegal sea fishing in Scotland.

[28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Penalties and Moneys Recovered to be Paid to the Fishery Board.—From and after the first day of April nineteen hundred and eight all penalties recovered in any prosecution for using or attempting to use any method of fishing in contravention of the Sea Fisheries (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1885 (48 and 49 Vict. c. 70), the Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. c. 23), the Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act Amendment Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. c. 10), or the Sea Fisheries Regulation (Scotland) Act, 1895 (58 and 59 Vict. c. 42), or of any Act amending any of the said Acts, or of any byelaw or regulation under any of such Acts, shall be transmitted to the King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, and the balance remaining after deduction of the expenses of prosecutions chargeable to Votes of Parliament shall be paid to the Fishery Board for Scotland, and all moneys so paid, and all moneys accruing to the Board from the sale of anything lawfully forfeited and sold in respect of such method of fishing as aforesaid, shall be applied for the purpose of subsection three of section two of the Local Taxation Account (Scotland) Act, 1898 (61 and 62 Vict. c. 56), or otherwise in aid of the expenses incurred or to be incurred under any statutory power from time to time vested in the Board, in such manner as the Board may, with the consent of the Secretary for Scotland, determine.

2. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Sea Fisheries (Scotland) Application of Penalties Act, 1907, and shall be read along with the Act or Acts under which procedings are taken, as the case may be.

CHAPTER XLIII.

An Act to make provision for the better administration by the Central and Local Authorities in England and Wales of the enactments relating to Education. [28*th August* 1907.]

CHAPTER XLIV.

An Act to provide for the Abolition of two Judgeships of the High Court in Ireland, and to reduce the Salary of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and for other purposes connected therewith. [28*th August* 1907.]

CHAPTER XLV.

An Act to render compulsory the Carrying of Lights by Vehicles at Night. [28*th August* 1907.]

CHAPTER XLVI.

An Act to apply the provisions of the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870 to 1872, to companies carrying on the business of insuring Employers against liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen in their Employment. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Application of Acts.—(1) The provisions of the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870 to 1872, relating to life assurance companies established or commencing to carry on the business of life assurance within the United Kingdom after the passing of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870 (33 and 34 Vict. c. 61), shall apply to every company, whether established before or after the passing of this Act, which carries on within the United Kingdom the business of insuring employers against liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen in their employment, subject to such necessary modifications and adaptations as may be made therein by Order in Council:

Provided that—

(a) those provisions shall not apply—

(i) to any company which carries on such business as aforesaid as incidental only to the business of marine insurance by issuing marine policies, or policies in the form of marine policies covering such liability as aforesaid, as well as marine adventure or adventure analogous thereto; or

(ii) to an association of employers which satisfies the Board of Trade that it is carrying on business wholly or mainly for the purpose of the mutual insurance of its members either against liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen employed by them, or against that liability and against any other risk incident to their trade or industry; or

(iii) to a member of Lloyd's or any other association of underwriters approved by the Board of Trade, provided that he complies with the requirements set forth in the Schedule to this Act; and

(b) such of those provisions as relate to deposits shall not apply to any company which has commenced to carry on such business as aforesaid within the United Kingdom before the passing of this Act.

(2) Where money is paid into a county court under the provisions of the Schedule to this Act, the court shall (unless the court for special reason sees fit to direct otherwise) order the lump sum to be invested or applied, in the purchase of an annuity or otherwise, in such manner that the duration of the benefit thereof may, as far as possible, correspond with the probable duration of the incapacity.

(3) For the purposes of this section the expression "company" means any person or persons, corporate or unincorporate, not being registered under the Acts relating to friendly societies.

(4) In the application of this Act to Scotland the expression "county court" means sheriff court.

2. Short Title and Commencement.—This Act may be cited as the Employers' Liability Insurance Companies Act, 1907, and shall come into operation on such day as may be specified in an Order in Council under this Act.

SCHEDULE.

Requirements to be Complied with by Underwriters (s. 1).

1. Every underwriter shall deposit and keep deposited in such manner as the Board of Trade may direct a sum of two thousand pounds. The Board of Trade may make rules as to the payment, repayment, investment of, and dealing with a deposit, the payment of interest and dividends from any such investment, and for any other matters in respect of which they may make rules under section one of the Life Assurance Companies Amendment Act, 1872, in relation to deposits made by life assurance companies. The sum so deposited shall so long as any liability under any policy issued by the underwriter remains unsatisfied be available solely to meet claims under such policies.

2. Where the person insured by any policy issued by an underwriter is liable to make a weekly payment to any workman during the incapacity of the workman, and the weekly payment has continued for more than six months, the liability therefor shall before the expiration of twelve months from the commencement of the incapacity be redeemed by the payment of a lump sum in accordance with paragraph (17) of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and the underwriter shall pay the lump sum into the county court, and shall inform the court that the redemption has been effected in pursuance of the provisions of this Schedule.

3. The underwriter shall furnish every year to the Board of Trade a statement in such form as may be prescribed by the Board showing the extent and character of the employers' liability business effected by him.

4. For the purposes of this Schedule "policy" means a policy insuring any employer against liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen in his employment.

CHAPTER XLVII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister.

[28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister not to be deemed Void as a Civil Contract except in Certain Cases.—No marriage heretofore or hereafter contracted between a man and his deceased wife's sister, within the realm or without, shall be deemed to have been or shall be void or voidable, as a civil contract, by reason only of such affinity: Provided always that no clergyman in holy orders of the Church of England shall be liable to any suit, penalty, or censure, whether civil or ecclesiastical, for anything done or omitted to be done by him in the performance of the duties of his office to which suit, penalty, or censure he would not have been liable if this Act had not been passed:

Provided also that when any minister of any church or chapel of the Church of England shall refuse to perform such marriage service between any persons who, but for such refusal, would be entitled to have the same service performed in such church or chapel, such minister may permit any other clergyman in holy orders in the Church of England, entitled to officiate within the diocese in which such church or chapel is situate, to perform such marriage service in such church or chapel.

Provided also that in case, before the passing of this Act, any such marriage shall have been annulled, or either party thereto (after the marriage and during the life of the other) shall have lawfully married another, it shall be deemed to have become and to be void upon and after the day upon which it was so annulled, or upon which either party thereto lawfully married another as aforesaid.

2. Saving of Existing Rights and Interests.—No right, title, estate or interest, whether in possession or expectancy, and whether vested or contingent at the time of the passing of this Act, existing in, to, or in respect of, any dignity, title of honour, or property, and no act or thing lawfully done or omitted before the passing of this Act, shall be prejudicially affected nor shall any will be deemed to have been revoked by reason of any marriage heretofore contracted as aforesaid being made valid by this Act. And no claim by the Crown for duties leviable on or with reference to death, and before the passing of this Act due and payable, and no payment, commutation, composition, discharge, or settlement of account in respect of any duties leviable on or with reference to death before the passing of this Act duly made or given, shall be prejudicially affected by anything herein contained.

Nothing in this Act shall affect the devolution or distribution of the real or personal estate of any intestate, not being a party to the marriage, who at the time of the passing of this Act shall be and shall until his death continue to be a lunatic, so found by inquisition.

3. Saving for 20 and 21 Vict. c. 85, sect. 27.—(1) Nothing in this Act shall remove wives' sisters from the class of persons adultery with whom constitutes a right, on the part of wives, to sue for divorce under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, it shall not be lawful for a man to marry the sister of his divorced wife, or of his wife by whom he has been divorced, during the lifetime of such wife.

4. Liability of Clergyman to Ecclesiastical Censure.—Nothing in this Act shall relieve a clergyman in holy orders of the Church of England from any ecclesiastical censure to which he would have been liable if this Act had not been passed by reason of his having contracted or hereafter contracting a marriage with his deceased wife's sister.

5. Interpretation.—In this Act the word "sister" shall include a sister of the half-blood.

6. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act, 1907.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the capacity of Women to be elected and act as Members of County or Town Councils in Scotland. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Provision as to Capacity of Women to be County or Town Councillors.—

QUALIFICATION OF WOMEN (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1907.

(1) A woman shall not be disqualified by sex or marriage for being elected or being a councillor of the council of any county or burgh in Scotland, but shall not—

(a) if elected as a councillor, by virtue of holding that office be eligible for election, or for acting, as a burgh magistrate, or as a judge in any police court, or as a member of a licensing court or court of appeal; or

(b) if elected as chairman of a county council or provost of a burgh, by virtue of holding or having held that office be a justice of the peace or burgh magistrate, or be eligible for election, or for acting, as a burgh magistrate, or as a judge in any police court: Provided that where a woman is elected as provost of a burgh the number of bailies to be elected in the burgh shall while she holds office as provost be one more than the number otherwise fixed by law, and any additional bailie so elected shall hold office for the period prescribed by the law regulating the office of burgh magistrate or bailie, subject to the provision that he shall in no case continue to hold office after the woman has ceased to hold office as provost.

(2) Subsection (1) of section nine of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. c. 50), and the word "male" occurring in section twelve of the Town Councils (Scotland) Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. c. 49), are hereby repealed.

2. Definitions.—In this Act the words "burgh" and "provost" have the meanings assigned to them in the Town Councils (Scotland) Act, 1900, and the word "county" does not include a county of a city.

3. Short Title and Extent.—This Act may be cited as the Qualification of Women (County and Town Councils) (Scotland) Act, 1907, and shall apply to Scotland only.

CHAPTER XLIX.

An Act to amend the Law with respect to Vaccination in Scotland by authorising a statutory declaration of conscientious objection. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Statutory Declaration as to Conscientious Objection and Exemption from Penalties.—(1) No parent or other person shall be liable to any penalty under section seventeen or section eighteen of the Vaccination (Scotland) Act, 1863 (26 and 27 Vict. c. 108), if, within six months from the birth of the child he makes a statutory declaration that he conscientiously believes that vaccination would be prejudicial to the health of the child, and within seven days thereafter delivers the declaration to the registrar of the district in which such child was born and registered. A registrar to whom such a declaration is duly delivered shall not, so far as regards the child named therein, carry out the procedure as to intimation and transmission prescribed by the said sections in respect of the failure to transmit to him the certificate in those sections mentioned.

(2) A registrar shall keep such record of statutory declarations as may be prescribed by the Registrar-General, and shall furnish to any local authority executing the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. c. 38), within his district such periodical returns of statutory declarations as may be required of him and approved by the Local Government Board for Scotland, and for each declaration intimated in any such return he shall be paid by the local authority the sum of twopence, and the local authority shall provide the forms on which such returns are to be made and shall pay for their transmission by letter post.

(3) A registrar shall at any reasonable time allow searches to be made in such record of statutory declarations, and shall upon demand give a copy certificated under his hand of any entry therein on payment of the fee for a search and certificate respectively prescribed by section fifteen of the Vaccination (Scotland) Act, 1863.

(4) A statutory declaration made for the purposes of this Act shall be exempt from stamp duty.

(5) A statutory declaration for the purposes of this Act shall be made in the form set out in the schedule to this Act, or in a form to the like effect.

(6) In the application of this Act to a child born before the passing thereof there shall be substituted for the period of six months from the birth of the child the period of six months from the passing of this Act.

2. Short Title and Extent.—This Act shall apply to Scotland only, and may be cited as the Vaccination (Scotland) Act, 1907; and the Vaccination (Scotland) Act, 1863, and this Act shall be construed together as one Act, and may be cited collectively as the Vaccination (Scotland) Acts, 1863 to 1907.

CHAPTER L.

An Act to amend the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

Prospectus and Allotment.

1. Obligations of Companies where no Prospectus is Issued.—(1) A company which does not issue a prospectus on or with reference to its formation shall not allot any of its shares or debentures unless before the first allotment of either shares or debentures there has been filed with the registrar a statement in lieu of prospectus, signed by every person who is named therein as a director or proposed director of the company or by his agent authorised in writing, in the form and containing the particulars set out in the First Schedule to this Act.

(2) Sections two, six, and eleven of the Companies Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. c. 48), as amended by this Act, shall apply to companies which do not issue a prospectus inviting public subscription of their shares, subject to the modifications set out in the Second Schedule to this Act.

(3) In the case of the first allotment of share capital payable in cash of a company which does not issue any invitation to the public to subscribe for its shares, no allotment shall be made unless the minimum subscription (that is to say):—

(a) the amount (if any) fixed by the memorandum or articles of association and named in the statement in lieu of prospectus as the minimum subscription upon which the directors may proceed to allotment; or has been subscribed and an amount not less than five per cent. of the nominal amount of each share payable in cash has been paid to and received by the company.

(4) Section five of the Companies Act, 1900, shall apply as if the foregoing provisions of this section were included amongst the foregoing provisions of that Act mentioned in the said section five.

(5) This section shall not apply to private companies as defined by this Act, or to any company which has alloted any shares or debentures before the commencement of this Act.

2. Amendment of 63 and 64 Vict. c. 48, s. 10.—(1) The following subsection shall be substituted for subsection one of section ten of the Companies Act, 1900:—

"(1) Every prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company, or by or on behalf of any person who is or has been engaged or interested in the formation of the company, must state—

"(a) the contents of the memorandum of association, with the names, descriptions, and addresses of the signatories, and the number of shares subscribed for by them respectively; and the number of founders or management or deferred shares, if any, and the nature and extent of the interest of the holders in the property and profits of the company; and

"(b) the number of shares, if any, fixed by the articles of association as the qualification of a director, and any provision in the articles of association as to the remuneration of the directors; and

"(c) the names, descriptions, and addresses of the directors or proposed directors; and

"(d) the minimum subscription on which the directors may proceed to allotment, and the amount payable on application and allotment on each share; and in the case of a second or subsequent offer of shares the amount offered for subscription on each previous allotment made within the two preceding years, and the amount actually allotted; and the amount, if any, paid on such shares; and

"(e) the number and amount of shares and debentures which within the two preceding years have been issued, or agreed to be issued, as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, and in the latter case the extent to which they are so paid up, and in either case the consideration for which such shares or debentures have been issued or are proposed or intended to be issued; and

"(f) the names and addresses of the vendors of any property purchased or acquired by the company, or proposed so to be purchased or acquired, which is to be paid for wholly or partly out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus, or the purchase or acquisition of which has not been completed at the date of publication of the prospectus, and the amount payable in cash, shares, or debentures to the vendor, and, where there is more than one separate vendor, or the company is a sub-purchaser, the amount so payable to each vendor; provided that, where the vendors or any of them are a firm, the members of the firm shall not be treated as separate vendors; and

"(g) the amount (if any) paid or payable as purchase money in cash, shares, or debentures of any such property as aforesaid, specifying the amount (if any) payable for goodwill; and

"(h) the amount (if any) paid within the two preceding years or payable as commission for subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, for any shares in, or debentures of, the company, or the rate of any such commission; provided that it shall not be necessary to state the commission payable to sub-underwriters; and

"(i) the amount or estimated amount of preliminary expenses; and

"(j) the amount paid within the two preceding years or intended to be paid to any promoter and the consideration for any such payment; and

"(k) the dates of and parties to every material contract, and a reasonable time and place at which any material contract or a copy thereof may be inspected: Provided that this requirement shall not apply to a contract entered into in the ordinary course of the business carried on or intended to be carried on by the company, or to any contract entered into more than two years before the date of publication of the prospectus; and

"(l) the names and addresses of the auditors (if any) of the company; and

"(m) full particulars of the nature and extent of the interest (if any) of every director in the promotion of, or in the property proposed to be acquired by, the company, or, where the interest of such a director consists in being a partner in a firm, the nature and extent of the interest of the firm, with a statement of all sums paid or agreed to be paid to him or to the firm in cash or shares or otherwise by any person either to induce him to become, or to qualify him as, a director, or otherwise for services rendered by him or by the firm in connection with the promotion or formation of the company; and

"(n) where the company is a company having shares of more than one class, the right of voting at meetings of the company conferred by the several classes of shares respectively."

(2) The said section of the Companies Act, 1900, shall not apply to a circular or notice inviting existing members or debenture holders of the company to subscribe for shares or debentures of the company, whether with or without the right to renounce in favour of other persons, and accordingly in subsection four of that section for the words "for further shares or debentures" there shall be substituted the words "for shares or debentures of the company, whether with or without the right to renounce in favour of other persons."

3. Penalty for Failure to File Prospectus.—If a prospectus is issued without a copy thereof being filed for registration as required by section nine of the Companies Act, 1900, the company and every person who is knowingly a party to the issue of the prospectus shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day from the date of the issue of the prospectus until a copy thereof is so filed.

4. Simultaneous Offer and Allotment of Shares and Debentures.—The following provision shall be substituted for subsection four of section six of the Companies Act, 1900:—

"(4) Nothing in this section shall prevent the simultaneous offer for subscription or allotment of any shares and debentures, or the receipt of any money payable on application for debentures."

5. Limitation of Time for Issue of Certificates.—(1) Every company shall within two months after the allotment of any of its shares, debentures, or debenture stock, and within two months after the registration of the transfer of any such shares, debentures, or debenture stock, complete and have ready for delivery the certificates of all shares, the debentures, and the certificates of all debenture stock allotted or transferred, unless the conditions of issue of the shares, debentures, or debenture stock otherwise provide.

(2) If default is made in complying with the requirements of this section, the company, and every director, manager, secretary, and other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default, shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which the default continues.

6. Filing of Contracts of Allotment of Shares not Payable in Cash.—(1)

Where such a contract as is mentioned in paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section seven of the Companies Act, 1900, is not reduced to writing, the company shall within the time limited in the said section file with the registrar the prescribed particulars of the contract stamped with the same stamp duty as would have been payable if the contract had been reduced to writing.

(2) Such particulars shall be deemed to be an instrument within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 and 55 Vict. c. 39), and the registrar may, as a condition of filing the particulars, require that the duty payable thereon be adjudicated under section twelve of that Act.

(3) The provisions of section seven of the Companies Act, 1900, imposing penaltie for default shall apply as if the requirement of this section were a requirement contained in that section.

(4) If default has been made in filing with the registrar within the time limited by section seven of the Companies Act, 1900, any document required to be filed by that section or this section, the company, or any person liable for the default, may apply to the court for relief, and the court, if satisfied that the omission to file the document was accidental or due to inadvertence or that it is just and equitable to grant relief, may make an order extending the time for the filing of the document for such period as the court may think proper.

Issue of Shares at a Discount and Payment of Commissions.

7. Statement as to Commissions and Discounts.—The total amount of the sums paid by way of commission in respect of any shares or debentures or allowed by way of discount in respect of any debentures shall be stated in the summary made under section twenty-six of the Companies Act, 1862 (25 and 26 Vict. c. 89), next after the payment of the commission or the allowance of the discount, and the total amount thereof, or so much thereof as has not been written off, shall be stated in every balance sheet until the whole amount thereof has been written off.

8. Amendment of 63 and 64 Vict. c. 48, s. 8.—(1) For removing doubts it is hereby declared that a vendor to, promoter of, or other person who receives payment in money or shares from, a company has, and always has had, power to apply any part of the money or shares so received in payment of any commission, the payment of which, if made directly by the company, would have been legal under section eight of the Companies Act, 1900.

(2) The said section shall apply in cases where the shares are not offered to the public for subscription; provided that the payment of the commission is authorised by the articles of association of the company, and that the amount or rate paid or agreed to be paid as commission is disclosed in the statement in lieu of prospectus or in a statement in the prescribed form verified in like manner as a statement in lieu of prospectus and filed with the registrar, and, where a circular or notice, not being a prospectus, inviting subscriptions for the shares is issued, also disclosed in that circular or notice.

Payment of Interest out of Capital.

9. Power of Company to pay Interest out of Capital in Certain Cases.—Where any shares of a company are issued for the purpose of raising money to defray the expenses of the construction of any works or buildings or the provision of any plant which cannot be made profitable for a lengthened period, the company may pay interest on so much of such share capital as is for the time being paid up for the period and subject to the conditions and restrictions in this section mentioned, and may charge the same to capital as part of the cost of construction of the work, building, or plant:

Provided that—

(1) No such payment shall be made unless the same is authorised by the company's articles of association or by special resolution of the company:

(2) No such payment, whether authorised by the articles of association or by special resolution, shall be made without the previous sanction of the Board of Trade:

(3) Before sanctioning any such payment the Board of Trade may, at the expense of the company, appoint a person to inquire and report to them as to the circumstances of the case, and may, before making the appointment, require the company to give security for payment of the costs of the inquiry:

(4) The payment shall be made only for such period as may be determined by the Board of Trade; and such period shall in no case extend beyond the close of the half year next after the half year during which the works or buildings have been actually completed or the plant provided:

(5) The rate of interest shall in no case exceed four per cent. per annum or such lower rate as may for the time being be prescribed by Order in Council:

(6) The payment of such interest shall not operate as a reduction of the amount paid up on the shares in respect of which it is paid:

(7) The accounts of the company shall show the capital on which, and the rate at which, interest has been paid out of capital during the period to which the accounts relate:

(8) Nothing in this section shall affect any company to which the Indian Railways Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. c. 12), as amended by any subsequent enactment, applies.

Mortgages and Charges.

10. Amendment of 63 and 64 Vict. c. 48, s. 14, as to Registration of Mortgages and Charges.—(1) Every mortgage or charge created by a company after the commencement of this Act and being either—

(a) a mortgage or charge for the purpose of securing any issue of debentures; or

(b) a mortgage or charge on uncalled capital of the company; or

(c) a mortgage or charge created or evidenced by an instrument which, if executed by an individual, would require registration as a bill of sale; or

(d) a mortgage or charge on any land, wherever situate, or any interest therein; or (e) a mortgage or charge on any book debts of the company; or

(f) a floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company, shall, so far as any security on the company's property or undertaking is thereby conferred, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the company, unless the prescribed particulars of the mortgage or charge, together with the instrument (if any) by which the mortgage or charge is created or evidenced, are delivered to or received by the registrar for registration in manner required by this Act within twenty-one days after the date of its creation, but without prejudice to any contract or obligation for repayment of the money thereby secured, and where a mortgage or charge becomes void under this section the money secured thereby shall immediately become payable:

Provided that—

(i) In the case of a mortgage or charge created out of the United Kingdom comprising solely property situate outside the United Kingdom, the delivery to and the receipt by the registrar of a copy of the instrument by which the mortgage or charge is created or evidenced, verified in the prescribed manner, shall have the same effect for the purposes of this section as the delivery and receipt of the instrument itself, and twenty-one days after the date on which the instrument or copy could, in due course of post, and if despatched with due diligence, have been received in the United Kingdom, shall be substituted for twenty-one days after the date of the creation of the mortgage or charge, as the time within which the particulars and instrument or copy are to be delivered to the registrar; and

(ii) where the mortgage or charge is created in the United Kingdom but comprises property outside the United Kingdom, the instrument creating or purporting to create such mortgage or charge may be sent for registration notwithstanding that further proceedings may be necessary to make such mortgage or charge valid or effectual according to the law of the country in which such property is situate; and

(iii) where a negotiable instrument has been given to secure the payment of any book debts of a company, the deposit of the instrument for the purpose of securing an advance to the company shall not for the purposes of this section be treated as a mortgage or charge on those book debts;

(iv) the holding of debentures entitling the holder to a charge on land shall not be deemed to be an interest in land.

(2) The registrar shall keep, with respect to each company, a register in the prescribed form of all such mortgages and charges created by the company after the commencement of this Act, and requiring registration under this section, and shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, enter in the register, with respect to every such mortgage or charge, the date of creation, the amount secured by it, short particulars of the property mortgaged or charged, and the names of the mortgagees or persons entitled to the charge.

(3) Where a series of debentures containing, or giving by reference to any other instrument, any charge to the benefit of which the debenture holders of that series are entitled pari passu is created by a company, it shall be sufficient if there are delivered to or received by the registrar within twenty-one days after the execution of the deed containing the charge or, if there is no such deed, after the first issue of any debentures of the series the following particulars:—

(a) the total amount secured by the whole series; and

(b) the dates of the resolutions authorising the issue of the series and the date of the covering deed, if any, by which the security is created or defined; and

(c) a general description of the property charged; and

(d) the names of the trustees, if any, for the debenture holders:

together with the deed containing the charge, or, if there is no such deed, one of the debentures of the series, and the registrar shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, enter such particulars in the register:

Provided that, where more than one issue is made of debentures in the series, there shall be sent to the registrar for entry on the register particulars of the date and amount of each issue, but an omission to do this shall not affect the validity of the debentures issued.

(4) Where any commission, allowance, or discount has been paid or made, either directly or indirectly by the Company to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, whether absolutely or conditionally, for any debentures of the company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, whether absolute or conditional, for any such debentures, the particulars required for registration under this section shall include particulars as to the amount or rate per cent. of the commission, discount, or allowance so paid or made, but an omission to do this shall not affect the validity of the debentures issued:

Provided that the deposit of any debentures as security for any debt of the company shall not for the purposes of this provision be treated as the issue of the debentures at a discount.

(5) The registrar shall give a certificate under his hand of the registration of any mortgage or charge registered in pursuance of this section, stating the amount thereby secured (which certificate shall be conclusive evidence that the requirements of this section as to registration have been complied with), and the company shall cause a copy of the certificate so given to be endorsed on every debenture or certificate of debenture stock which is issued by the company, and the payment of which is secured by the mortgage or charge so registered:

Provided that nothing in this subsection shall be construed as requiring a company to cause a certificate of registration of any mortgage or charge given under this section to be endorsed on any debenture or certificate of debenture stock which has been issued by the company before the mortgage or charge was created.

(6) It shall be the duty of the company to send to the registrar for registration the particulars of every mortgage or charge created by the company and of the issues of debentures of a series and requiring registration under this section, but registration of any such mortgage or charge may be effected on the application of any person interested therein, and, if the company fail to comply with the requirements of this subsection, then, unless the registration has been effected on the application of some other person, the company, and every director, manager, secretary, or other person who is knowingly a party to the default, shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds for every day during which the default continues.

Where the registration is effected on the application of some person other than the company, that person shall be entitled to recover from the company the amount of any fees properly paid by him to the registrar on the registration.

(7) The register kept, in pursuance of this section, of the mortgages and charges of each company shall be open to inspection by any person on payment of the prescribed fee, not exceeding one shilling for each inspection.

(8) Every company shall cause a copy of every instrument creating any mortgage or charge requiring registration under this section to be kept at the registered office of the company, and to be open to inspection by the members and creditors of the company in like manner as the register of mortgages under section forty-three of the Companies Act, 1862, and the provisions of that section (including the penal provisions thereof) shall apply accordingly: Provided that, in the case of a series of uniform debentures, a copy of one such debenture shall be sufficient.

(9) Section fourteen of the Companies Act, 1900, is hereby repealed.

11. Registration of Enforcement of Security.—(1) If any person obtains an order for the appointment of a receiver or manager of the property of a company, or appoints such a receiver or manager under any powers contained in any instrument, he shall, within seven days from the date of the order or of the appointment under the powers contained in the instrument, give notice of the fact to the registrar, and the registrar shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, enter the fact on the register of mortgages and charges.

(2) Where, at the commencement of this Act, any such receiver or manager is acting under an order or appointment made before the commencement of this Act, the notice shall be given within seven days after the commencement of this Act.

(3) If any person makes default in complying with the requirements of this section he shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which the default continues.

12. Registration of Secured Debts created before 1st of January 1901.—(1) It shall be the duty of a company within three months after the commencement of this Act to send to the registrar for registration a statement of the total amount outstanding at the commencement of this Act of the debts of the company secured by mortgages or charges created before the commencement of this Act, which under the provisions of this Act would have required registration had they been created after the commencement of this Act, except those already required to be registered under section fourteen of the Companies Act, 1900, and the registrar shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, enter those particulars on the register of mortgages and charges:

Provided that the neglect of the company to comply with the provisions of this subsection shall not prejudice the rights under any such mortgage or charge of any person in whose favour the mortgage or charge was made.

(2) If the company fail to comply with the requirements of this section, the company, and every director, manager, secretary, or other person who is knowingly a party to the default, shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds for every day during which the default continues.

13. Effect of Floating Charge.—Where a company is being wound up, a floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company created within three months of the commencement of the winding up shall, unless it is proved that the company immediately after the creation of the charge was solvent, be invalid, except to the amount of any cash paid to the company at the time of or subsequently to the creation of, and in consideration for, the charge, together with interest on that amount at the rate of five per cent. per annum.

14. Perpetual Debentures.—For removing doubts it is hereby declared that a condition contained in any debentures or in any deed for securing debentures, whether issued or executed before or after the passing of this Act, shall not be invalid by reason only that thereby the debentures are made irredeemable or redeemable only on the happening of a contingency, however remote, or on the expiration of a period, however long, any rule of equity to the contrary notwithstanding.

15. Power to Re-issue Redeemed Debentures in Certain Cases.—(1) Where either before or after the passing of this Act a company has redeemed any debentures previously issued, the company, unless the articles of association of the company or the conditions of issue expressly otherwise provide, or unless the debentures have been redeemed in pursuance of any obligation on the Company so to do, and not being an obligation enforceable only by the person to whom the redeemed debentures were issued, or his assigns, shall have power, and shall be deemed always to have had power, to keep the debentures alive for the purposes of re-issue, and where a company has purported to exercise such a power the company shall have power, and shall be deemed always to have had power, to re-issue the debentures either by re-issuing the same debentures or by issuing other debentures in their place, and upon such a re-issue the person entitled to the debentures shall have, and shall be deemed always to have had, the same rights and priorities as if the debentures had not previously been issued.

(2) Where with the object of keeping debentures alive for the purpose of re-issue they have either before or after the passing of this Act been transferred to a nominee of the company, a transfer from that nominee shall be deemed to be a re-issue for the purposes of this section.

(3) Where a company has either before or after the passing of this Act deposited any of its debentures to secure advances from time to time on current account or otherwise, the debentures shall not be deemed to have been redeemed by reason only of the account of the company having ceased to be in debit whilst the debentures remained so deposited.

(4) The re-issue of a debenture or the issue of another debenture in its place under this section, whether made before or after the passing of this Act, shall be treated as the issue of a new debenture for the purposes of stamp duty, but it shall not be so treated for the purposes of any provision limiting the amount or number of debentures to be issued: Provided that any person lending money on the security of a debenture re-issued under this section which appears to be duly stamped may give the debenture in evidence in any proceedings for enforcing his security without payment of the stamp duty or any penalty in respect thereof, unless he had notice or, but for his negligence, might have discovered that the debenture was not duly stamped, but in any such case the company shall be liable to pay the proper stamp duty and penalty.

(5) Nothing in this section shall prejudice—

(a) the operation of any judgment or order of a court of competent jurisdiction pronounced or made before the seventh day of March one thousand nine hundred and seven as between the parties to the proceedings in which the judgment was pronounced or the order made, and any appeal from any such judgment or order shall be decided as if this Act had not been passed; or

(b) any power to issue debentures in the place of any debentures paid off or otherwise satisfied or extinguished reserved to a company by its debentures or the securities for the same.

16. Specific Performance of Contract to Subscribe for Debentures.—A contract with a company to take up and pay for any debentures of the company may be enforced by an order for specific performance.

17. Inspection of Register of Mortgages.—The register of mortgages required by section forty-three of the Companies Act, 1862, shall be open to inspection by any person other than a creditor or member of the company on payment of such fee, not exceeding one shilling for each inspection, as may be fixed by regulations of the company, and that section shall apply accordingly.

18. Right of Debenture Holders to Inspect the Register of Debenture Holders and to have Copies of Trust Deed.—(1) Every register of holders of debentures of a company shall, except when closed in accordance with the articles of the company during such period or periods (not exceeding in the whole thirty days in any year) as may be specified in the articles, be open to the inspection of the registered holder of any such debentures, and of any holder of shares in the company, but subject to such reasonable restrictions as the company may in general meeting impose, so that at least two hours in each day are appointed for inspection, and every such holder may require a copy of such register or any part thereof on payment of sixpence for every one hundred words required to be copied.

(2) A copy of any trust deed for securing any issue of debentures shall be forwarded to every holder of any such debentures at his request on payment in the case of a printed trust deed of the sum of one shilling or such less sum as may be prescribed by the company for such copy, or, where the trust deed has not been printed, on payment of sixpence for every one hundred words required to be copied.

(3) If inspection is refused, or a copy is refused or not forwarded, the company shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds, and to a further fine not exceeding two pounds for every day during which the refusal continues, and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company who knowingly authorises or permits such refusal shall incur the like liability.

Auditors; Balance Sheet; and Reports.

19. Auditors.—The following section shall be substituted for section twenty-three of the Companies Act, 1900:—

"(1) Every auditor of the company shall have a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the company, and shall be entitled to require from the directors and officers of the company such information and explanation as may be necessary for the performance of the duties of the auditors.

"(2) The auditors shall make a report to the shareholders on the accounts examined by them, and on every balance sheet laid before the company in general meeting during their tenure of office, and the report shall state—

"(a) whether or not they have obtained all the information and explanations they have required; and

"(b) whether, in their opinion, the balance sheet referred to in the report is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs according to the best of their information and the explanations given to them, and as shown by the books of the company.

"(3) The balance sheet shall be signed on behalf of the board by two of the directors of the company or, if there is only one director, by that director, and the auditors' report shall be attached to the balance sheet, or there shall be inserted at the foot of the balance sheet a reference to the report, and the report shall be read before the company in general meeting, and shall be open to inspection by any shareholder, who shall be entitled to be furnished with a copy of the balance sheet and the auditor's report at a charge not exceeding sixpence for every hundred words.

"(4) A person, other than a retiring auditor, shall not be capable of being appointed auditor at an annual general meeting unless notice of an intention to nominate that person to the office of auditor has been given by a shareholder to the company not less than fourteen days before the annual general meeting, and the company shall send a copy of any such notice to the retiring auditor, and shall give notice thereof to the shareholders, either by advertisement or in any other mode allowed by the articles, not less than seven days before the annual general meeting: Provided that if, after a notice of the intention to nominate an auditor has been so given, an annual general meeting is called for a date fourteen days or less after that notice has been given, the notice, though not given within the time required by this provision, shall be deemed to have been properly given for the purposes thereof, and the notice to be sent or given by the company may, instead of being sent or given within the time required by this provision, be sent or given at the same time as the notice of the general annual meeting.

"(5) If any copy of a balance sheet which has not been signed as required by this section is issued, circulated, or published, or if any copy of a balance sheet is issued, circulated, or published without either having a copy of the auditor's report attached thereto or containing such reference to that report as is required by this section, the company, and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default, shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds."

20. Application to Scotland of s. 26 of 25 and 26 Vict. c. 89, and s. 19 of 63 and 64 Vict. c. 48.—In the case of companies registered in Scotland the summary mentioned in section twenty-six of the Companies Act, 1862, in addition to the particulars required to be specified by that section and by section nineteen of the Companies Act, 1900, shall also specify the total amount of debt due from the company in respect of all mortgages and charges, which, if the company had been registered in England, would be required, under this Act, to be filed for registration, or would have been required so to be filed if created after the commencement of this Act.

21. Filing of Annual Statement of Affairs by Limited Companies.—Every company required to forward to the registrar a summary under section twenty-six of the Companies Act, 1862, shall include in that summary a statement, made up to such date as may be specified in the statement, in the form of a balance sheet, audited by the company's auditors, and containing a summary of its capital, its liabilities, and its assets, giving such particulars as will disclose the general nature of such liabilities and assets, and how the values of the fixed assets have been arrived at, but the balance sheet need not include a statement of profit and loss: Provided that this section shall not apply to any private company.

22. Report by Directors under 63 and 64 Vict. c. 48, s. 12.—(1) The report which the directors are required by section twelve of the Companies Act, 1900, to forward to every member of the company at least seven days before the date on which the statutory meeting of the company is held shall contain an abstract of the receipts of the company on account of its capital, whether from shares or debentures, and of the payments made thereout, up to a date within seven days of the date of the report exhibiting under distinctive headings the receipts of the company from shares and debentures and other sources, the payments made thereout, and particulars concerning the balance remaining in hand, and an account or estimate of the preliminary expenses of the company.

(2) A private company shall not be required to forward or to file the report required under section twelve of the Companies Act, 1900.

23. Rights of Preference Shareholders, etc. as to Receipt and Inspection of Reports, etc.—(1) Holders of preference shares and debentures of a company shall have the same right to receive and inspect the balance sheets of the company and the reports of the auditors and other reports as are possessed by the holders of ordinary shares in the company.

(2) This section shall not apply to a private company nor to a company registered before the commencement of this Act.

General Meeting, Etc.

24. Annual General Meeting.—(1) The following section shall be substituted for section forty-nine of the Companies Act, 1862:—

"A general meeting of every company shall be held once at least in every calendar year, and not more than fifteen months after the holding of the last preceding general meeting, and, if not so held, the company, and every director, manager, secretary, and other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default, shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds."

(2) When default has been made in holding a meeting of the company in accordance with the provisions of this section, the court may on the application of any member of the company call or direct the calling of a general meeting of the company.

(3) Any company which is a member of another company may, by minute of the directors, authorise any of its officials or any other person to act as its representative at any meeting of the latter company, and such representative shall be entitled to exercise the same functions on behalf of the company which he represents as if he had been an individual shareholder.

25. Poll.—A poll may be demanded at a meeting of a company at which a special resolution is submitted to be passed or confirmed under section fifty-one of the Companies Act, 1862, if demanded by three persons for the time being entitled according to the articles of the company to vote, unless the articles of the company require a demand by such number of such persons, not in any case exceeding five, as may be specified in the articles.

Winding Up.

26. Amendment of Law as to Voluntary Winding Up (25 and 26 Vict. c. 89).—The liquidator of a company being wound up voluntarily shall, within twenty-one days after his appointment, file with the registrar a notice of his appointment in the prescribed form, and if any liquidator contravenes this provision he shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which the contravention continues.

27. Rights of Creditors in a Voluntary Winding Up.—(1) Every liquidator appointed by a company in a voluntary winding up shall, within seven days from his appointment, send notice by post to all persons who appear to him to be creditors of the company that a meeting of the creditors of the company will be held on a date, not being less than fourteen days nor more than twenty-one days after his appointment, and at a place and hour to be specified in the notice, and shall also advertise notice of the meeting once in the Gazette and once at least in two local newspapers circulating in the district where the registered office or principal place of business of the company was situate.

(2) At the meeting to be held in pursuance of the foregoing provisions of this section the creditors shall determine whether an application shall be made to the court for the appointment of any person as liquidator in the place of or jointly with the liquidator appointed by the company, or for the appointment of a committee of inspection, and, if the creditors so resolve, an application may be made accordingly to the court at any time, not later than fourteen days after the date of the meeting, by any creditor appointed for the purpose at the meeting.

(3) On any such application the court may make an order either for the removal of the liquidator appointed by the company and for the appointment of some other person as liquidator or for the appointment of some other person to act as liquidator jointly with the liquidator appointed by the company, or for the appointment of a committee of inspection either together with or without any such appointment of a liquidator, or such other order as, having regard to the interests of the creditors and contributories of the company, may seem just, and no appeal shall lie from an order of the court upon such application.

(4) The court shall make such order as to the costs of such application as it may think fit, and, if the court should be of opinion that, having regard to the interests of the creditors in the liquidation, there were reasonable grounds for the application, the court may order the costs of such application to be paid out of the assets of the company notwithstanding that such application is dismissed or otherwise disposed of adversely to the applicant.

(5) The expression "Gazette" in this section means in the case of a company registered in England the London Gazette, in the case of a company registered in Scotland the Edinburgh Gazette, and in the case of a company registered in Ireland the Dublin Gazette.

28. Reckoning of Contingent Liabilities on Petition to Wind Up.—In determining whether a company is unable to pay its debts within the meaning of section eighty of the Companies Act, 1862, the court shall take into account the contingent and prospective liabilities of the company, and any contingent or prospective creditor shall be a creditor entitled to present a petition for winding up the company under section eighty-two of that Act: Provided that the court shall not give a hearing to a petition for winding up the company by such a creditor until such security for costs has been given as the court thinks reasonable, and until a prima facie case for winding up has been established to the satisfaction of the court.

29. Winding-up Order where Company has no Assets.—An order to wind up a company shall not be refused on the ground only that the assets of the company have been mortgaged to an amount equal to or in excess of those assets, or that the company has no assets.

30. Amendment of 51 and 52 Vict. c. 62, and 52 and 53 Vict. c. 60.—In the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, and the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy (Ireland) Act, 1889, the date on which the order to wind up was made shall, in the case of a company ordered to be wound up compulsorily, be substituted for the date of the commencement of the winding up of the company:

Provided that this provision shall not apply where the order is made with respect to a company which before the date of the order had commenced to be wound up voluntarily.

31. Dissolution of Companies.—(1) Where a company has been wound up voluntarily and the return made by the liquidators to the registrar under section one hundred and forty-three of the Companies Act, 1862, has been registered in accordance with that section, the court may, on the application of the liquidators or of any other person who appears to the court to be interested, make an order deferring the date at which the dissolution of the company is to take effect for such time as to the court seems fit.

(2) Where a company has been dissolved, the court may at any time within two years of the date of the dissolution, on an application being made for the purpose by the liquidators of the company or by any other person who appears to the court to be interested, make an order, upon such terms as the court thinks fit, declaring the dissolution to have been void, and thereupon such proceedings may be taken as might have been taken if the company had not been dissolved.

(3) It shall be the duty of the person on whose application any such order was made, within seven days after the making of the order, to file with the registrar an office copy of the order, and if such person fails to do so he shall be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which the default continues.

Directors.

32. Power of Court to Grant Relief in Certain Cases.—If in any proceeding against a director of a company for negligence or breach of trust it appears to a court that the director is or may be liable in respect of the negligence or breach of trust, but has acted honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the negligence or breach of trust, the court may relieve him, either wholly or partly, from his liability on such terms as the court may think proper.

33. Contributions under 53 and 54 Vict. c. 64.—A person liable to make any payment under the provisions of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, shall not be entitled to recover contribution from another person under section five of that Act if the person liable to make the payment was, and such other person was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

34. Qualification of Director.—The following provision shall be substituted for subsection (3) of section three of the Companies Act, 1900:—

"(3) If after the expiration of the said period or shorter time any unqualified person acts as a director of the company he shall be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day between the expiration of the said period or shorter time and the last day on which it is proved that he acted as a director."

Requirements as to Companies established outside the United Kingdom.

35. Requirements as to Companies established outside the United Kingdom.—(1) Every company incorporated outside the United Kingdom which at the commencement of this Act has a place of business in the United Kingdom, and every such company which after the commencement of this Act establishes such a place of business within the United Kingdom, shall within three months from the commencement of this Act or within one month from the establishment of such place of business, as the case may be, file with the registrar—

(a) a certified copy of the charter, statutes, or memorandum and articles of association, of the company, or other instrument constituting or defining the constitution of the company, and, if the instrument is not written in the English language, a certified translation thereof;

(b) a list of the directors of the company;

(c) the names and addresses of some one or more persons resident in the United Kingdom authorised to accept on behalf of the company service of process and any notices required to be served on the company; and, in the event of any alteration being made in any such instrument or in the directors or in the names or addresses of any such persons as aforesaid, the company shall file with the registrar a notice of the alteration within such time as may be prescribed.

(2) Any process or notice required to be served on the company shall be sufficiently served if addressed to any person whose name has been so filed as aforesaid and left at or sent by post to the address which has been so filed.

(3) Every company to which this section applies shall in every year file with the registrar such a statement of its affairs as would, if it were a company incorporated in the United Kingdom and having a capital divided into shares, be required under this Act to be included in the annual summary.

(4) Every company to which this section applies, and which uses the word "Limited" as part of its name, shall—

(a) in every prospectus inviting subscriptions for its shares or debentures in the United Kingdom state the country in which the company is incorporated; and

(b) conspicuously exhibit on every place where it carries on business in the United Kingdom the name of the company and the country in which the company is incorporated; and

(c) have the name of the company and of the country in which the company is incorporated mentioned in legible characters in all bill-heads and letter paper, and in all notices, advertisements, and other official publications of the company.

(5) If any company to which this section applies fails to comply with any of the requirements of this section the company, and every officer or agent of the company, shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or, in the case of a continuing offence, five pounds for every day during which the failure continues.

(6) For the purposes of this section the expression "certified" means certified in the prescribed manner to be a true copy or a correct translation, and a share transfer or share registration office shall be deemed to be a place of business within the meaning of this section.

(7) There shall be paid to the registrar for registering any document required by this section to be filed with him a fee of five shillings or such smaller fee as may be prescribed.

Miscellaneous.

36. Validity of Debentures to Bearer in Scotland.—Notwithstanding anything contained in the statute of the Scots Parliament of 1696, chapter twenty-five, debentures to bearer issued in Scotland are declared to be valid and binding according to their terms.

37. Definition of Private Company.—(1) For the purposes of this Act the expression "private company" means a company which by its articles—

(a) restricts the right to transfer its shares; and

(b) limits the number of its members (exclusive of persons who are in the employment of the company) to fifty; and

(c) prohibits any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company.

(2) A private company may, subject to anything contained in the memorandum or articles of association of the company, by passing a special resolution and by filing with the registrar such a statement in lieu of prospectus as the company, if a public company, would under the provisions of this Act have had to file before allotting any of its shares or debentures, together with such a statutory declaration as the company, if a public company, would under the provisions of section six of the Companies Act, 1900, have had to file before commencing business, turn itself into a public company.

(3) Where two or more persons hold one or more shares in a company jointly, they shall, for the purposes of this section, be treated as a single member.

(4) Wherever in the Companies Acts a minimum of seven members is required only two members shall be required in the case of a private company.

7 EDWARD 7, Chapter 50.

38. Application of 33 and 34 Vict. c. 104 to Companies not being Wound Up. —The Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870, shall apply to a company which is not in the course of being wound up, in like manner as it applies to a company which is in the course of being wound up, as if in that Act references to the court having jurisdiction to wind up the company were substituted for references to the court, and references to the liquidator were omitted therefrom, and references to the company were substituted for references to contributories of the company.

39. Reorganisation of Capital.—(1) A company may by special resolution confirmed by an order of the court modify the conditions contained in its memorandum of association so as to reorganise its capital, whether by the consolidation of shares of different classes, or by the division of its shares into shares of different classes: Provided always that no preference or special privilege attached to or belonging to any class of shares shall be interfered with except by a resolution passed by a majority of shareholders of that class representing three-fourths of the capital of that class and confirmed in the same manner as a special resolution of the company is required to be confirmed, and every resolution so passed shall bind all shareholders of such class.

(2) Where an order is made under this section an office copy thereof shall be filed with the registrar within seven days after the making of the order, and the resolution shall not take effect until such a copy has been so filed.

40. Exemption of Life Assurance Companies from 25 and 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 44. —Section forty-four of the Companies Act, 1862, shall not apply to any life assurance company nor any other assurance company to which the provisions of the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870 to 1872 (33 and 34 Vict. c. 61), as to the annual statements to be made by such companies apply, with or without modification, if the company complies with those provisions.

41. Filing of Accounts of Receivers and Managers.—Every receiver or manager of the property of a company who has been appointed under the powers contained in any instrument, and who has taken possession, shall, on ceasing to act as such, and also once in every half year while he remains in possession, file with the registrar an abstract in the prescribed form of his receipts and payments during the period to which the abstract relates, and shall also on ceasing to act as such receiver or manager file with the registrar notice to that effect, which notice shall be entered by the registrar on the register of mortgages and charges, and every such receiver or manager who makes default in complying with the provisions of this section within the prescribed time shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds.

42. Revocation of Licences under 30 and 31 Vict. c. 131, s. 23.—A licence granted by the Board of Trade under section twenty-three of the Companies Act, 1867 (which relates to associations formed for purposes not of gain), may at any time be revoked by the Board of Trade, and upon revocation the registrar shall enter the word "Limited" at the end of the name of the company upon the register, and the company shall cease to enjoy the exemptions and privileges granted by that section. Before any such licence is revoked under this section the Board of Trade shall give notice in writing of their intention to the company, and shall afford the company an opportunity of being heard in opposition to such revocation.

43. Interpretation of 46 and 47 Vict. c. 30.—For removing doubts it is hereby declared that the Commonwealth of Australia is a colony within the meaning of the Companies (Colonial Registers) Act, 1883.

44. Construction of s. 56 of 25 and 26 Vict. c. 89.—Section fifty-six, subsection (2), of the Companies Act, 1862, shall be read and construed as if the words therein "one-fifth part" had been "one-tenth part."

45. Extraordinary Resolutions.—An extraordinary resolution for the purposes of the Companies Act, 1862, and this Act, means a resolution which is passed in such manner as would, if it had been confirmed by a subsequent meeting, have constituted a special resolution, and section fifty-three of the Companies Act, 1862, shall apply in the case of an extraordinary resolution in like manner as that section applies in the case of a special resolution, with the substitution of a reference to the date of the passing of the extraordinary resolution for the reference to the date of the confirmation of the special resolution.

COMPANIES ACT, 1907.

46. Signature of Documents.—Any writing or licence which under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, is required to be under the hand of one of the principal secretaries or assistant secretaries of the Board of Trade may be under the hand of any person authorised in that behalf by the President of the Board of Trade.

47. Annual Report by Board of Trade.—The Board of Trade shall cause a general annual report of matters within the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, and this Act to be prepared and laid before both Houses of Parliament.

48. Penalty for Improper Use of Word "Limited."—If any person or persons trade or carry on business under any name or title of which "Limited" is the last word, such person or persons shall, unless duly incorporated with limited liability, be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day upon which such name or title has been used.

49. Prosecution of Offences under Companies Acts.—All offences under the Companies Acts made punishable by any penalty may be prosecuted under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts.

50. Miscellaneous Amendments of Companies Acts.—The amendments specified in the Third Schedule to this Act, which relate to minor details, shall be made in the Companies Acts.

51. Repeal.—The enactments mentioned in the Fourth Schedule to this Act are hereby repealed to the extent specified in the third column of that schedule.

52. Short Title, Construction, and Commencement.—(1) This Act may be cited as the Companies Act, 1907; and the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, and this Act may be cited together as the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1907, and are in this Act referred to as the Companies Acts, and this Act shall for all purposes (including its application to Scotland) have effect as part of the Companies Act, 1900.

(2) In this Act the expression "the court" when used in relation to a company shall, unless the context otherwise requires, mean the court having jurisdiction under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, to wind up the company.

(3) The provisions of this Act relating to perpetual debentures and the power of a company to re-issue redeemed debentures in certain cases, shall come into operation on the passing of this Act, and the other provisions of this Act shall come into operation on the first day of July one thousand nine hundred and eight.

An Act to regulate and amend the Laws and practice relating to the civil procedure in Sheriff Courts in Scotland, and for other purposes. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

7 EDWARD 7, Chapter 51.

Preliminary.

1. Short Title.—This Act may be cited for all purposes as the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907.

2. Commencement.—Unless otherwise specially enacted this Act shall come into operation on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

3. Interpretation.—In construing this Act (unless where the context is repugnant to such construction)—

(a) "Sheriff" includes sheriff-substitute;

(b) "Tenant" includes sub-tenant;

(c) "Lease" includes sub-lease;

(d) "Action" includes every civil proceeding competent in the ordinary sheriff court;

(e) "Person" includes company, corporation, or association and firm of any description nominate or descriptive, or any Board corporate or incorporate;

(f) "Sheriff-clerk" includes sheriff-clerk depute;

(g) "Agent" means a law-agent enrolled in terms of the Law Agents (Scotland) Act, 1873 (36 and 37 Vict. c. 63);

(h) "Final judgment" means an interlocutor which, by itself, or taken along with previous interlocutors, disposes of the subject-matter of the cause, notwithstanding that judgment may not have been pronounced on every question raised, and that expenses found due may not have been modified, taxed, or decerned for;

(i) "Summary cause" includes—

(1) Actions (except applications under the Workmen's Compensation Act and actions with conclusions ad actum præstandum) for payment of money exceeding twenty pounds, and not exceeding fifty pounds, exclusive of interest and expenses;

(2) Actions of whatever kind (except applications under the Workmen's Compensation Act and actions under the Small Debt Acts) notwithstanding that the value may exceed fifty pounds, in which the parties consent to the action being treated as a summary cause;

(j) "Small Debt Acts" means and includes the Small Debt (Scotland) Acts, 1837 to 1889, and Acts explaining or amending the same;

(k) "Initial writ" means the statement of claim, petition, note of appeal, or other document by which the action is initiated;

(l) "Procurator-Fiscal" means procurator-fiscal in the sheriff-court;

(m) "Workmen's Compensation Act" means the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7 c. 58), and any Acts explaining or amending the same;

(n) "Pursuer" means and includes any person making a claim or demand, or seeking any warrant or order competent in the sheriff court;

(o) "Defender" means and includes any person who is required to be called in any action;

(p) "Summary application" means and includes all applications of a summary nature brought under the common law jurisdiction of the sheriff, and all applications, whether by appeal or otherwise, brought under any Act of Parliament which provides, or, according to any practice in the sheriff court, which allows that the same shall be disposed of in a summary manner, but which does not more particularly define in what form the same shall be heard, tried, and determined.

Jurisdiction.

4. Jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction of the sheriffs, within their respective sheriffdoms, shall extend to and include all navigable rivers, ports, harbours, creeks, shores, and anchoring grounds in or adjoining such sheriffdoms. And the powers and jurisdictions formerly competent to the High Court of Admiralty in Scotland in all maritime causes and proceedings, civil and criminal, including such as may apply to persons furth of Scotland, shall be competent to the sheriffs, provided the defender shall upon any legal ground of jurisdiction be amenable to the jurisdiction of the sheriff before whom such cause or proceeding may be raised, and provided also that it shall not be competent to the sheriff to try any crime committed on the seas which it would not be competent for him to try if the crime had been committed on land: Provided always that where sheriffdoms are separated by a river, firth, or estuary, the sheriffs on either side shall have concurrent jurisdictions over the intervening space occupied by water.

5. Extension of Jurisdiction.—Nothing herein contained shall derogate from any jurisdiction, powers, or authority presently possessed or in use to be exercised by the sheriffs of Scotland, and such jurisdiction shall extend to and include—

(1) Actions of declarator (except declarators of marriage or nullity of marriage, and actions the direct or main object of which is to determine the personal status of individuals):

(2) Actions of aliment, or of separation and aliment, and for regulating the custody of children:

(3) Actions of division of commonty and of division or division and sale of common property, in which cases the Act of 1695 concerning the division of commonties shall be read and construed as if it conferred jurisdiction upon the sheriff court in the same manner as upon the Court of Session:

(4) Actions relating to questions of heritable right or title (except actions of adjudication save in so far as now competent and actions of reduction), including all actions of declarator of irritancy and removing, whether at the instance of a superior against a vassal or of a landlord against a tenant:

(5) Suspension of charges or threatened charges upon the decrees of court granted by the sheriff or upon decrees of registration proceeding upon bonds, bills, contracts or other obligations registered in the books of the sheriff court, the books of council and session, or any others competent where the debt exclusive of interest and expenses does not exceed fifty pounds:

Provided that actions relating to questions of heritable right or title, including irritancy and removing or to division of commonties or division or divisions and sale, of common property shall, if raised in the sheriff court, be raised in the sheriff court of the jurisdiction and district where the property forming the subject in dispute is situated, and all parties against whom any such action may be brought shall in such action be subject to that jurisdiction: Provided also that it shall be competent for either party at the closing of the record or within six days thereafter to require the cause to be remitted to the Court of Session in the case of actions—

(a) Relating to questions of heritable right and title where the value of the subject in dispute exceeds fifty pounds by the year or one thousand pounds in value:

(b) Relating to the right of succession to moveables where the value of the subject in dispute exceeds one thousand pounds:

(c) Relating to division of commonty or division or division and sale of common property where the value of the subject in dispute exceeds fifty pounds by the year or one thousand pounds value:

Provided also, that on cause shown or ex proprio motu the sheriff may at any stage remit to the Court of Session any action of separation and aliment or relating to the custody of children.

6. Action Competent in Sheriff Court.—Any action competent in the sheriff court may be brought within the jurisdiction of the sheriff—

(a) Where the defender (or when there are several defenders where one of them) resides within the jurisdiction, or having resided there for at least forty days immediately prior to the raising of the action has ceased to reside there for less than forty days and whose present residence in Scotland is unknown:

(b) Where the defender carries on business, and has a place of business within the sheriffdom, and is cited either personally or at such place of business:

(c) Where the defender is a person not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of Scotland, and a ship or vessel of which he is owner or part owner or master, or goods, debts, money, or other moveable property belonging to him, have been arrested within the jurisdiction:

(d) Where the defender is the owner or part owner or tenant or joint tenant, whether individually or as a trustee of heritable property within the jurisdiction, and the action relates to such property or to his interest therein:

(e) Where the action is for interdict against an alleged wrong being committed or threatened to be committed within the jurisdiction:

(f) Where the action relates to a contract the place of execution or performance of which is within the jurisdiction, and the defender is personally cited there:

(g) Where in an action of furthcoming or multiplepoinding the fund or subject in medio is situated within the jurisdiction; or the arrestee or holder of the fund is subject to the jurisdiction of the court:

(h) Where the party sued is the pursuer in any action pending within the jurisdiction against the party suing:

(i) Where the action arises out of the delict of the defender within the jurisdiction, and he is personally cited there:

(j) Where the defender prorogates the jurisdiction of the court.

7. Privative Jurisdiction in Causes under Fifty Pounds Value.—Subject to the provisions of this Act and of the Small Debt Acts, all causes not exceeding fifty pounds in value exclusive of interest and expenses competent in the sheriff court shall be brought and followed forth in the sheriff court only, and shall not be subject to review by the Court of Session: Provided that in actions ad factum præstandum, where the value of the cause is not disclosed, the same shall be deemed to exceed fifty pounds, unless in the course of the cause the sheriff shall determine, as after provided, that the value thereof is less than fifty pounds: Provided also that nothing herein contained shall affect any right of appeal competent under any Act of Parliament in force for the time being.

8. Summary Cause Procedure and Appeal.—In a summary cause the sheriff shall order such procedure as he thinks requisite, and (without a record of the evidence, unless on the motion of either party the sheriff shall order that the evidence be recorded) shall dispose of the cause without delay by interlocutor containing findings in fact and in law. Where the evidence has been recorded the judgment of the sheriff-substitute upon fact and law may in ordinary form be brought under review of the sheriff, but where the evidence has not been recorded, the findings in law only shall be subject to review. In a summary cause, if the sheriff, on appeal, is of opinion that important questions of law are involved, he shall state the same in his interlocutor, and he may then or within seven days from the date of his interlocutor grant leave to appeal to a division of the Court of Session on such questions of law, but otherwise the judgment of the sheriff shall be final.

9. Value of Cause. How Determined.—The sheriff before whom the cause depends shall (in such way as he may think expedient) inquire into and determine the value thereof for the purposes of this Act, and his determination shall be final as regards the competency of the action on the ground of value but not otherwise.

10. Privilege not to Exempt from Jurisdiction.—No person shall be exempt from the jurisdiction of the sheriff court on account of privilege by reason of being a member of the College of Justice.

Sheriffs.

11. Appointment of Sheriffs and Salaried Sheriffs-Substitute.—The right of appointing to the salaried offices of sheriff and salaried sheriff-substitute shall be vested in His Majesty, and shall be exercised on the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland.

12. Qualification for Sheriff and Salaried Sheriff-Substitute.—Every person appointed to the office of sheriff shall be an advocate of five years' standing at least or, if not an advocate, a sheriff-substitute of five years' standing at least; and every person appointed to the office of salaried sheriff-substitute shall be an advocate or a law agent within the meaning of the Law Agents (Scotland) Act, 1873 (36 and 37 Vict. c. 63): Provided always that such advocate or law agent shall be of not less than five years' standing in his profession.

13. Removal from Office of Sheriff and Salaried Sheriff-Substitute.—It shall be lawful for the Secretary for Scotland, upon a report prepared at his instance by the

SHERIFF COURTS (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1907.

Lord President of the Court of Session and the Lord Justice-Clerk for the time being, declaring that a sheriff in Scotland is by reason of inability, neglect of duty, or misbehaviour unfit for his office, to issue an order for his removal from office: Provided always that such order shall lie before both Houses of Parliament for a period of four consecutive weeks while Parliament is sitting, and, if either House of Parliament within that period resolve that such order ought not to take effect, the same shall be of no effect, but otherwise shall come into operation at the expiration of the said period. In this paragraph "sheriff" does not include "sheriff-substitute."

A salaried sheriff-substitute shall be removeable from his office by the Secretary for Scotland for inability or misbehaviour upon the report of the Lord President of the Court of Session and the Lord Justice-Clerk for the time being.

14. Salaries of Sheriffs and Sheriffs-Substitute.—It shall be lawful to grant to any sheriff or sheriff-substitute such salary as to the Treasury may seem meet, and every such salary shall be paid by four equal quarterly instalments, and shall be charged upon and be payable out of the Consolidated Fund.

15. Leave of Absence to Sheriff.—It shall be lawful for the Secretary for Scotland, on an application made by or on behalf of any sheriff for leave of absence on account of temporary illness or other reasonable cause, to grant such leave of absence for such period as he shall deem proper, and to appoint some other person who shall be a sheriff of some other sheriffdom, or an advocate of not less than five years' standing, to act as interim sheriff in the place and during the absence of such sheriff, and on such interim appointment being made to fix what proportion of the salary of the sheriff shall be paid to the interim sheriff, and to certify the same in writing; and such certificate when presented in Exchequer to the King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer shall be sufficient warrant for him for payment to such interim sheriff of the proportion of the sheriff's salary therein mentioned. A sheriff appointed to be interim sheriff under this section shall not by accepting such interim appointment vacate his office as sheriff. An interim sheriff appointed under this section shall have and exercise all the powers and privileges and perform all the duties of the sheriff, and his acts, orders, and judgments shall have the same force and effect as if done, made, or pronounced by the sheriff. In this section "sheriff" does not include sheriff-substitute.

16. Leave of Absence to Salaried Sheriff-Substitute.—In the event of any salaried sheriff-substitute, by reason of ill-health, being temporarily unable to discharge the duties of his office, it shall be lawful for the Secretary for Scotland on application being made to him by or on behalf of such sheriff-substitute to appoint a person qualified to fill the office of sheriff-substitute to act ad interim in the place and during the absence of such sheriff-substitute, and on such interim appointment being made the Treasury may, on the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland, allow such interim sheriff-substitute such remuneration as they think fit out of monies to be provided by Parliament.

17. Honorary Sheriff-Substitute.—The sheriff may by writing under his hand appoint such persons as he thinks proper to hold the office of honorary sheriff-substitute within his sheriffdom during his pleasure, and for whom he shall be answerable. An honorary sherift-substitute, during the subsistence of his commission, shall be entitled to exercise the powers and duties appertaining to the office of sheriff-substitute. An honorary sheriff-substitute shall hold office, notwithstanding the death, resignation, or removal of the sheriff, until his commission shall be recalled by a succeeding sheriff. In this section "sheriff" does not include sheriff-substitute.

18. Courts to be held by Sheriffs in their Sheriffdoms.—Every sheriff shall, unless prevented by indisposition or other unavoidable cause, hold annually in his sheriffdom courts for the discharge of the judicial business of the sheriffdom; and such courts shall continue until the causes ready for trial or hearing when such courts commence shall be disposed of; and each sheriff shall give due notice of the times and places of such courts; and, unless otherwise prescribed, each sheriff shall, once in the year, go on the small debt circuit, in use to be held by the sheriff-substitute, and shall, on such occasions, in addition to holding the small debt court, despatch as much of the ordinary business as may be ready for adjudication, or as time may permit; and each sheriff shall annually, within ten days after the twelfth day of November, make a return to the Secretary for Scotland of the number of courts and sittings held by him, and of the periods of holding each such court, in the immediately preceding year, stating the cause of absence in case the court hereinbefore directed shall not have been held by him in terms of this Act, provided that the above provisions shall not extend to the sheriffs of the Lothians and Peebles and of Lanarkshire: Provided always that it shall be lawful for the Secretary for Scotland to prescribe from time to time the number of courts to be held by the several sheriffs and the times and places for holding such courts, and also from time to time to prescribe the duties of the office of sheriff which such sheriffs respectively are required to perform personally. In this section "sheriff" does not include sheriff-substitute.

19. Secretary for Scotland to Regulate Number, Duties, and Residence of Salaried Sheriffs-Substitute.—It shall be lawful for the Secretary for Scotland from time to time to prescribe the number of salaried sheriffs-substitute of the several sheriffdoms, and the places at which such salaried sheriffs-substitute respectively are required generally to reside and to attend for the performance of their duties, the number of courts to be held by such sheriffs-substitute, the times and places of holding such courts, and the duties to be performed by such sheriffs-substitute; and it shall also be lawful for the Secretary for Scotland, if he shall think fit, to direct that the sheriff-substitute of one county shall perform the duties of sheriff-substitute in an adjacent county; and any such direction shall be equivalent in all respects to a commission to act in such adjacent county in favour of the sheriff-substitute so directed; and no salaried sheriff-substitute shall be absent from the sheriffdom for more than six weeks in any year nor for more than two weeks at any one time nor so as to interfere with the regular sittings of his court, without the special consent in writing of the sheriff, who shall be bound, in the event of his giving such consent, either to attend personally during the absence of such substitute, or to appoint another person qualified as in section twelve hereof to act as substitute in his stead.

20. Annuities to Sheriffs and Salaried Sheriffs-Substitute.—It shall be lawful for the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland, to grant an annuity payable in like manner as the salaries to any person who has held, now holds, or may hereafter hold the office of sheriff or salaried sheriff-substitute whose period of service (notwithstanding that such service may not have been continuous and may have been in different sheriffdoms and may have been partly as sheriff-substitute and partly as sheriff) has been not less than ten years. Provided always that such annuity shall not exceed one-third of the salary payable to such person in case the period of his service shall have been not less than ten years, and shall not exceed two-thirds of such salary in case the period of service shall have been not less than fifteen years, and shall not exceed three-fourths of such salary in case the period of service shall have been not less than twenty years or upwards: Provided also that (except as hereinafter provided) no such annuity shall be granted to any sheriff or sheriff-substitute unless the periods of his actual service shall, when taken together, extend to one or other of the periods of service before mentioned, and that in computing the amount of said annuity the emoluments drawn by him on an average of the five preceding years shall be held to constitute his salary: Provided also that no such annuity shall be granted unless such sheriff or sheriff-substitute shall have duly fulfilled the duties of his office during one of the periods before mentioned, and is from age or permanent infirmity disabled from the due exercise of his office, which facts shall be certified by the Lord President, the Lord Justice-Clerk, and the Lord Advocate for the time being as having been established to their satisfaction: Provided also that if a sheriff is removed under section thirteen hereof before he has completed ten years' service on the ground that he is by reason of inability unfit for his office, it shall be lawful for the Treasury to grant him an annuity of such amount and for such period as they shall consider just in all the circumstances, but in no case exceeding three-tenths of the salary payable to such sheriff, and any such annuity shall be charged upon and payable out of the same fund and in the same manner as annuities to sheriffs are paid and charged under the first section of the Public Revenue and Consolidated Fund Charges Act, 1854 (17 and 18 Vict. c. 94). In the last proviso of this section "sheriff" shall not include sheriff-substitute.

21. Disqualifications and Disabilities of Sheriffs and Salaried Sheriffs-Substitute.—It shall not be lawful for a sheriff to advise, plead, or otherwise act as an advocate before any of the King's Courts at Edinburgh, or at the Circuit Court, in any cause civil or criminal arising within or coming from his sheriffdom; and no sheriff or salaried sheriff-substitute shall be steward, chamberlain, factor, agent, or commissioner to any subject whatsoever, or shall exercise, or act in the employment, service, or office of such steward, chamberlain, factor, agent, or commissioner; and no sheriff or salaried sheriff-substitute shall be capable of being elected or of sitting or voting as a member of the House of Commons, nor shall he be entitled to vote at any election for any member of Parliament held within his sheriffdom; nor shall he act directly or indirectly as an agent for any candidate in any matter connected with, or preparatory to, any election for the county or burgh respectively in which he shall be sheriff or salaried sheriff-substitute; and it shall not be lawful for a salaried sheriff-substitute to engage in legal, banking, or other private practice or business, or to act directly or indirectly as a procurator before any court, or to be in partnership with any person so engaged or acting, nor shall such sheriff-substitute be appointed to any office, except such office as shall be by statute attached to the office of sheriff-substitute.

Any sheriff or salaried sheriff-substitute acting contrary to the provisions of this section shall be guilty of misbehaviour within the meaning of section thirteen of this Act.

Procurators-Fiscal.

22. Appointment of Procurator-Fiscal.—From and after the passing of this Act the right of appointing to the office of procurator-fiscal shall be vested in the Lord Advocate.

23. Removal of Procurator-Fiscal.—No person holding the office of procurator-fiscal at the passing of this Act, and receiving salary on that account, and no person who may be hereafter appointed to the office of procurator-fiscal, shall be removable from office, except by the Secretary for Scotland, for inability or misbehaviour, upon a report by the Lord President of the Court of Session and the Lord Justice-Clerk for the time being.

24. Procurator-Fiscal may appoint Depute.—A procurator-fiscal may, with the consent of the Lord Advocate, grant a deputation to one or more fit persons, for whose actings he shall be responsible, to sign writs, to appear in court, and to conduct prosecutions and inquiries in his name and on his behalf. In the event of a vacancy in the office of procurator-fiscal any depute or deputes so appointed shall have and discharge all the powers, privileges, and duties of a procurator-fiscal until such vacancy is filled up.

Session.

25. Sessions.—In each sheriff court there shall be held two sessions in the year, a winter and a summer session. The winter session shall extend from the first ordinary court day in October to the last ordinary court day in March. The sittings of the court may, at Christmas time, be suspended for a period not exceeding fifteen days. The summer session shall extend from the first ordinary court day in May to the last ordinary court day in July.

26. Vacation Courts.—The sheriff shall, before the termination of each winter session, appoint at least one court day during the spring vacation for the despatch of civil business, and before the termination of each summer session he shall in like manner appoint at least two court days during the autumn vacation for the same purpose. Any cause may proceed during vacation as during session, and in all causes interlocutors may competently be pronounced during vacation.

Appeals.

27. Appeal to Sheriff.—Subject to the provisions of this Act an appeal to the sheriff shall be competent against all final judgments of the sheriff-substitute and also against interlocutors—

(a) Granting or refusing interdict, interim or final;

(b) Granting interim decree for payment of money other than a decree for expenses, or making an order ad factum præstandum;

(c) Sisting an action;
(d) Allowing or refusing or limiting the mode of proof not being an interlocutor fixing a diet for jury trial;
(e) Against which the sheriff-substitute either ex proprio motu or on the motion of any party grants leave to appeal;

Provided always that notwithstanding the death, resignation, or removal of a sheriff, appeals may be taken from the judgment of the sheriff-substitute, which appeals shall be heard by the succeeding sheriff when he shall enter upon office.

28. Appeal to Court of Session.—Subject to the provisions of this Act it shall be competent to appeal to the Court of Session against a judgment of a sheriff-substitute or of a sheriff, but that only if the value of the cause exceeds fifty pounds; and the interlocutor appealed against is a final judgment; or is an interlocutor—

(a) Granting interim decree for payment of money other than a decree for expenses;
(b) Sisting the action;
(c) Against which the sheriff or the sheriff-substitute, either ex proprio motu or on the motion of any party, grants leave to appeal: Provided that any exclusion or allowance of appeal competent under any Act of Parliament in force for the time being shall not be affected by this or the preceding section.

29. Effect of Appeal.—An appeal shall be effectual to submit to review the whole of the interlocutors pronounced in the cause, and shall be available to and may be insisted in by all other parties in the cause notwithstanding they may not have noted separate appeals. An appeal shall not prevent immediate execution of a warrant of sequestration for rent, or of warrants to take inventories, or place effects in custody ad interim, or warrants for interim preservation, and an interim interdict, although appealed against, shall be binding till recalled.

Removal of Cause to Court of Session for Jury Trial.

30. Removal of Cause for Jury Trial.—In cases originating in the sheriff court (other than claims by employees against employers in respect of injury caused by accident arising out of and in the course of their employment and concluding for damages under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, or alternatively at common law or under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, 43 and 44 Vict. c. 42), where the claim is in amount or value above fifty pounds, and an order has been pronounced allowing proof (other than an order for proof to lie in retentis or for recovery of documents) it shall, within six days thereafter, be competent to either of the parties, who may conceive that the cause ought to be tried by jury, to require the cause to be remitted to the Court of Session for that purpose, where it shall be so tried: Provided, however, that the Court of Session shall, if it thinks the case unsuitable for jury trial, have power to remit the case back to the sheriff, or to remit it to a Lord Ordinary, or to send it for proof before a Judge of the Division before whom the cause depends.

Jury Trial in Sheriff Court.

31. Jury Trial in Sheriff Court.—In any action raised in the sheriff court by an employee against his employer concluding for damages under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, or alternatively under that Act or at common law in respect of injury caused by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, where the claim exceeds fifty pounds, either party may so soon as proof has been allowed, or within six days thereafter, require that the cause shall be tried before a jury, in which case the sheriff shall appoint the action to be tried before a jury of seven persons. The verdict of the jury shall be applied in an interlocutor by the sheriff, which shall be the final judgment in the cause, and may, subject to the provisions of this Act, be appealed to either Division of the Court of Session, but that only upon one or more of the following grounds—

(1) That the verdict has been erroneously applied by the sheriff;
(2) That the verdict is contrary to the evidence;
(3) That the sheriff had in the course of the trial unduly refused or admitted evidence or misdirected the jury;

SHERIFF COURTS (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1907.

(4) That an award of damages is inadequate or is excessive.

Upon such appeal the court may refuse the appeal or may find under head (1) that the verdict was erroneously applied, and give judgment accordingly, or under the other heads before mentioned may set aside the verdict and order a new trial, provided that if the judges are equally divided in opinion the verdict shall stand.

32. Sheriff to State Questions for Jury.—Where jury trial has been ordered the sheriff shall after hearing parties, if he shall think that necessary or desirable, issue an interlocutor setting forth the question or questions of fact to be at the trial proponed to the jury and fixing a time and place for the trial, being not sooner than fourteen days from the date of the interlocutor.

33. Remuneration of Jurors.—Where jury trial has been ordered the party moving for it shall, on each day the trial proceeds, before the proceedings commence, deposit with the sheriff-clerk the sum of three pounds ten shillings, which deposit shall form part of the expenses of the cause; failing any such deposit being made, the sheriff may dismiss the cause. Out of said fund the sheriff-clerk shall pay to each juror a fee of ten shillings for each day on which he is empanelled. When a jury trial is not proceeded with, said deposit shall be returned to the depositor.

Removings.

34. Removings.—Where lands exceeding two acres in extent are held under a probative lease specifying a term of endurance, and whether such lease contains an obligation upon the tenant to remove without warning or not, such lease, or an extract thereof from the books of any court of record, shall have the same force and effect as an extract decree of removing obtained in an ordinary action at the instance of the lessor, or any one in his right, against the lessee or any party in possession, and such lease or extract shall along with authority in writing signed by the lessor or any one in his right or by his factor or law agent be sufficient warrant to any sheriff officer or messenger-at-arms of the sheriffdom within which such lands or heritages are situated to eject such party in possession, his family, sub-tenants, cottars, and dependants, with their goods, gear and effects, at the expiry of the term or terms of endurance of the lease: Provided that previous notice in writing to remove shall have been given—

(A) When the lease is for three years and upwards not less than one year and not more than two years before the termination of the lease; and

(B) In the case of leases from year to year (including lands occupied by tacit relocation) or for any other period less than three years, not less than six months before the termination of the lease (or where there is a separate ish as regards land and houses or otherwise before that ish which is first in date):

Provided that if such written notice as aforesaid shall not be given the lease shall be held to be renewed by tacit relocation for another year, and thereafter from year to year: Provided further that nothing contained in this section shall affect the right of the landlord to remove a tenant who has been sequestrated under the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. c. 79), or against whom a decree of cessio has been pronounced under the Debtors (Scotland) Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. c. 34), or who by failure to pay rent has incurred any irritancy of his lease or other liability to removal: Provided further that removal or ejectment in virtue of this section shall not be competent after six weeks from the date of the ish last in date: Provided further that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent proceedings under any lease in common form; and that the foregoing provisions as to notice shall not apply to any stipulations in a lease entitling the landlord to resume land for building, planting, feuing, or other purposes or to subjects let for any period less than a year.

35. Letter of Removal.—Where any tenant in possession of any lands exceeding two acres in extent (whether with or without a written lease) shall, either at the date of entering upon the lease or at any other time, have granted a letter of removal, either holograph or attested by one witness, such letter of removal shall have the same force and effect as an extract decree of removing, and shall be a sufficient warrant for ejection to the like effect as is provided in regard to a lease or extract thereof, and shall be operative against the granter of such letter of removal or any party in his right within the same time and in the same manner after the like previous notice to remove: Provided always that where such letter is dated and signed within twelve months before the date of removal or before the first ish, if there be more than one ish, it shall not be necessary that any notice of any kind shall be given by either party to the other.

36. Notice to Remove.—Where lands exceeding two acres in extent are occupied by a tenant without any written lease, and the tenant has given to the proprietor or his agent no letter of removal, the lease shall terminate on written notice being given to the tenant by or on behalf of the proprietor, or to the proprietor by or on behalf of the tenant not less than six months before the determination of the tenancy, and such notice shall entitle the proprietor, in the event of the tenant failing to remove, to apply for and obtain a summary warrant of ejection against the tenant and every one deriving right from him.

37. Notice of Termination of Tenancy.—In all cases where houses, with or without land attached, not exceeding two acres in extent, lands not exceeding two acres in extent let without houses, mills, fishings, shootings, and all other heritable subjects (excepting land exceeding two acres in extent) are let for a year or more, notice of termination of tenancy shall be given in writing to the tenant by or on behalf of the proprietor or to the proprietor by or on behalf of the tenant: Provided always that notice under this section shall not warrant summary ejection from the subjects let to a tenant, but such notice, whether given to or by or on behalf of the tenant, shall entitle the proprietor to apply to the sheriff for a warrant for summary ejection in common form against the tenant and every one deriving right from him: Provided further that the notice provided for by this section shall be given at least forty days before the fifteenth day of May when the termination of the tenancy is the term of Whitsunday, and at least forty days before the eleventh day of November when the termination of the tenancy is the term of Martinmas.

Summary Removings.

38. Summary Removing.—Where houses or other heritable subjects are let for a shorter period than a year, any person by law authorised may present to the sheriff a summary application for removing, and a decree pronounced in such summary cause shall have the full force and effect of a decree of removing and warrant of ejection. Where such a let is for a period not exceeding four months, notice of removal therefrom shall, in the absence of express stipulation, be given as many days before the ish as shall be equivalent to at least one-third of the full period of the duration of the let; and where the let exceeds four months, notice of removal shall, in the absence of express stipulation, be given at least forty days before the expiry of the said period.

Procedure Rules.

39. Procedure Rules.—Subject to the provisions of any Act of Parliament in force after the passing of this Act, the procedure in all civil causes shall be conform to the rules of procedure set forth in the First Schedule hereto annexed. Such rules shall be construed and have effect as part of this Act.

40. Court of Session to Regulate Fees, etc.—The Court of Session may from time to time, by Act of Sederunt, make such regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act as may be necessary for carrying into effect the purposes thereof for regulating the practice of the sheriff courts (including diligence and procedure under the Small Debt Acts); and for regulating the fees of agents, officers, shorthand writers, and others, and, with the concurrence of the Treasury, for regulating the fees of court; and for altering, amending, or adding to the rules of procedure in the First Schedule hereto: Provided that at least two weeks before the same is signed the terms of the proposed Act of Sederunt shall be published in the Edinburgh Gazette and at least two other newspapers in Scotland: Provided also that every such Act of Sederunt shall, within one week from the date thereof, be transmitted by the Lord President of the Court of Session to the Secretary for Scotland, in order that it may be laid before the Houses of Parliament; and, if either of the Houses of Parliament shall within thirty-six days after it has been laid before them resolve that the whole or any part of such Act of Sederunt ought not to continue in force, the whole or such part thereof as shall be included in such resolution shall from and after the date of the passing of such resolution cease to be binding.

41. Meetings of Sheriffs.—For the purpose of preserving uniformity in the proceedings of sheriff courts, the sheriffs shall meet in Edinburgh once at least in each year, and may then, or at any other meeting, formulate for the consideration of the Court of Session any regulations which they propose should be enacted by Act of Sederunt, a printed draft of the same having been exhibited in each sheriff court for the space of fourteen days before the same is submitted to the court: Provided also that the necessary expenses of such meetings of sheriffs and of preparing and printing such propositions shall be allowed in the annual accounts in Exchequer of such one of the sheriffs as may from time to time be appointed by them to be their convener in the like manner as other ordinary expenses of sheriffs are allowed. In this section "sheriff" does not include "sheriff-substitute."

Small Debt Acts.

42. Extension of Small Debt Jurisdiction to £20.—The provisions of the Small Debt Acts shall extend and apply to all causes competent thereunder where the value of the cause does not exceed twenty pounds, and wherever the words "eight pounds six shillings and eightpence" or the words "twelve pounds" occur in these Acts they shall be read and construed as if for these words there were substituted the words "twenty pounds."

43. Small Debt Sequestration for Rent.—The provisions of the Small Debt Acts for sequestration for rent shall extend to all sequestrations applied for currente termino or in security.

44. Parties may Appear by Agents in Small Debt Court.—Section eight of the Small Debt Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. c. 26), is hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof it is enacted that in any cause brought under the Small Debt Acts any party may appear by or along with an agent, and the sheriff may allow and include in the expenses of the cause a fee to such agent.

45. Procedure Rules Applicable to Small Debt Causes.—The provisions of section three (except subsections (d), (h), (i), (k), (l), (m), and (p)), section four, subsection (2) of section five, so far as relating to claims for aliment, section six (except subsection (e)), section forty-nine and section fifty-one hereof, and the rules ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, seventeen, nineteen, twenty-one, twenty-six, fifty, fifty-five, sixty, sixty-three, seventy, seventy-nine, eighty, one hundred and twenty-six, one hundred and twenty-seven, one hundred and twenty-eight, one hundred and twenty-nine, one hundred and fifty-one, in the First Schedule hereto shall, so far as appropriate, apply to causes under the Small Debt Acts.

46. Sections 10 and 11 of the Debtors (Scotland) Act, 1838, to Apply to Small Debt Causes.—The provisions of sections ten and eleven of the Debtors (Scotland) Act, 1838 (1 and 2 Vict. c. 114), shall not apply to decrees of delivery under the Small Debt Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1889, but such decrees shall be enforceable by imprisonment under the warrant for execution contained in Schedule B of the Small Debt Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1889.

47. Second Extract of Small Debt Decree Competent.—It shall be lawful to issue a second or further extract of any decree under the Small Debt Acts, in the form as nearly as may be of Schedule B or C of the Small Debt Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1889, which extract may be written upon a separate paper, and shall have the same force and effect in all respects as the first extract.

48. Small Debt Cause may be Remitted to Ordinary Court Roll.—If the sheriff is of opinion that the importance of the questions raised in any cause brought under the Small Debt Acts warrants that course, he may at any stage remit the cause to his ordinary court roll either on cause shown or ex proprio motu, in which case the cause shall proceed in all respects (including appeal) as if it had been originally raised in the ordinary court.

7 EDWARD 7, Chapter 51.

Postal Charge.

49. Postal Charge.—When a charge is necessary upon a decree for payment of money granted in the small debt court, and the place of execution of the charge is more than twelve miles distant from the seat of the court where such decree was granted, a charge may be given by post in the manner prescribed by the Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882 (45 and 46 Vict. c. 77).

Summary Applications.

50. Summary Applications.—In summary applications (where a hearing is necessary) the sheriff shall appoint the application to be heard at a diet to be fixed by him, and at that or any subsequent diet (without record of evidence unless the sheriff shall order a record) shall summarily dispose of the matter and give his judgment in writing: Provided that wherever in any Act of Parliament an application is directed to be heard, tried, and determined summarily or in the manner provided by section fifty-two of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1876 (39 and 40 Vict. c. 70), such direction shall be read and construed as if it referred to this section of this Act: Provided also that nothing contained in this Act shall affect any right of appeal provided by any Act of Parliament under which a summary application is brought.

The Poor's Roll.

51. Poor's Roll.—Where parties are unable from poverty to pursue or defend an action, it shall be lawful for the sheriff to admit such parties to the benefit of the poor's roll if, upon the report of the procurators for the poor, he is satisfied that such person is entitled thereto.

Repeal.

52. Repeal of Statutes.—The enactments mentioned in the Second Schedule hereto annexed are hereby repealed to the extent mentioned in the third column of that Schedule, and all laws, statutes, Acts of Sederunt, orders and usages now in force so far as the same are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, are also hereby repealed. But provided that all actions pending at the date of the commencement of this Act shall nevertheless proceed to final determination in all respects as if this Act had not been passed.

SCHEDULES.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

Rules for Regulating Procedure in the Ordinary Court (ss. 39, 40, and 45).

Forms of Process.

1. Initial Writ.—Subject to the provisions of the Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, and the Conveyancing and Land Transfer (Scotland) Act, 1874, as regards service of heirs and completion of title, all actions shall be commenced by writ as nearly as may be in the Form A hereto annexed.

2. Copy Account to be Served.—Where the claim or demand is founded upon a stated account a copy of the account shall be endorsed upon or attached to the initial writ and served along with it.

3. Writ to be Signed.—The writ shall be signed by the pursuer or complainer or by his agent, and the name and address of pursuer's agent (if any) shall be upon the back of every service copy.

4. Form of First Warrant.—The warrant of citation shall be as nearly as may be—

(a) In summary causes and summary removings, and also in summary applications when citation is necessary and in cases under the Workmen's Compensation Act, in the Form B hereto annexed:

(b) In all other causes, in the Form C hereto annexed.

SHERIFF COURTS (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1907.

Induciæ.

5. Induciæ of Citation.—Actions shall proceed upon seven days' warning or induciæ when the defender is within Scotland, or fourteen days when he is in Orkney or Shetland or in any other island within Scotland or is furth of Scotland.

6. Special Induciæ.—The sheriff may shorten or may extend the induciæ, but not so as to be in any case less than forty-eight hours.

Citation.

7. Signature of Warrants.—Warrants may be signed by the sheriff-clerk, but any warrant may be signed by the sheriff or sheriff-substitute, and must be so signed if it contains an order for shortening or extending the induciæ or for interim interdict, sequestration, or other order not being an order for citation or warrant to arrest. In actions against persons furth of Scotland the warrant may authorise service edictally.

8. Mode of Citation.—Citation may be in the Form D hereto annexed, and the form of execution of citation, which shall be appended to or endorsed upon the initial writ, may be in the Form E hereto annexed.

9. Attestation of Officer's Execution of Citation.—If a warrant is executed by an officer, one witness shall be sufficient for the execution of citation, and the execution shall be signed by the officer and the witness, and shall specify whether the citation was personal, or, if otherwise, the mode of citation.

10. Endorsation of Warrant by Sheriff-Clerk of Defender's Residence not Necessary.—Any warrant of citation or any warrant or precept of arrestment proceeding upon a depending action or liquid document of debt may in any competent manner be lawfully executed within the jurisdiction of any sheriff without indorsation by the sheriff-clerk of that jurisdiction, and, if executed by an officer, may be so executed by an officer of the court which granted the warrant or precept, or by an officer of the jurisdiction within which it is to be executed.

11. Citing of Corporation.—A corporation or association, or a firm nominate or descriptive, or a board corporate or unincorporate, may be sued and summary diligence upon a sheriff court decree or a decree of registration executed against them under their nominate or descriptive name alone, and may be competently cited at their principal place of business (which term shall include the office or place of business of the clerk or secretary of any board or corporation), or where the principal place of business is outwith the jurisdiction, at any place of business within the jurisdiction.

12. Service of New.—If it appear to the sheriff that there has been any irregularity in service upon a defender who has not appeared, the sheriff may authorise the pursuer or complainer to make service of new upon such conditions as to the sheriff shall seem just.

13. Defender Appearing Barred Objecting to Citation.—A party who appears may not state any objection to the regularity of the service upon himself, and his appearance shall be deemed to remedy any defect in the service, unless where jurisdiction has been constituted by citation or by arrestment ad fundandum jurisdictionem.

14. Citation of a Minor.—Service in ordinary form on a minor and on his father, as curator-at-law, or upon a minor and his tutors and curators if known to pursuer, or, if they are not known, upon the minor himself in ordinary form, and his tutors and curators edictally, shall be good and sufficient service on the minor for every purpose of law.

15. Edictal Citation.—It shall be competent to execute edictally any warrant of citation granted or charge on an extracted decree pronounced by a sheriff against any person furth of Scotland, by delivery of a copy thereof at the office of the keeper of edictal citations at Edinburgh according to the mode established in regard to the execution edictally of citations and charges on warrants of the Court of Session; or by sending to such keeper in a registered post-letter a certified copy of such warrant or charge, of which copy the keeper shall acknowledge receipt. Every citation or charge so executed edictally shall be recorded in the record of edictal citations in Edinburgh in a separate record of edictal citations or charges against persons furth of Scotland cited or charged upon warrants proceeding from any sheriff court. Where the party cited or charged has a known residence or place of business in England or Ireland a copy of the writ and citation or of the decree and charge on fourteen days' induciæ shall be posted in a registered letter to the party at such address, and the execution shall express that this has been done. The sheriff-clerk shall in all warrants to cite persons furth of Scotland insert a warrant to cite edictally, and along with the execution of edictal citation pursuer's agent shall lodge a certificate of such postal intimation and the post office registered letter receipt.

Custody of Process.

16. Custody of Process.—Every initial writ shall after tabling remain in the custody of the sheriff-clerk, unless the sheriff shall grant a special order to the contrary. A process may be borrowed only by an agent entitled to practice in the jurisdiction, or by his duly authorised clerk, for whom he shall be responsible.

17. Lost Documents may be Replaced by Copies.—When any number of process is lost or destroyed, a copy thereof, authenticated in such manner as the sheriff may require, may be substituted, and shall, for the purposes of the action, be equivalent to the original.

18. Interlocutor Sheets, etc., to be Lodged by Pursuer.—In a defended action the pursuer shall lodge with the sheriff-clerk principal and duplicate interlocutor sheets and a principal and borrowing inventory of process; and the sheriff-clerk shall endorse upon all pleadings the date when the same are lodged. The principal interlocutor sheets and the borrowing inventory shall remain in the custody of the sheriff-clerk.

Transfer of Causes.

19. Transfer of Cause to more Convenient Sheriffdom where Several Defenders in Different Sheriffdoms.—Where an action in which there are two or more defenders has been brought in the court of the domicile of one of them, the sheriff may transfer the cause to any other court which has jurisdiction over any of the defenders, if in his opinion it is expedient that this should be done, and an action so transferred shall proceed in all respects as if it had been originally brought in that court.

20. Sheriff on Cause shown may Remit to another Sheriffdom.—The sheriff may upon sufficient cause, by interlocutor stating his reasons, remit any cause to another sheriffdom, and such interlocutor, when issued by a sheriff-substitute, shall by leave of the sheriff-substitute, and within seven days only, be subject to review by the sheriff, but shall not be further subject to review.

21. Where Plea of No Jurisdiction Stated, Cause may be Remitted to proper Sheriffdom.—Where a plea of no jurisdiction is sustained, the sheriff may, if he think proper, and upon such conditions as to costs as he may think fit, remit the cause to the sheriff before whom it appears to him it ought to have been brought, and it shall thereafter proceed in all respects as if it had been originally there brought. When such remit is made by the sheriff-substitute, the interlocutor remitting shall by leave of the sheriff-substitute and within seven days only be subject to review by the sheriff but shall not be further subject to review.

Appearance.

22. Notice of Appearance.—If a defender intend to state a defence he shall (except in a summary cause), before the expiry of the induciæ, lodge with the sheriff-clerk a notice of appearance in the following terms:—

[Place and date]—C. D., [design him] defender, intends to defend the action against him [and others] at the instance of A. B. [design him].

C. D. Defender,
or X. Y. [add address],
Defender's Agent.

Undefended Causes.

23. In Undefended Cause Decree may be Granted at any Time after Expiry of Induciæ.—Where a defender does not answer or lodge a notice of appearance the sheriff may at any time, after the expiry of the induciæ, upon written craving to that effect being endorsed upon the initial writ by the pursuer or his agent, decern in terms of the claim or demand as set forth in the initial writ, and for expenses as the same may be certified by a note endorsed upon the initial writ by the auditor of court, subject to any restriction endorsed upon the writ or set forth in a minute by the pursuer or his agent.

24. Extract of Decree in Absence in Seven Days.—The sheriff-clerk may issue an extract of such decree after the expiry of seven days from the date of the sheriff's judgment.

25. Finality of Decree in Absence.—A decree pronounced in absence, and which has not been recalled or brought under review by suspension, where suspension is competent, or by reduction, shall become final, and be entitled to all the privileges of a decree in foro—

(a) In six months from its date, or from the date of charge under it, where the service of the writ or of the charge has been personal:

(b) In any event after the lapse of twenty years from its date.

26. Amendment of Writ in Undefended Action.—In an undefended action the sheriff may allow the pursuer or his agent to amend any error or defect in the initial writ, and may, if he see fit, order the amended writ to be served upon the defender, and may allow him to appear within such time as he may think proper. But the expense occasioned by such amendment shall not be chargeable against the defender, and such amendment shall not have the effect of validating diligence used on the dependence of the action so as to prejudice creditors of the defender, but such amendment shall be operative to the effect of obviating objections to such diligence when stated by the defender himself, or by any persons representing him by a title, or in right of a debt contracted by him subsequent to the using of such diligence, and any diligence which was competent upon the original writ shall be competent upon the amended writ.

Reponing.

27. Defender may be Reponed against Decree in Absence.—At any time before implement of a decree in absence, the defender may apply to be reponed by lodging with the sheriff-clerk and serving upon pursuer a note setting forth his proposed defence, and his explanation of his failure to appear.

28. Upon Consignation.—Along with this reponing note the defender shall consign the sum of two pounds in the hands of the sheriff-clerk.

29. Sheriff may Recall the Decree in Absence.—Upon such consignation the sheriff, if satisfied with the defender's explanation, may recall the decree so far as not implemented, whereupon the action shall proceed in all respects as if the defender had appeared.

30. Or Refuse to Recall.—If the sheriff is not satisfied with the defender's explanations he may refuse the reponing note.

31. Pursuer Entitled to Consigned Money.—In either case the pursuer shall be entitled to uplift the consigned money.

32. Reponing Note to operate as Sist of Diligence.—A reponing note, when duly lodged and intimated to the pursuer or to his agent, shall operate as a sist of diligence.

33. Judgment upon a Reponing Note Final.—Any interlocutor or order upon a reponing note, or recalling, or incidental to the recall of a decree in absence, shall be final and not subject to review.

Defended Causes.

34. Defended Cause to be Tabled.—Where appearance has been entered the sheriff-clerk shall enrol the cause for tabling on the first court day occurring after the expiry of the inducie.

35. If not Tabled to Drop from Roll.—An action which has not been tabled, and in which protestation has not been craved, shall drop from the roll, but within three months the sheriff may direct it to be again enrolled for tabling under such conditions as to notice, or re-service, or expenses, or otherwise as he shall think fit.

36. If Case not Tabled Defender may Crave Protestation.—If the pursuer do not then table the cause, the defender or his agent, upon producing the service copy of the writ, may crave protestation for not insisting, which the sheriff may grant, and may modify the amount of protestation money payable to defender.

37. Extract of Protestation.—Protestation shall not be extracted till the expiry of seven free days from the date of its granting, except where arrestments have been used, in which case extract may be given out after the lapse of forty-eight hours.

38. Effect of Protestation.—Upon protestation being extracted, the instance shall fall.

39. Recall of Protestation.—Before extract protestation may be recalled, and the pursuer may be allowed to proceed with his action upon making payment to the defender of the amount of the protestation money, and upon such other conditions as to the sheriff shall seem just.

40. Sheriff may Direct any Cause to be Tried as a Summary Cause.—When any defended action (other than a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act) has been tabled, the sheriff of consent of parties, notwithstanding that its value exceeds fifty pounds, may, at any stage, direct that it be tried as a summary cause, and his decision as to this shall be final.

41. Procedure in a Summary Cause.—In a summary cause the sheriff may order a condescendence and defences if he thinks fit, or may make or certify a note upon the writ or separately of the pleas of parties and appoint a diet for the trial of the cause, or may order such other procedure as the circumstances seem to him to require.

42. In Non-Summary Cause Condescendence within Three Days of Tabling.—In all other defended causes the pursuer shall at the tabling of the cause, or within three days thereafter, lodge a condescendence setting forth succinctly and in articulate articles the grounds of action and his pleas in law.

43. Defences within Six Days.—Within six days of the condescendence being lodged the defender shall lodge his defences.

44. Enrolment for Adjustment.—The sheriff-clerk shall, upon defences being lodged, enrol the cause for an ordinary court day occurring not less than four days thereafter for adjustment. The adjustment shall not be adjourned more than once unless upon special cause shown.

45. Certified Copy Writ Warrant for Arrestment.—In every defended action the pursuer shall, after defences have been lodged, and before the diet for adjustment, lodge in process a copy of the initial writ and warrant thereon certified by him or his agent, which may thereafter be borrowed by the agent of any party to the process, and such certified copy shall be sufficient warrant where competent to arrest on the dependence. Separate precepts of arrestment may be issued by the sheriff-clerk upon production to him of a writ containing pecuniary conclusions upon which a warrant of citation has been granted, or of a liquid document of debt.

46. Form of Defences.—Defences shall be in the form of articulate answers to the condescendence, having appended a note of defender's pleas, and where necessary a statement of facts founded on in defence which shall be set forth succinctly.

47. Documents Founded on to be Produced before Record Closed.—Each party shall, along with his pleadings, or at latest before the closing of the record, if required by any other party in the action or by the sheriff, lodge any documents founded upon in the pleadings, so far as the same are within his custody or power.

48. Diligence for Recovery of such Documents.—Where such documents are not produced by either party, or where they are in the hands of third parties, the sheriff may, on the motion of either party, grant commission and diligence for their recovery, and may on that account delay closing the record.

49. Revisal may be Ordered.—The sheriff may upon cause shown, or ex proprio motu, order a revisal of the pleadings, or may order pursuer to answer defender's separate statement of facts.

50. Documents may be Challenged Ope Exceptione.—When a deed or writing is founded on by any party in a cause, all objections thereto may be stated and maintained by way of exception, without the necessity of bringing a reduction thereof.

51. Caution may be Ordered when Action of Reduction Competent.—The sheriff may, where an objection is so stated and where an action of reduction would be competent, order the objector to find caution, or to make consignation as he shall direct.

52. Closing Record.—When the pleadings have been adjusted the sheriff shall close the record.

53. Alterations to be Initialed by Sheriff.—All alterations or additions made on the record shall be authenticated by the sheriff's initials.

54. Preliminary Pleas to be First Disposed of.—If preliminary pleas have been stated the sheriff shall first dispose of them, unless he thinks that from their being connected with the merits, or on any other ground, they should be reserved till a future stage of the cause.

55. Counter-claim may be Stated in Defences.—Where a defender pleads a counter-claim it shall suffice that he state the same in his defences, and the sheriff may thereafter deal with it as if it had been stated in a substantive action, and may grant decree for it in whole or in part, or for the difference between it and the claim sued on.

56. Failure of either party to Appear or to Implement Orders of Court Entitles other party to Decree.—In a defended action (including a jury cause) when any production or pleading has not been lodged or order implemented within the time required by statute or ordered by the sheriff, or where in a defended action either party fails to appear by himself or his agent at any diet, or fails to make payment of any court dues or deposit, the sheriff may grant decree as craved, or of absolvitor, or may dismiss the action, with expenses, but the sheriff may upon cause shown prorogate the time for lodging any production or pleading or implementing any order. If all parties fail to appear, the sheriff shall, unless sufficient reason appear to the contrary, dismiss the action.

57. Agent Failing to Return Process may be Fined.—When an agent has borrowed a process, or any part thereof, and fails to return it for any diet at which it is required, the sheriff may impose upon such agent a fine not exceeding one pound, which shall be payable to the clerk of court for behoof of His Majesty's Exchequer, but an order so imposing a fine may on cause shown be recalled by the sheriff who granted it. Orders made under this section shall not be subject to review. For the purposes of this section every agent practising before his court shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the sheriff.

58. If Probation Renounced Parties to Sign Minute.—If at the time of closing the record the parties renounce probation, they shall sign a minute to that effect on the interlocutor sheet, and the sheriff may order the case to be debated then or at a subsequent diet.

59. Proof may be Ordered.—If proof is necessary, the sheriff shall (unless the cause has been ordered for jury trial), with the least possible delay, fix a date for taking the proof, and may limit the mode of proof.

60. Remit to Person of Skill.—The sheriff may remit to any person of skill, or other person, to report on any matter of fact; and, when such remit is made of consent of both parties, the report of such person shall be final and conclusive with respect to the matter of the remit. When such a remit is made, upon the motion of either party, the expense attending its execution shall in the first instance be paid by the party moving for it. When the remit is on joint motion, or by the sheriff ex proprio motu, the expense shall in the first instance be paid by the parties equally, unless the sheriff shall otherwise order.

61. Parties may by Minute Agree to Cause being tried as Small Debt Cause.—The parties to any action may lodge in process a minute, signed by themselves or their agents, agreeing to the cause being disposed of in the manner provided under the Small Debt Acts, whereupon the sheriff shall remit the action to his small debt court roll, and the whole powers and provisions of the Small Debt Acts shall become applicable to the cause.

62. Diligence for Recovery of Documents.—At any time after a proof has been allowed, or an order made for jury trial, the sheriff, upon the motion of either party, may grant commission and diligence for the recovery of such documents as the sheriff shall deem relevant to the cause.

63. Evidence to lie in Retentis.—Evidence in danger of being lost may be taken to lie in retentis, and, if satisfied that it is desirable so to do, the sheriff may, upon the motion of either party at any time, either take himself, or grant authority to a commissioner to take, such evidence.

64. Reference to Oath.—When any person desires to refer to the oath of his adversary, he shall lodge a minute to that effect, signed by himself or his agent. If the party to whose oath reference has been made fail to appear at the diet for taking his deposition, the sheriff may hold him as confessed, and decern accordingly.

65. Recording of Evidence.—Evidence in a cause or a disposition, whether before the sheriff or a commissioner, may be taken down by the sheriff or commissioner, or by a clerk or shorthand writer nominated by the sheriff or commissioner, to whom the oath de fideli administratione shall be administered and evidence may be recorded in narrative form or by question and answer as the sheriff or commissioner shall direct, and the extended notes of evidence, certified by such clerk or shorthand writer, shall be the notes of the oral evidence in the cause. The sheriff or commissioner may, if he think fit, dictate to the clerk or shorthand writer what he is to record.

66. Sheriff may amend Record of Evidence.—If the correctness of the notes of evidence or of a deposition be questioned, the sheriff may satisfy himself in regard thereto by the examination of witnesses or otherwise, and may amend the record of evidence or a deposition.

67. Shorthand Writer's Fees.—When a shorthand writer is so employed to record evidence, he shall in the first instance be paid, as regards commissions by the party moving for the commission, and as regards proofs or jury trials by the parties equally. The agents of parties shall be personally liable for the shorthand writer's fees. And it shall be competent for the sheriff to make an order directing payment to be made.

68. Production of Documents may be Ordered.—The sheriff may order production of documents at any stage of the cause, and the sheriff may allow a party, at any time before judgment, to produce any document which he has failed to produce timeously, upon such conditions as to payment of expenses and allowing further proof as to the sheriff shall seem just.

69. Proof to be taken Continuously.—The proof shall be taken so far as possible continuously, but the sheriff may adjourn the diet from time to time.

70. Evidence may be Taken on Commission.—The evidence of any witness or haver resident beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or who although resident within the jurisdiction resides at some place remote from the seat of the court, or who is by reason of illness, age, or infirmity unable to attend the diet of proof, or a jury trial, may be taken by commission in like manner as evidence to lie in retentis.

71. Citation of Witnesses.—A copy of an interlocutor certified by the sheriff-clerk allowing a proof or fixing a diet for the trial of any action or for the examination of witnesses or havers, or fixing a date for a jury trial, shall be sufficient warrant for citation of witnesses or havers. If any witness or haver duly cited on an inducie of at least forty-eight hours, and after having been tendered his travelling expenses, if the same shall have been demanded, fail to attend a diet, either before the sheriff or before his commissioner, such witness or haver may be ordained by the sheriff to forfeit and pay a penalty not exceeding forty shillings, unless a reasonable excuse be offered and sustained, and the sheriff may grant decree for said penalty in favour of the party on whose behalf said witness or haver was cited.

72. Form of Citation.—Witnesses and havers may be cited as nearly as may be in Form F hereto annexed, and the execution of citation shall be as nearly as may be in the Form G, and an agent who cites a witness shall be personally liable for the fees of the witness.

73. Second Diligence against Witness Failing to Attend.—It shall further be competent to the sheriff to grant second diligence (which shall be effectual in any sheriffdom within Scotland without endorsation) for compelling the attendance of said witness or haver under pain of arrest and imprisonment, until caution be found as the sheriff may require for his due attendances, the expense whereof may in like manner be decerned for against the witness or haver.

74. Objections Taken in Course of Proof to be Noted.—When the sheriff, or a commissioner, repels or sustains an objection taken in the course of a proof, the objection stated, and any answer made to it, shall, if desired by the objector, be shortly noted on the notes of evidence to the sheriff's or commissioner's dictation, but the examination of the witness shall nevertheless proceed. The sheriff or commissioner may, if he consider the objections of sufficient importance, direct the evidence objected to to be taken on a separate paper; but it shall not be competent during the course of a proof to submit to review any judgment pronounced upon the competency of the evidence.

7 EDWARD 7, Chapter 51.

75. Appeal on Questions of Admissibility of Evidence.—On the proof being declared closed, or within seven days thereafter, if the sheriff-substitute has not in the interval pronounced judgment, it shall be competent by leave of the sheriff-substitute to appeal to the sheriff upon objections to the admissibility of evidence taken during the course of the proof, and the sheriff shall, with or without a hearing, dispose of such appeal with the least possible delay, and, if he think that evidence accepted should not have been allowed, he may delete the same from the notes of evidence, and if he think that evidence has been improperly rejected, he may appoint the same to be taken before the case is advised on its merits.

76. Appeal on Ground of Confidentiality.—If any person, whether a party to the cause or other person, plead before the sheriff-substitute confidentiality with reference to documentary or oral evidence, or, on pleas of alleged hypothec or otherwise, shall object to produce documents, the sheriff-substitute shall, on the notes of evidence, minute his decision on such pleas, and any party in the cause or the party pleading confidentially by leave of the sheriff-substitute may, in open court, take an appeal to the sheriff, who shall, with or without a hearing and with the least possible delay, dispose of such appeal.

77. Proof to proceed notwithstanding such Appeal.—Such incidental appeal shall not remove the cause from the sheriff-substitute, who may proceed with the cause as regards points not necessarily dependent upon the ruling so appealed against.

78. Parties to be heard at Close of Proof.—At the close of the proof, or at an adjourned diet, if for any reason the sheriff shall see fit to postpone the hearing, the sheriff shall hear the parties or their agents, and thereafter shall pronounce judgment with the least possible delay.

Amendment of Pleadings.

79. Record may be Amended by Sheriff.—Upon the motion of either party the sheriff may, at any stage of the cause, and upon such conditions as to expenses reservice or otherwise as he shall deem proper, allow a record to be altered or amended to the effect of determining the real question in controversy (including amendment of the instance and the initial writ and the adding of parties) notwithstanding that the conclusions of the action may thereby be enlarged or altered.

80. Effect of Amendment.—No such amendment shall have the effect of validating diligence used prior thereto on the dependence of the action so as to prejudice the rights of creditors of the defender interested in defeating such diligence, but such amendment shall be operative to the effect of obviating objections to such diligence when stated by the defender himself, or by any person representing him by a title, or in right of a debt contracted by him subsequent to the execution of such diligence.

Abandonment.

81. Abandonment of Action.—A pursuer may at any stage of an action before an interlocutor granting absolvitor or dismissing the action has been pronounced offer to abandon his action by lodging a minute to that effect, signed by himself or his agent, in which case, upon payment to defender of his expenses, the sheriff may dismiss the action, and pursuer may bring a new action if otherwise competent. If the pursuer fails, within fourteen days of the date of taxation, to pay the defender's expenses, the defender shall be entitled to decree of absolvitor, with expenses.

Judgment.

82. Sheriff to state Reasons for Judgment.—To all interlocutors, except those of a formal nature, the sheriff shall append a note setting forth the grounds upon which he has proceeded, and in his final judgment on the merits he shall set forth his findings in fact and in law separately.

83. Date of Judgment to be Date of Entry in Court Books.—The sheriff may pronounce or sign any judgment or interlocutor when furth of his sheriffdom, but the date of every interlocutor shall be deemed to be the date upon which it is entered in the books of the court.

84. Clerical Error in Judgment may be Corrected.—At any time before extract, or before the transmission of a process in which an appeal has been taken the sheriff may correct any clerical or incidental error in his judgment.

Extract.

85. Time of Extract.—Extract of any decree, interlocutor, or order of the sheriff (other than a decree in absence or a decree for expenses), if the same shall not have been sooner appealed against, may be issued in a summary cause after the lapse of seven days; and in any other cause, after the lapse of fourteen days from its date, or at such earlier date as the sheriff shall allow extract.

Appeal.

86. Appeal from the Sheriff-Substitute.—A final judgment of the sheriff-substitute may if appeal be competent and unless otherwise provided be appealed to the sheriff or to the Court of Session at any time within three months of its date (but not later), if the same shall not sooner have been extracted or implemented. Any other appealable interlocutor of the sheriff-substitute may be appealed within fourteen days (but not later), if not sooner extracted.

87. Form of Appeal.—An appeal shall be taken by the appellant or his agent dating and signing a note on the interlocutor sheet in the following terms :—

The pursuer [or defender or other party] appeals [to the sheriff] or [to the Division of the Court of Session].

Or if the interlocutor sheet is not in the hands of the sheriff-clerk (which fact shall be certified by him), the note of appeal may be written upon a separate paper, and lodged along with the sheriff-clerk's said certificate.

88. On Appeal Process to go to Sheriff or Clerk of Session.—On an appeal being taken, the sheriff-clerk shall within two days transmit the process to the sheriff or to the principal clerk of session as the case may be, and also send written notice of the appeal to the other parties or their agents, but failure to give such notice shall not invalidate the appeal.

89. Reclaiming Note or Oral Hearing may be Ordered.—The sheriff may order a reclaiming note and answers, or may hear parties orally.

90. But may be Dispensed with.—The sheriff may, on the motion of both parties and if he see fit, dispose of the appeal without ordering either a reclaiming note and answers or an oral hearing.

91. Sheriff to Regulate Interim Possession, etc., Pending Appeal.—Notwithstanding an appeal, the sheriff shall have power to regulate all matters relating to interim possession, to make any order for the preservation of any property to which the action relates or for its sale if perishable, or for the preservation of evidence, or to make in his discretion any interim order which a due regard to the interests of the parties may require. Such orders shall not be subject to review except by the Appellate Court at the hearing of the appeal.

92. Appeal to Court of Session.—Within three months from its date (but not later), a final judgment of the sheriff, if not sooner extracted or implemented may, if appeal be competent, be appealed to the Court of Session. Any other appealable judgment of the sheriff may, if not sooner extracted or implemented, be appealed within fourteen days (but not later).

93. Form of Appeal.—The party desiring so to appeal, or his agent, shall do so by writing on the interlocutor sheet (or on a separate paper, in like manner as in the case of an appeal from the sheriff substitute) a note in the following terms :—

The pursuer [or defender or other party] appeals to the Division of the Court of Session.

94. Sheriff-Clerk to Transmit Process to Edinburgh.—On receiving such note of appeal the sheriff-clerk shall within two days transmit the process to the principal clerk of session at Edinburgh, and shall also send written notice of the appeal to the other parties or their agents, but failure to give such notice shall not invalidate the appeal.

95. Form of Appeal to Court of Session in Actions Advocated under this Act.—If any action is desired to be removed to the Court of Session in terms of sections five and thirty of this Act, the party so desiring its removal shall write a minute to that effect upon the interlocutor sheet, whereupon the sheriff-clerk shall give intimation to the other parties or their agents and shall transmit the process to the keeper of the roll of the Court of Session, who shall, under the direction of the Lord President, allocate the cause to a Division and a Lord Ordinary, and thereafter the cause shall proceed in all respects as if it had originally been raised in the Court of Session.

96. Abandonment of Appeal.—After an appeal has been noted, the appellant shall not be entitled to abandon it unless of consent of all parties, or by leave of the Appellate Court.

97. In sections 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, and 92 "sheriff" does not include sheriff-substitute.

Expenses.

98. Decree for Expenses to Include Dues of Extract.—Every decree for expenses shall be deemed to include a decree for the expense of extracting the same, and extract of such decree for expenses may be issued after the lapse of seven days unless otherwise directed by the sheriff.

99. Decree for Expenses may be Extracted in Agent's Name.—Expenses allowed in any action, whether in absence or in foro, shall, unless modified at a fixed amount, be taxed before decree is granted for them, and the sheriff may allow a decree for expenses to go out and be extracted in name of the agent who conducted the cause.

7 EDWARD 7, Chapter 51.

100. Objection to Auditor's Report.—Within two days after the lodging of the auditor's report on taxation it shall be competent to lodge a note of objections to an auditor's report, and the sheriff shall dispose of such objections in a summary manner, with or without answers.

Wakening.

101. Wakening Action.—If no interlocutor shall have been pronounced in a cause for a year and a day it shall be held to have fallen asleep.

102. To be by Minute.—Where the whole of the parties or their agents subscribe a minute on the interlocutor sheet consenting to the cause being wakened the sheriff may pronounce an interlocutor wakening the cause, and thereafter proceed with it.

103. Publication of Application for Wakening.—Where all parties do not so consent, the party desiring to have the cause wakened may lodge a minute to that effect, which the sheriff may order to be intimated to the other parties or their agents, and to be published in such manner as the sheriff shall direct, and the agent for the party applying for wakening shall lodge a certificate that the intimation and publication ordered have been made. If satisfied, the sheriff may thereafter pronounce an interlocutor wakening the cause, and proceed with it.

Sequestration for Rent.

104. In Sequestration for Rent.—In actions for sequestration, and sale, for recovery, or in security of rent, whether brought after the term of payment or currente termino, payment of rent may be concluded for, and decree for payment of such rent or part thereof, when the same has become due and payable, may be pronounced and be extracted in common form.

105. Warrant may be Granted to Inventory and Secure.—In the first deliverance upon a writ for sequestration for rent the sheriff may sequestrate the effects of a tenant, and grant warrant to inventory and secure the same and all warrants to sequestrate, inventory, sell, eject, or re-let shall be deemed to include authority, if need be, to open shut and lockfast places for the purpose of carrying such warrants into execution.

106. Sequestrated Effects may be Sold.—The sheriff may order the sequestrated effects to be sold at the sight of an officer of court or other person named.

107. Sale to be Reported within Fourteen Days.—When a sale follows, it shall be reported within fourteen days and pursuer shall lodge the roup rolls or certified copies thereof and a state of debt

108. Sheriff may Decree for Balance due after Sale.—In the interlocutor approving the report of sale, or by separate interlocutor, the sheriff may give decree against the defender for any balance remaining due.

109. Sheriff may appoint Caretaker or Order Caution.—The sheriff may at any stage appoint a fit person to take charge of the sequestrated effects, or may require the tenant to find caution that they shall be made forthcoming.

Removings.

110. Action of Removing where Fixed Term of Removal.—An action of removing may be raised at any time, provided the tenant has bound himself to remove by writing, dated and signed within twelve months of the term of removal, or, where there is more than one ish, of the ish first in date to remove. When the tenant has not so bound himself, an action of removing may be raised at any time provided that—

(a) In the case of a lease of lands exceeding two acres in extent for three years and upwards, an interval of not less than one year nor more than two years shall elapse between the date of notice of removal and the term of removal first in date;

(b) In the case of leases of lands exceeding two acres in extent, whether such leases be written or verbal held from year to year or under tacit relocation, or for any other period less than three years, an interval of not less than six months shall elapse between the date of notice of removal and the term of removal first in date; and

(c) In the case of houses let with or without land attached not exceeding two acres in extent, as also of land not exceeding two acres in extent without houses, as also of mills, fishings, shootings, and all other heritable subjects excepting land exceeding two acres in extent, and let for a year or more, forty days at least shall elapse between the date of notice of removal and the term of removal first in date.

Provided that nothing herein contained shall affect section 27 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883: Provided also that in any defended action of removing, the sheriff may order the defender to find caution for violent profits: Provided also that in actions of declarator of irritancy and removing by a superior against a vassal, the pursuer shall call as parties the last entered vassal and such heritable creditors and holders of postponed ground burdens as are disclosed by a search for twenty years prior to the raising of the action, and the expense of the search shall form part of pursuer's expenses of process.

SHERIFF COURTS (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1907.

111. Form of Notice of Removal.—Notices under sections 34, 35, and 36 of this Act shall be as nearly as may be in the Form H annexed hereto, and a letter of removal may be in the terms of Form I.

112. Form of Notice under Section 37.—Notices under section 37 of this Act shall be as nearly as may be in the Form J hereto annexed, and such form may be used, mutatis mutandis, also for notices to the proprietor by or on behalf of the tenant.

113. Removal Notices.—Removal notices under sections 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38 of the Act may be given by a messenger-at-arms or sheriff officer, or by registered letter signed by the person entitled to give such notice, or by the law agent or factor of such person, posted at any post office within the United Kingdom in time to admit of its being delivered at the address thereon on or prior to the last date upon which by law such notice must be given, addressed to the person entitled to receive such notice, and bearing the particular address of such person at the time if the same be known, or, if the same be not known, then to the last known address of such person.

114. Evidence of Notice to Remove.—A certificate of notice under rule 111, dated and endorsed upon the lease or extract, or upon the letter of removal, and signed by the sheriff officer, messenger-at-arms, or by the person giving the notice, or his law agent, or factor, or an acknowledgment of notice endorsed on the lease or extract or letter of removal by the party in possession or his agent, shall be sufficient evidence that notice has been given. Where there is no lease, a certificate endorsed upon a copy of the notice or letter, certified to be correct, by the person, sheriff officer, messenger-at-arms, law agent, or factor sending the same, which certificate shall be signed by such party sending the notice or letter, shall also be sufficient evidence that notice has been given. A certificate of notice under rule 112, dated and endorsed upon a copy of the notice or letter signed by the party sending the notice, shall be sufficient evidence that such notice has been given.

Summary Removings.

115. Form of Action for Summary Removing.—The action for summary removing as authorised by section 38 of this Act may be at the instance of a proprietor or his factor, or any other person by law authorised to pursue a process of removing, and be in the Form K hereto annexed.

116. Form of Warrant.—The warrant to be granted thereon may be in the Form B hereto annexed upon two days' inducíæ and may be signed by the sheriff-clerk.

117. Decree in Absence may be Recalled within Three Days.—If the defender fail to appear, the sheriff may dispose of the cause in his absence, but, if within three days the defender shall satisfy the sheriff that there was reasonable excuse for his non-appearance, the sheriff may re-hear the cause, and, if decree has been granted and not implemented, may recall the decree upon such conditions as to expenses and otherwise as the sheriff shall deem reasonable. Where decree is pronounced in absence, the sheriff may give such directions as he may deem proper for the preservation of the defender's goods and effects.

118. Service Copy Warrant Sufficient to Cite Witnesses.—The warrant upon the petition or complaint of the defender's service copy thereof shall be sufficient warrant for the citation of witnesses.

119. Small Debts Procedure Applies to Summary Removing.—Such causes shall be conducted and disposed of in the summary manner in which proceedings are conducted under the Small Debt Acts and shall not be subject to review.

120. Form of Decree.—When decree and warrant of ejection is granted it shall be in the Form L hereto annexed.

121. Sheriff may Order Caution.—The sheriff may order written answers or adjourn the hearing of such causes, but where defences cannot be instantly verified, the sheriff shall ordain the defender to find caution for violent profits, unless the sheriff shall dispense with caution, which he may do if he see fit.

122. When Caution Found Procedure as Ordinary Action.—Where a defender has given in answers, and caution for violent profits has been found or has been dispensed with, such causes shall, as nearly as may be thereafter, be conducted according to the procedure in ordinary actions of removing, and shall be subject to review in common form.

Summary Suspension.

123. Summary Application for Suspension of Charge may be Brought in Court of Defender's Domicile.—Where a charge has been given on a decree of court granted by the sheriff or a decree of registration proceeding upon a bond, bill, contract, or other form of obligation registered in any sheriff court books, or in the books of council and session, or any others competent, or on letters of horning following on such decree, for payment of any sum of money not exceeding fifty pounds, exclusive of interest and expenses, the person so charged may apply in the sheriff court of his domicile for suspension on caution of such charge and diligence.

124. Diligence may be Sisted on Caution.—On sufficient caution being found in the hands of the sheriff-clerk for the sum charged for interest and expenses, and a sum to be fixed by the sheriff in respect of expenses to be incurred in the suspension process, the sheriff may sist diligence, order intimation and answers, and proceed to dispose of the cause in a summary manner.

125. Judgment of Sheriff Final on Competency.—If objections be taken to the competency or regularity of suspension proceedings, the judgment of the sheriff-substitute, on such objections, may be appealed to the sheriff, but his judgment thereon shall be final.

Arrestment.

126. When Arrestment Schedule not served Personally Copy to be sent by Post.—If a schedule of arrestment has not been personally served upon an arrestee, it shall be necessary, to make the arrestment effectual, that a copy of the schedule be also sent by postal registered letter to the last known place of abode of the arrestee, or if such place of abode is unknown, or if the arrestee is a firm or corporation, to the arrestee's principal place of business if known, or, if not known, to any known place of business of the arrestee, and the officer shall in his execution certify that this has been done, and specify the said address.

127. Arrestment to be Reported.—An arrestment used on the dependence shall fall, unless the action shall have been served within seven days of the date of execution of arrestment, and tabled within fourteen days after service, and, when an arrestment has been executed, the party using it or his agent shall forthwith report the execution to the sheriff-clerk.

Furthcoming and Multiplepoinding.

128. Forum of Action of Multiplepoinding.—An action of furthcoming or multiplepoinding may be raised in the sheriffdom where the fund or subject in medio is situated, or in that to whose jurisdiction the arrestee or the holder of the fund is subject although the common debtor may not reside within either sheriffdom.

129. Real Raiser to be Set Forth.—The party raising an action of multiplepoinding shall set forth in the initial writ who is the real raiser. The sheriff may, in an action of multiplepoinding, allow the real raiser his expenses preferably out of the fund in medio; and, in an action of furthcoming, the expenses of bringing the action shall be deemed to be part of the arrestor's claim, which may be made good out of the arrested fund or subject.

130. Claims to be Ordered.—Where, in an action of multiplepoinding, no defences are stated, and where defences are stated and repelled, the sheriff shall order claims and, if necessary, answers within a short space.

131. Several Claimants may state One Paper.—Several claimants may state the facts on which they base their claims on the same paper, but, where necessary, they shall append separate claims and separate pleas in law.

132. When Competing Claims Procedure as in Ordinary Action.—Where there are defences in an action of furthcoming or competing claims in a multiplepoinding process the procedure shall be as near as may be that in ordinary actions where defences have been lodged.

Jury Trial.

133. Jury.—The jury shall consist of two special and five common jurors, who shall be chosen from a panel of five special and ten common jurors to be cited for the diet.

134. Citation of Jury.—The jury shall be cited by the sheriff-clerk from the sheriff court jury book in the manner prescribed by law or in use to be followed for the citation of jurors in Scotland; and all statutory or other regulations and customs relative to the citation, non-attendance, selection and swearing of jurors shall (subject to rule 135) apply to jury trial in the sheriff court.

135. Challenge of Jurors.—Each party in the cause shall have right to challenge one special and one common juror, but not more; and in this matter, where there are more pursuers or defenders than one, they shall act collectively and not individually.

136. Jury to have Copy Issue.—Each juror empanelled shall, at the commencement of the trial, be supplied by the pursuer with a copy of the questions of fact proponed as set forth in the sheriff's interlocutor.

137. Practice in Proofs to Apply.—The law and practice relating to the taking of evidence in proofs before the sheriffs shall apply to jury trials. Unless all the parties appearing put in a minute (which may be signed by their agents) dispensing with a record of the proceedings, the same shall be taken by an official shorthand writer of the court, but the notes need not be extended unless, in the case of an appeal, their production shall be ordered by the appellate court, in which event it shall be the duty of the appellant to procure the extended notes, certified by the shorthand writer, and to lodge the same with the principal clerk of session.

SHERIFF COURTS (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1907.

138. Evidence on Commission.—When evidence has been taken to lie in retentis, if the sheriff is satisfied that the deponing witness is dead, or that he cannot attend at the trial owing to absence or infirmity or other sufficient cause, it shall be competent for the sheriff, on the motion of any party in the cause (irrespective of which party moved for the commission to take such evidence) to direct that the report of the commission be read to the jury, and when so read such report shall form part of the evidence in the cause; but depositions shall not be read or referred to if the deponing witness attends at the trial.

139. Exceptions.—Exceptions taken in the course of the trial to rulings of the sheriff in regard to admission or rejection of evidence, or in regard to points of law laid down in the course of the trial or in the sheriff's charge to the jury, shall, if required by the party taking the exception, be recorded to the sheriff's dictation upon the official shorthand notes before the jury proceed to consider their verdict.

140. Addressing Jury.—No person shall be entitled to address the jury until the leading of evidence has been concluded; but thereafter the parties, personally or by counsel or law agent, may address the jury. One speech only on behalf of each interest represented shall be made.

141. Charge to Jury.—If the sheriff deem it necessary to charge the jury, he shall do so immediately after, or as soon as practicable after, the conclusion of the speeches, or, if none be made, after the conclusion of the evidence.

142. Productions.—Documents or productions intended to be put in evidence or referred to at the trial shall be lodged with the clerk of court four days before the date fixed for the trial, but the sheriff may allow productions to be exhibited and produced at the trial if he is satisfied that they could not reasonably have been lodged earlier and that reasonable notice had been given to the other parties of intention to produce at the trial.

143. Verdict by Majority.—The jury may return a verdict by a majority of its number at any time not less than one hour after the jury has been enclosed.

144. Form of Verdict.—The verdict of the jury shall be returned in the form of specific answers to the questions proponed by the sheriff, with the addition of a statement of the amount at which they assess the damages in the event of damages being awarded.

145. Verdict to be Recorded.—The verdict returned by the jury shall be recorded upon the interlocutor sheets, and signed by the clerk of the court, and this having been done, the jury shall be discharged.

146. And Followed by Interlocutor.—Any party in the cause may, so soon as the verdict has been so recorded or within fourteen days thereafter, move the sheriff to apply the verdict, and upon this motion the sheriff may hear parties and may make avizandum. As soon as practicable the sheriff shall issue an interlocutor applying the verdict and grant decree accordingly. In this interlocutor the sheriff shall also dispose of the question of expenses.

147. Interlocutor Final if no Shorthand Notes.—Where no shorthand notes of the proceedings have been taken, the interlocutor applying the verdict shall not be subject to review.

148. Grounds of Appeal to Court of Session.—If shorthand notes have been taken, it shall be competent for any party in the cause within fourteen days after the date of the final interlocutor of the sheriff applying the verdict (but not later) to appeal to a Division of the Court of Session by lodging with the sheriff-clerk a note of appeal in the Form M annexed hereto.

149. Transmission of Process.—The sheriff-clerk shall, within three days of his receiving the note of appeal, notify the other parties in the cause, and transmit the process to the principal clerk of session at Edinburgh.

150. New Trial.—If the court shall order a new trial, the principal clerk of session shall re-transmit the process to the sheriff-clerk, and the sheriff shall as soon as practicable fix a date of new trial, which shall proceed as herein directed as regards the original trial.

Charge.

151. Charge Against a Corporation.—A company, corporation, association or firm, or a board corporate or incorporate, may be competently charged under their nominate or descriptive name at their principal place of business (which term shall include the office or place of business of the clerk or secretary of any board or corporation), or where their principal place of business is furth of Scotland, at any place of business in Scotland.

The Poor's Roll.

152. Agents to Meet to Nominate Agents for Poor.—The sheriff shall annually make an order appointing the agents enrolled in his court (or, where the sheriffdom is divided into districts having separate local courts, the agents enrolled in the district courts) to meet to nominate a specified number of agents for the poor.

153. Notice of Meeting on Court-house Walls.—Notice of such order shall be given by a copy thereof being affixed on the walls of the court-houses and sheriff-clerk's offices in the sheriffdom.

154. Nomination to be Reported to Sheriff.—At said meeting the agents present shall, by a majority of votes, nominate the required number of agents, and cause the nominations to be reported to the sheriff.

155. Sheriff may Confirm or Refuse.—The sheriff shall have power to confirm the nominations, in whole or in part, or to decline to do so.

156. Notice to Agents.—Six days before the list is submitted to the sheriff, the sheriff-clerk shall notify each agent who has been nominated, and such agent may, before the nominations are confirmed, represent to the sheriff any reason why his nomination should not be confirmed.

157. If Agents Fail to do so Sheriffs may Nominate.—In the event of the agents failing to nominate as above provided for, or the sheriff not confirming the nomination, the sheriff may himself make the requisite nomination, or may appoint another meeting to be held.

158. Agents to Act for One Year.—The agents nominated shall act as agents for the poor in the sheriffdom, or the district in which they are appointed, for one year, but they shall be eligible for re-nomination.

159. Agents to Act as Directed by Sheriff.—The agents so nominated shall as they themselves arrange, or as the sheriff shall direct, act as procurators for the poor in all causes, civil and criminal, including attendance at the circuit court.

160. Agents to Assist each Other.—The agents for the poor, in their respective districts, shall assist each other by taking precognitions, or proofs on commission, or otherwise as may be requisite and reasonable.

161. In sections 152 to 157 "sheriff" does not include sheriff-substitute.

162. Applicant to Produce Certificate of Poverty.—Along with his application for the benefit of the poor's roll, the applicant shall produce a certificate signed by the inspector or an assistant inspector of poor of the parish or district where the applicant resides, bearing that the applicant is unable, through poverty, to pay for the conduct of legal proceedings.

163. Application to be Remitted to Procurators for Poor.—The sheriff shall remit the application to the procurators for the poor, who shall notify the parties, and after inquiry shall make a report to the sheriff.

164. If they Report Applicant Entitled, Sheriff to Appoint an Agent to Conduct Cause.—If they report that the applicant has a probable cause of action and is entitled to the benefit of the poor's roll, the sheriff shall appoint one of the agents to take charge of the applicant's case.

165. Agent to Conclude Cause.—Such agent shall conduct the cause to its final issue, notwithstanding that during its progress he may have ceased to be an agent for the poor.

166. Agent to have no Claim for Fees unless Recovered from Other Party.—Unless expenses shall be awarded against and recovered from the opposite party, the agent shall have no claim for fees; but the litigant shall be liable to him for actual outlays incurred with the litigant's sanction.

167. Agent not Liable for Fees.—The agent shall not be liable for witnesses' fees, shorthand writers' fees, or court dues unless they are recovered by the agent personally.

168. Agent not Liable for Court Dues.—Neither the agent nor the litigant shall be liable for dues of court or officers' fees, unless these are awarded against and recovered from the opposite party, in which case the litigant (or the agent, if he personally recovers the same) shall be liable.

169. Sheriff may Remove Litigant from Poor's Roll.—It shall be in the power of the sheriff at any time to deprive any litigant of the benefit of the poor's roll.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1907.

CHAPTER LII.

An Act to amend section seventy-eight of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, with respect to the deduction of the space occupied by propelling power in ascertaining the tonnage of a ship. [28*th August* 1907.]

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Restriction on Deduction for Space Occupied by Propelling Power.—The deduction under section seventy-eight of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. c. 60) (in this Act referred to as "the principal Act"), for the space occupied by the propelling power of a ship shall not in any case exceed fifty-five per cent. of that portion of the tonnage of the ship which remains after deducting from the gross tonnage any deductions allowed under section seventy-nine of the principal Act: Provided that—

(a) This section shall not apply to steam ships constructed for the purpose of towing vessels so long as they are exclusively employed as tugs, but if and when employed for the carriage of passengers, cargoes, or stores, or using graving docks or dry docks or places provided for the repairing of vessels the register tonnage on which dues based on register tonnage may be levied by any harbour or dock authority shall be ascertained in manner provided by the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 to 1906, as amended by this Act; and

(b) This section shall not come into operation until the first day of January nineteen hundred and fourteen in the case of the following ships (in this Act referred to as existing ships), namely, ships constructed, or the construction of which has been commenced, before the first day of May nineteen hundred and seven, and ships a contract for the construction of which has been made before the first day of May nineteen hundred and seven, though the construction has not actually commenced before that date.

2. Saving for Authorities having Power to Charge Otherwise than on Register Tonnage.—Nothing in this Act shall affect any power which any dock or harbour authority have under any Act or Order confirmed by Parliament or having the effect of an Act of Parliament to charge tonnage rates, dues, or charges otherwise than on registered or register tonnage.

3. Provisions as to Ships already Registered.—(1) Where, in ascertaining the tonnage of an existing ship, a deduction has been made for the space occupied by the propelling power of the ship greater than the maximum deduction allowed under this Act, the tonnage of the ship shall, before the date on which this Act comes into operation as respects that ship, be recalculated on the basis of allowing the maximum deduction under this Act instead of that previously allowed, and the necessary alteration of the particulars and certificate of the registry of the ship shall be made and shall take effect on that date.

(2) The registrar of every port of registry shall make any alteration in the particulars of the registry of any ship registered at that port, which is required for the purposes of this section, and shall send notice of the alteration so made to the managing owner of the ship.

(3) The managing owner of the ship, on the receipt of any such notice of alteration, shall forthwith transmit the notice to the master of the ship, and the master of the ship on receipt of the notice shall produce it to the registrar of the port at which the ship is when the notice is received, if that port is a port having a registrar, and if not to the registrar of the first port having a registrar at which the ship arrives after the notice is received, and the registrar shall alter the certificate of registry of the ship in accordance with the notice.

(4) If the managing owner or master of a ship fails to comply with the provisions of this section, the managing owner or master, as the case may be, shall be liable on summary conviction, in respect of each offence, to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds.

(5) The expression "managing owner" in this section includes any person registered under section fifty-nine of the principal Act in cases where there is no managing owner.

4. Short Title, Construction, and Commencement.—This Act may be cited as the Merchant Shipping Act, 1907, and shall be construed as one with the principal Act; and the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 to 1906, and this Act may be cited together as the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 to 1907.

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

ACTS OF SEDERUNT.

ACT OF SEDERUNT TO REGULATE PROCEDURE IN THE COURT OF SESSION.

[20*th March* 1907.]

WHEREAS it is provided by Section 106 of the Act of Parliament, 31 and 32 Vict., cap. 100 (entitled "An Act to Amend the Procedure in the Court of Session and the judicial arrangements in the Superior Courts of Scotland, and to make certain changes in the other Courts thereof") viz. :—"The Court of Session may from time to time make such regulations by Act of Sederunt as shall be necessary for carrying into effect the purposes of this Act; and for regulating the times and forms of summonses and writs and modes of procedure, and of pleadings; and generally the practice of the said Court in respect of the matters to which this Act relates; and for regulating the fees of the agents practising before the said Court; and, so far as may be found expedient, for altering the course of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed in respect to the matters to which this Act relates, or any of them; and may also repeal or alter the provisions of any Act of Sederunt relating to any of the matters hereinbefore specified, as may be inconsistent with such new regulations; and for that purpose the said Court may meet during vacation as well as during session: Provided that every such Act of Sederunt shall, within one month after the date thereof, be transmitted by the Lord President of the Court of Session to one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State in order that it may be laid before both Houses of Parliament; and if either of the Houses of Parliament shall, by any resolution passed within thirty-six days after such Act of Sederunt has been laid before such House of Parliament, resolve that the whole or any part of such Act of Sederunt ought not to continue in force, in such case the whole or such part thereof as shall be so included in such resolution shall from and after such resolution cease to be binding." Therefore the Lords of Council and Session, in pursuance of the powers vested in them, do hereby enact and declare as follows :—

ADDITIONAL DIVISION OF INNER HOUSE.

1. Section 8 of the principal Act is hereby repealed from and after the words "or of any Act of Sederunt" to the end of the said section, and in place thereof it is hereby enacted that it shall be competent for the Court from time to time, by Act of Sederunt, to appoint any three judges to meet as a Court at such times as shall be specified in the Act of Sederunt, for the purpose of hearing and disposing of causes standing on the Rolls of the First and Second Divisions of the Inner House, and to appoint one or more of the Depute-Clerks of Session to act as clerk or clerks of said Court; and further, by Act of Sederunt, to make all necessary regulations as to the causes which shall from time to time be so heard and disposed of; and the senior Judge present shall preside, and shall sign the judgment of the said Court; and such judgment shall have the same effect in all respects as a judgment of one of the Divisions of the Inner House of the Court.

AMENDMENT OF RECORD.

2. The first proviso in Section 29 of the above-recited Act is hereby repealed; and the following provisions shall have effect in addition to the provision as to amendment of records in defended actions contained in said Section 29; but always subject to the provision at the end of said section as to the effect of amendments invalidating diligence:—

(a) Where an action or other proceeding has been commenced in the name of the wrong person as Pursuer, or where it has been commenced without a person whose conjunction may be deemed necessary to make a good instance, or where it is doubtful whether it has been commenced in the name of the right person, the Court or Lord Ordinary, if satisfied that it has been so commenced through bona-fide mistake, and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute so to do, may allow any other person to be sisted as pursuer in substitution for, or in addition to, the original party, on such terms as to expenses as to the Court or Lord Ordinary shall seem proper.

(b) Where a party sues or is sued in a representative character, but it appears that he ought to have sued or been sued in his own right, the Court or Lord Ordinary may, at the instance of either party, on such terms as to expenses as to the Cour or Lord Ordinary shall seem proper, amend the record accordingly; and thereupon the action shall proceed in all respects as if the proper description of the party had been given in the Summons or other Writ.

(c) Where a party sues or is sued in his own right, but it appears that he ought to have sued or been sued in a representative character, the Court or Lord Ordinary may, at the instance of either party, on such terms as to expenses as to the Court or Lord Ordinary shall seem proper, amend the record accordingly; and thereupon the action shall proceed in all respects as if the proper description of the party had been given in the Summons or other Writ.

(d) Where the name or description of a pursuer or defender in the Summons or other Writ is insufficient or incorrect, it may be amended at the instance of either party, by order of the Court or Lord Ordinary, on such terms as to expenses as to the Court or Lord Ordinary shall seem proper; and thereupon the action shall proceed in all respects as if the name or description had been originally such as it appears after the amendment has been made; but if no objection is taken to the name or description the action may proceed, and in the judgment and all subsequent proceedings founded thereon the party may be named and described in the same manner as in the Summons or other Writ.

(e) Where in the course of an action it appears that all the parties who have an interest have not been called, it shall not be necessary for the Pursuer to bring a supplementary or additional action as heretofore, but it shall be competent for the Court or Lord Ordinary to allow the record to be amended by inserting in the Summons or other Writ the name of such additional Defender, and to have the record as amended served on him, along with a notice in the form contained in the Appendix hereto specifying the day upon which he must lodge defences or answers as the case may be; and thereafter the action shall proceed as if such added Defender had originally been made a party to the cause; and in the event of no defences or answers being lodged by such added Defender, after being duly served as aforesaid, the Pursuer shall be entitled to take decree against him in the undefended roll or otherwise according to the present practice. In the event of defences being lodged, the Pursuer shall print the record along with such defences; and the action shall thereafter proceed in ordinary form: Provided always that the Pursuer shall be liable for any expenses occasioned to the original Defender by his failure to call such added Defender in the first instance, unless cause be shown to the contrary; and the Court or Lord Ordinary shall make it a condition of such amendment being allowed that said expenses shall first be paid unless satisfied that the Pursuer had sufficient reason for not calling the said additional Defender in the first instance.

(f) It shall be competent for the Pursuer, at any time before final judgment, to amend the conclusions of the Summons or other Writ to the effect of increasing the sum for which he sues, or subjecting any other additional funds or property to the adjudication of the Court, on such terms as to expenses as to the Court or Lord Ordinary shall seem proper; and such amendment shall be allowed in all cases where, according to the existing practice, it would have been competent to raise a supplementary action; but in all other cases shall only be allowed in the discretion of the Court or Lord Ordinary.

(g) It shall be competent for the Court or Lord Ordinary to allow any amendment of the Summons or other Writ which may be necessary for the purpose of determining, in the existing action or proceeding, the real question in controversy between the parties, notwithstanding that, in consequence of such amendment, a larger or different remedy than that originally concluded for is thereby sought; but such amendment shall only be allowed on such terms as to expenses as to the Court or Lord Ordinary shall seem proper.

Procedure in Actions of Reduction.

3. The Summons in an action of reduction may be in the form, or as nearly as may be in the form, contained in the Schedule hereunto annexed. In the event of the form now in use being employed, it shall not be competent for the Agent to charge any higher fees for the preparation of said Summons or in connection with the procedure in the action than if the form now sanctioned had originally been used.

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

4. It shall not be competent for a defender who objects on any ground to satisfy the production to lodge preliminary defences; but if he intends to defend the action, he shall put in defences stating his preliminary objections as well as his defences on the merits of the reduction.

5. Where the Defender does not state any objection against satisfying the production, he shall, along with his defences, produce the Writs or Documents sought to be reduced so far as the same are in his possession or under his control.

6. Where in any action a deed or writing is founded on by either party, all objections thereto may be stated and maintained by way of exception without the necessity of bringing a reduction thereof, unless the Court or Lord Ordinary shall consider that the matter would be more conveniently tried in a separate action of reduction.

Actions of Proving the Tenor.

7. Where an action of proving the tenor has been brought before one of the Judges of the Outer House, he shall not make great avizandum to the Inner House; but defences in said action shall be lodged, and a Record made up, in the same manner as in the case of ordinary contested actions; and the cause shall be disposed of by the Lord Ordinary in the Precedure Roll or after proof, and subject to the like review as if the action were an ordinary petitory action.

Where in an action of proving the tenor no appearance has been entered and no defences lodged, the Lord Ordinary shall fix a diet of proof, and shall dispose of the same with the same powers and in the like manner as are exercised by the Inner House according to the present practice.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

8. Where the Pursuer in any action of damages in the Court of Session, not being an action for defamation or for libel, or an action which is competent only in the Court of Session, recovers by the verdict of a jury £5 or any sum above £5 but less than £50, he shall not be entitled to charge more than one-half of the taxed amount of his expenses, unless the Judge before whom the verdict is obtained shall certify that he shall be entitled to recover any larger proportion of his expenses, not exceeding two third parts thereof.

9. Where a commission is granted by the Court or a Lord Ordinary for the examination of a witness, the Court or Lord Ordinary may, on the motion of either party to the cause, dispense with interrogatories in all cases where the commission falls to be executed within the United Kingdom, and also where the commission is to be executed abroad, on being satisfied that such a course is most expedient in the interests of the parties to the cause, and most conducive to the administration of justice.

10. It shall be competent for the Judge who sits at each Vacation Court to deal at such Courts with every motion which could competently be made in causes depending in the Outer House during Session. But this shall not be construed as making it competent to deal with the adjustment of Records or the adjustment of Issues; and the Judge shall not be bound to dispose of such motions, if in his opinion they can conveniently be postponed until the meeting of the Court.

11. It shall also be competent for the said Judge to entertain and dispose of all incidental motions in Petitions presented to the Inner House, provided that such motions do not, in the case of contentious petitions, involve the merits of the cause.

12. Section 15 of the principal Act is hereby amended to the effect that said section shall apply to lost interlocutor sheets as well as to the writs or pleadings therein enumerated.

Bill Chamber.

13. It shall be competent for the Lord Ordinary on the Bills to award expenses and to decide all questions relating thereto in processes of Suspension, Interdict, Suspension and Interdict, or Suspension and Liberation depending in the Bill Chamber, to the same effect as if such actions had been transmitted to the Court of Session.

14. A warrant to dismantle a ship shall not require the signature of a Lord Ordinary on the Bills; but such warrant, if signed by the Clerk of the Bill Chamber, or the Assistant Clerk of the Bills in his absence, shall have the same force and authority as if signed by the Lord Ordinary on the Bills according to the existing practice.

15. Where a Note of Suspension, Interdict, Suspension and Interdict, or Suspension and Liberation has been lodged in the Bill Chamber, and no appearance has been entered, and no Answers have been lodged, and the Note has been passed with or without a sist, or with or without interim interdict or liberation, it shall not be necessary to mark the cause to a Division or Outer House Judge, or to transmit the process to an Outer House Clerk of the Outer House Judge; but the Lord Ordinary on the Bills shall have power to pronounce a final judgment in whole or in part granting the prayer of the Note, suspending the charge, sisting execution, or declaring the interdict to be perpetual, or the interim liberation to be final; and the Lord Ordinary shall have power to award expenses against the Respondent and to decern for the taxed amount thereof in the same manner as if the case had been transmitted to an Outer House Judge according to the present practice, and such interlocutor and process may be transmitted to the office of the Extractor of the Court of Session and there dealt with in the same way as if it were an interlocutor and process in the Court of Session.

16. After a cause which has been initiated in the Bill Chamber has been transmitted to one of the Judges of the Outer House, it shall be competent for the Lord Ordinary before whom the cause may be depending to pronounce an order granting or recalling interim interdict or for interim regulation of the matters in dispute, at any stage of the cause, in the same manner and to the same effect and subject to the like review as is now competent to the Lord Ordinary on the Bills; and such order may also be pronounced by any of the Divisions of the Court before whom the cause may for the time being depend at any stage thereof.

17. This Act shall be read along with and construed as part of the Act 31 & 32 Vict., cap. 100, but it shall not be held as limiting or affecting in any way the inherent jurisdiction of the Court of Session to regulate its own procedure from time to time, except in so far as same is prescribed by Act of Parliament.

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

ACT OF SEDERUNT TO REGULATE IN CERTAIN POINTS THE PROCEDURE UNDER THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, 1906 [6 EDW. VII., CAP. 58].

[26*th June* 1907.]

THE Lords of Council and Session, in virtue of the powers conferred by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (hereinafter called "the Act"), and in pursuance of said Act, do enact and ordain as follows:—

I. A party to any arbitration under the Act may appear in person, or be represented—

(a) By counsel;

(b) By a duly qualified law agent; or

(c) Where written authority from him is produced, by a member of his family, or any other person;

but no fee paid to a counsel shall be allowed on taxation, unless the arbitrator has certified that the employment of counsel was proper; and no person other than a counsel (when the employment of counsel is authorised) or a duly qualified law agent shall be entitled to have any fee or reward for appearing or acting on behalf of any party in an arbitration under the Act; provided always that an arbitrator may, in the case of a workman appearing in person, or a member of his family appearing for him, or in the case of a manager, clerk, or other servant appearing as the representative of an employer, make such allowance in respect of loss of time and travelling expenses as he shall think reasonable.

An application under paragraph 9 of the First Schedule to the Act may in the case of neglect of children by a widow be made by the Procurator-Fiscal of the Sheriff Court or by the Parish Council.

II. An application for the settlement by arbitration of any claim for compensation under the Act shall not be made unless and until some question has arisen between the parties, and such question has not been settled by agreement. The application shall state concisely the question which has arisen.

III. An application for the settlement by arbitration of the amount payable as compensation under the Act in a case where death has resulted from the accident may be made by the employer, or by the executor or other legal personal representative, if any, of the deceased workman, or by all or any of his dependants. It shall set forth the names of all the dependants (including those persons who claim to rank as dependants) so far as known to the applicant or applicants, and, where it is presented by or on behalf of some only of the enumerated dependants, the rest of them shall be called as respondents; provided always that, if in the course of the proceedings it appears that there are other dependants than those who are parties thereto, the Sheriff may order the petition to be served upon the omitted dependants, and may sist procedure in order to enable him or them to appear.

IV. Applications under this Act, if the parties reside in different districts, shall be made to the Sheriff Court of the County or District of a County

1. In which the accident occurred; or
2. In the case of a claim by virtue of section 8 of the Act, in which the workman was last employed in the employment to the nature of which the disease was due; or
3. If the accident occurred at sea,
   (a) in which the ship is at the time when intimation or service of the application is made; provided that such intimation or service is made to or on the master of the ship in the same county or district of a county; or (b) in which the managing owners of the ship, or some or one of them, or the manager, may reside or have a place of business; without prejudice to any transfer as hereinafter provided.

V. If a Sheriff before whom an application under the Act is brought is of opinion that the case can be more conveniently tried and determined in any other Court in Scotland, England, or Ireland, he may on the motion of any of the parties make an Order remitting the case to such Court, and on such Order being made it shall be the duty of the Sheriff Clerk to transmit the application with all the relative documents to the Sheriff Clerk or Registrar of the Court named in the Order, and to transfer to such Sheriff Clerk or Registrar any money invested in connection with such application in his name as Sheriff Clerk, and the case shall thereafter proceed in the last-mentioned Court as if it had originated there.

VI. When any money ordered to be transferred from one Court to another is invested in the Post Office Savings Bank in the name of the Sheriff Clerk, such money shall be transferred into the name of the Sheriff Clerk or Registrar of the Court to which the money is ordered to be transferred, in accordance with regulations to be made by the Postmaster-General with the consent of the Treasury; and where any money ordered to be transferred is not so invested, it shall forthwith be so invested, and shall when invested be transferred as hereinbefore directed.

VII. Where a claim for compensation under the Act is made against a principal, he may, at the calling of the case, move the Sheriff for authority to serve a copy of the petition, together with a notice of the claim for indemnity, upon any person against whom he intends to claim indemnity, and such person may within the time fixed by the Sheriff lodge a notice of appearance. If he does lodge a notice of appearance, he shall thereafter be deemed to be a party to the arbitration, and the question of his liability to indemnify the principal may, if they both consent, be summarily and finally determined therein; provided always that, if he is held in that process not to be liable to indemnify the principal, he shall not be subjected in any part of the claimant's expenses. If he fails to lodge a notice of appearance, he shall not be entitled, in any subsequent proceedings against him at the instance of the principal, to dispute the validity of any award made under the petition, whether the same be made of consent or otherwise.

VIII. In any claim for compensation under section 8 of the Act, if the employer alleges that the disease was in fact contracted while the workman was in the employment of some other employer, the Sheriff may grant authority to the employer to serve a copy of the application and of his averment as to the time and place of contracting the disease upon such other employer, and such other employer shall, upon such service, be held to be a party in the arbitration.

IX. Applications under paragraphs 7, 8, 9, 15, 16, or 17 of the First Schedule to the Act, or paragraphs 9 (c) or 14 of the Second Schedule to the Act, shall be made by a Minute, which shall be lodged in the original process, if any, and if there be no process, a copy of the recorded Memorandum, certified by the Sheriff Clerk, shall be lodged along with the Minute, and shall be held to be the process. Such Minute shall be intimated to the other party or parties interested, and thereafter be disposed of summarily, as if it were an application for settlement by arbitration under the Act. In all the cases referred to in this clause an entry shewing how the application is disposed of shall be made by the Sheriff Clerk in the special register kept for the purposes of the Act.

X. The costs of and incident to all proceedings under the Act shall not exceed the limits prescribed by the Act of Sederunt of 4th December 1878, entitled "An Act of Sederunt regulating the fees of agents practising before the Sheriff Courts in Scotland," and the regulations and table of fees therein contained shall, so far as applicable, be held to apply to such proceedings. It shall be competent to an arbitrator agreed on by the parties to direct payment to his clerk of such remuneration as may be allowed by the auditor of the Sheriff Court of the district, but not exceeding a fee of £1 for each day of the trial, a fee of 5s. for each other necessary meeting with the parties, and a fee of 2s. for each necessary letter, besides outlays and copying charges.

XI. (1) The memorandum as to any matter decided by a committee, or by an arbitrator other than a Sheriff, or by agreement, which is by paragraph 9 of the Second Schedule appended to the Act required to be sent to the Sheriff Clerk, shall be as nearly as may be in terms of Form I. in the Appendix hereto. The Sheriff Clerk shall forthwith send a copy (for which, unless it is supplied to him along with the memorandum, he shall be allowed to charge at the rate of 1s. per sheet) to the party or parties interested (other than the party from whom he received it) in a registered letter containing a request that he may be informed within a reasonable specified time whether the memorandum and award (or agreement) set forth therein are genuine, or are objected to; and if within the specified time he receives no intimation that the genuineness is disputed, or that the recording is objected to, then he shall, but not sooner than seven days after the dispatch of such letter of request, record the memorandum in the special register to be kept by him for the purpose, unless he himself refuses to record it under paragraph 9 (d) of the said Second Schedule; but if the genuineness is disputed, or the recording is objected to, he shall send a notification of the fact to the party from whom he received the memorandum, along with an intimation that the memorandum will not be recorded without a special warrant from the Sheriff.

(2) An award by a Sheriff under the Act, or a certified copy thereof, shall be forthwith recorded by the Sheriff Clerk in the said register as if it were a memorandum, and written notice of such recording and of the terms of the award shall be forthwith sent by him to the parties interested.

(3) Where an award of compensation has been made by a Court under sub-section 4 of section 1 of the Act, the certificate thereof shall be sent by the party to whom the same is given to the Sheriff Clerk of a Sheriff Court having jurisdiction, and the Sheriff Clerk shall forthwith record it in the said register as if it were a memorandum, and written notice of such recording and of the terms of the certificate shall be sent by him to the other party or parties interested.

XII. When the genuineness of a memorandum under paragraph 9 of the Second Schedule appended to the Act is disputed, or when an employer objects to the recording of such memorandum under sub-section (b) of said paragraph, or the Sheriff Clerk refuses under sub-section (d) of said paragraph to record such memorandum, the person disputing the genuineness, or the employer or the Sheriff Clerk, as the case may be, shall lodge a Minute stating clearly all the grounds for his action, and the memorandum shall thereupon be dealt with as if it were an application to the Sheriff for settlement by arbitration of the questions raised by the Minute.

XIII. Where an award, or a memorandum under paragraph 9 of the Second Schedule appended to the Act, or a certificate granted by a Court under sub-section 4 of section 1 of the Act has been recorded in the books of any Court, and any party takes in another Court any proceedings under the Act with reference to the subject matter of such award, memorandum, or certificate, he shall lodge with his application an extract or certified copy of such award, memorandum, or certificate.

XIV. No sum of money shall be paid into Court except upon an Order of Court, or under and in respect of a recorded Memorandum.

XV. (1) An application to the Court under paragraph 15 of Schedule I. of the Act shall be signed by or on behalf of both parties, and shall contain a statement of the facts which render the application necessary. It shall be accompanied by a copy of the report of every medical practitioner who has examined the workman, either on behalf of the employer or on the selection of the workman, and also by a copy of the application and of all the productions made therewith. The fee payable by the applicants shall be calculated at the rate of one shilling in the pound on twenty-six times the amount of the weekly payment claimed by or payable to the workman, so that the total fee shall not exceed one pound.

(2) The Sheriff Clerk shall, if he finds the application to be in order, refer the matter to one of the medical referees appointed for the county or district of a county, and shall deliver or send by registered post to such referee the reference, which shall be as nearly as possible in terms of Form IV. in the Appendix hereto, and a copy of the application and productions.

(3) The Sheriff Clerk shall also direct the workman to submit himself for examination by the medical referee, subject to and in accordance with any regulations made by the Secretary of State, and it shall be the duty of the workman on being served with such direction, which shall be as nearly as possible in terms of Form V. of the Appendix hereto, to submit himself for examination accordingly.

(4) Before making such direction the Sheriff Clerk shall inquire whether the workman is in a fit condition to travel for the purpose of examination, and if satisfied that he is in a fit condition, shall direct him to attend at such time and place as the referee may fix, and if satisfied that he is not in a fit condition to travel, shall so state in the reference.

(5) The Sheriff Clerk shall deliver or send by registered post to each party a copy of the reference, and to the workman a copy of the direction to submit himself for examination.

(6) The medical referee on receipt of the reference shall fix a time and place for examination of the workman, and shall send notice thereof to the employer and workman.

(7) The medical referee shall, as soon as possible, forward his certificate on the matter to the Sheriff Clerk by registered post.

(8) On the receipt of the certificate of the medical referee, the Sheriff Clerk shall inform the parties by post that it has been received, and shall permit any party to inspect the same during office hours, and shall on the application and at the cost of either party furnish him with a copy of the certificate or allow him to take a copy thereof.

XVI. (1) When a workman receiving a weekly payment intends to cease to reside within the United Kingdom, he may apply to the Court to refer to a medical referee the question whether the incapacity of the workman resulting from the injury is likely to be of a permanent nature.

(2) The application shall be made by notice in writing, according to Form VI. in the Appendix, which shall be lodged with the Sheriff Clerk, and shall be accompanied by a copy of the report of any medical practitioner who has examined the workman on the selection of the workman; and a copy of the application and of such report (if any) shall be served on the employer or his solicitor ten clear days before the hearing of the application, unless the Sheriff Clerk gives leave for shorter notice; and the applicant shall lodge a copy of the application and of the report (if any) for the use of the medical referee.

(3) If the workman has been examined by a medical practitioner on behalf of the employer, the employer may at or at any time before the hearing of the application furnish the workman with a copy of the report of that practitioner as to the workman's condition, and lodge a copy of the report for the use of the medical referee.

(4) The Sheriff Clerk, on being satisfied, after hearing parties if he thinks it necessary, that the applicant has a bona fide intention of ceasing to reside in the United Kingdom, shall refer the question to a medical referee, such reference being made as far as possible in terms of Form VII. in the Appendix hereto; and if he is not so satisfied, he may refuse to do so, but in that case he shall, if so requested by the applicant, refer the matter to the Sheriff, who may make such order as he may think fit.

(5) If the question is referred by the Sheriff Clerk or by order of the Sheriff to a medical referee, the Sheriff Clerk shall, in or as nearly as may be in terms of Form V. of the Appendix hereto, direct the workman to submit himself for examination by the medical referee, subject to and in accordance with any regulations made by the Secretary of State; and the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 6 of section XV. hereof shall with the necessary modifications apply.

(6) The medical referee shall, as soon as possible, forward his certificate in the matter to the Sheriff Clerk by registered post, specifying therein the nature and cause of the incapacity of the workman, and whether the same is total or partial; and the Sheriff Clerk shall thereupon proceed in accordance with paragraph 8 of section XV. hereof.

(7) Where the medical referee certifies that the incapacity resulting from the injury is likely to be of a permanent nature, the Sheriff Clerk shall on application furnish the workman

(a) with a copy of the certificate of the medical referee, certified by the Sheriff Clerk to be a true copy; and

(b) with a copy of the award, memorandum, or certificate under which the weekly payment is payable, certified by the Sheriff Clerk to be a true copy; and

(c) with a certificate of identity according to Form VIII. in the Appendix hereto; and

(d) with a notice according to Form IX. in the Appendix, annexing thereto forms of certificate and declaration according to Forms X. and XI. in the Appendix; and shall procure from the workman a specimen of his signature, and retain the same for reference.

(8) A workman who desires to have the weekly payments payable to him remitted to him while residing out of the United Kingdom, shall at intervals of three months from the date to which such payments were last made, submit himself to examination by a medical practitioner in the place where he is residing, and shall produce to him the copy of the certificate of the medical referee and the certificate of identity furnished under the immediately preceding paragraph, and shall obtain from him a certificate in terms of Form X. in the Appendix that the incapacity of the workman resulting from the injury continues; and such certificate shall be verified by declaration by the medical practitioner, in the presence of the workman, before a person having authority to administer an oath.

(9) The workman shall also make a declaration of identity according to Form XI. in the Appendix, before a person having authority to administer an oath, producing to such person the copy and certificate above-mentioned, and the certificate of the medical practitioner by whom he has been examined.

(10) The workman shall forward the certificate and declaration in the two last preceding paragraphs mentioned to the Sheriff Clerk, with a request, according to Form XII. in the Appendix, for the transmission to him of the amount of the weekly payments due to him, specifying the place where and the manner in which the amount is to be remitted, which request shall be signed by the workman in his own handwriting.

(11) On receipt of the certificate, declaration, and request, the Sheriff Clerk shall examine the same, and may, if not satisfied that the same are in order, return the same for correction.

(12) When the Sheriff Clerk is satisfied that the certificate, declaration, and request are in order, he shall send to the employer a notice according to Form XIII. in the Appendix, requesting him to forward the amount due; and the employer shall thereupon forward the amount to the Sheriff Clerk, who shall remit the same, less any fees payable to the Sheriff Clerk and the cost of transmission, to the workman, at the address and in the manner requested by him, such remittance being in all cases at the cost and risk of the workman.

XVII. The following regulations shall apply to cases to be stated by a Sheriff in virtue of the provision contained in paragraph 17 (b) of the Second Schedule appended to the Act:

(a) An application to a Sheriff to state a case on a question of law determined by him shall be made by minute lodged in the process within seven days after the Sheriff has issued his award, and such minute shall set forth the question (or questions) of law proposed as the subject matter of the case, and shall be accompanied by a deposit of £1, which shall be paid to the Sheriff Clerk as his fee for preparing the case.

(b) The Sheriff Clerk shall within seven days from the lodging of such minute, accompanied as aforesaid, prepare the case and submit the same in draft to the parties or their agents.

(c) Should the parties or their agents fail to agree as to the terms of the case, these shall be settled by the Sheriff, provided always that, if the Sheriff on a draft case being submitted to him is of opinion that any question of law stated in it was not raised by the admissions made or the facts proved before him, or that the application for a case is frivolous, he may refuse to state or sign the case, but in that event he shall grant to the applicant a certificate specifying the cause, and bearing the date, of the refusal.

(d) The case shall be as nearly as possible in terms of Form II. in the Appendix hereto, and shall bear to be stated by the Sheriff and shall be signed by him.

(e) The appellant shall, within seven days after the case as settled has been delivered to him, give written notice of his intention to proceed with it, and of the Division to which he proposes to submit it, to the other party or parties interested, and shall at the same time send to each of such parties a copy of the case. He shall also within the said seven days transmit the case by post to, or cause the same to be lodged with, the principal clerk of the Division mentioned in the foresaid notice, together with a certificate under the hand of himself or his law agent of the notice having been given to the other parties.

(f) The regulations as to the printing of appeals from the Sheriff Court contained in the Act of Sederunt of 10th March 1870, "anent probation and appeals from inferior courts," shall apply to cases stated under the Act, provided always that it shall not be necessary to print any document, except the case, without a special order from the Court, and provided also that either party may move for an order on the Sheriff Clerk to transmit the process.

(g) The Court shall have power when determining a case to make such order arising out of the answer (or answers) given by them to the question (or questions) put as they shall think necessary, and also to make such order as to the costs of the case as to them may seem right. They may also, before giving their determination, send back the case to the Sheriff for amendment.

(h) When a Sheriff has refused to state and sign a case, the applicant for the case may within seven days from the date of such refusal apply by a written note to one of the Divisions of the Court of Session for an order upon the other party or parties to show cause why a case should not be stated. Such note, which may be in terms of Form III. of the Appendix hereto, shall be accompanied by the above-mentioned certificate of refusal, and shall state shortly the nature of the cause, the facts, and the question or questions of law which the applicant desires to raise, and any Judge of the Division, or in vacation the Lord Ordinary officiating on the Bills, may, after intimation to the other party or parties, dispose of it summarily, and his judgment upon it, as well as upon the question of costs, shall be final. If an order is pronounced requiring the Sheriff to state and sign a case, the case shall be stated as hereinbefore provided, and these regulations shall apply to the subsequent procedure.

XVIII. This Act of Sederunt shall come into operation on 1st July 1907, but except so far as it relates to references to medical referees and proceedings consequential thereon, shall not apply in any case where the accident happened before the commencement of the Act.

And the Lords appoint this Act to be inserted in the Books of Sederunt, and to be printed and published in common form.

STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1907.
No. 407.

MASTER AND SERVANT.
WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.
INDUSTRIAL DISEASES.

Order of the Secretary of State, dated May 22, 1907, extending the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to certain Industrial Diseases.

Whereas by section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the provisions of that Act are applied, in certain cases and subject to certain modifications, to workmen disabled by, or suspended from their usual employment on account of their having contracted, a disease mentioned in the Third Schedule to the Act;

And whereas it is enacted by sub-section (2) of the said section that if the workman at or immediately before the date of his disablement or suspension was employed in a process mentioned in the second column of the Third Schedule to the Act, and the disease contracted is the disease in the first column of that Schedule set opposite the description of the process, then the disease shall be deemed, except as otherwise provided in the sub-section, to have been due to the nature of that employment unless the employer proves the contrary;

And whereas sub-section (6) of the same section empowers the Secretary of State to make Orders for extending the provisions of that section to other diseases and other processes, and to injuries due to the nature of any employment specified in the Order not being injuries by accident, either without modification or subject to such modifications as may be contained in the Order;

Now I, the Right Honourable Herbert John Gladstone, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by this Order made under sub-section (6) of the said section, do hereby direct that the provisions of section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, shall extend and apply to the diseases, injuries, and processes specified in the first and second columns of the Schedule annexed to this Order, as if the said diseases and injuries were included in the first column of the Third Schedule to the Act and as if the said processes were set opposite in the second column of that Schedule to the diseases or injuries to which they are set opposite in the second column of the Schedule annexed hereto.

H. J. Gladstone,
One of His Majesty's Principal
Secretaries of State.

Whitehall,
May 22nd, 1907.

STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1907.

No. $\frac{486}{S.\ 19}$.

MASTER AND SERVANT, SCOTLAND.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, 1906.

Regulations, dated June 25, 1907, made by the Secretary of State and the Treasury as to the duties and fees of Certifying and other Surgeons, and as to References to, and remuneration and expenses of, Medical Referees, in Scotland, under section 8 of the Act.

I, the Right Honourable Herbert John Gladstone, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and We, the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in pursuance of the powers respectively conferred on us by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, section 8, sub-sections (1) (f), (3) and (5), and section 10, sub-section (1), hereby make the following regulations:—

Definitions.

1. In these regulations—
   (i.) "Act" means the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906.
   (ii.) "Workman" means a workman as defined in section 13 of the Act.
   (iii.) "Certifying Surgeon" means either the certifying surgeon mentioned in sub-section (1) (i) of section 8 of the Act, or a medical practitioner appointed by the Secretary of State under sub-section (5) of section 8 to have the powers and duties of a certifying surgeon under the said section.
   (iv.) "Appointed Surgeon" means a surgeon having power, in pursuance of any special rules or regulations made under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, to suspend a workman from employment in the process or processes specified in such rules or regulations.

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

(v.) "Medical Referee" means a medical practitioner appointed by the Secretary of State to Act as medical referee for the purposes of section 8 of the Act.

(vi.) "Sheriff Clerk" includes sheriff clerk depute for the purposes of ordinary sheriff court jurisdiction.

(vii.) The words "disease to which the Act applies" mean a disease mentioned in the third schedule to the Act or a disease or injury (not being an injury by accident) to which the provisions of section 8 of the Act have been extended by an Order made by the Secretary of State under sub-section (6) of that section.

2. Where a workman applies to a certifying surgeon for a certificate (hereinafter called "a certificate of disablement") that he is suffering from a disease to which the Act applies, and is thereby disabled from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed, the certifying surgeon, on payment of the prescribed fee, and after obtaining the particulars specified in the schedule to these regulations (Form 1) and such further information, if any, respecting the case as in the particular circumstances he may deem necessary, shall either proceed at once, if the application is made by the workman in person, to make a medical examination of the workman, or shall appoint forthwith a time and place for making such examination, and give notice thereof to the workman. Such notice, if given in writing, shall follow, as closely as may be, the form prescribed in the schedule (Form 2).

3. After personally examining the workman, the certifying surgeon shall either give the workman a certificate of disablement or shall certify that he is not satisfied that the workman is entitled to such certificate, and shall in either case deliver his certificate to the workman. The certificate given shall be in the form prescribed in the schedule to these regulations (Forms 3 and 5).

4. Where in pursuance of any special rules or regulations made under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, the certifying or appointed surgeon, after having personally examined a workman, suspends him from his usual employment on account of his having contracted any disease to which the Act applies, or where in the case of a workman applying to be suspended on account of his having contracted any such disease, the surgeon as aforesaid, after having personally examined such workman, refuses to order his suspension, he shall, on the application either of the employer or of the workman, and on payment of the prescribed fee, certify such suspension or refusal to suspend in accordance with the form prescribed in the schedule to these regulations (Forms 6 and 8), and shall deliver such certificate to the applicant.

5. Where a certificate of disablement is given or a workman is suspended, and the case is one in which, under the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 8 of the Act as extended by an Order of the Secretary of State made under sub-section (6) of the said section, the disease contracted by the workman will be deemed, unless the employer proves, or the certifying surgeon certifies, to the contrary, to have been due to the nature of the employment in the process in which at or immediately before the date of the disablement or suspension the workman was employed, the certifying surgeon, if he is of opinion that the disease contracted by the workman was not due to the nature of such employment, shall certify accordingly. Such certificate shall, where possible, be given simultaneously with, and included in, the certificate of disablement or the certificate (if any) of suspension, but may also be given separately on application by the employer and on payment of the prescribed fee; and in either case shall follow the form prescribed in the schedule to these regulations (see Forms 4 and 7).

For the purposes of this regulation an appointed surgeon shall have the same powers and duties as a certifying surgeon.

6. A copy of any certificate given by a certifying or appointed surgeon under the foregoing regulations shall, together with any other documents relating to the case, be retained and kept by the surgeon; and copies of any such certificate shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, be supplied by the surgeon to the employer and the workman.

7. The fees which the certifying and appointed surgeons shall be entitled to charge in respect of duties performed under section 8 of the Act shall be as follows:—

Fees payable by the Workman.

(i.) For any certificate given under regulation 3—

(a) in cases where the medical examination of the workman is made by the surgeon in the performance of his duties under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, a fee of 1*s.*;

(b) in all other cases, a fee of 5*s.*, and where the workman is unable to present himself for examination at the residence of, or other nearer place fixed by, the certifying surgeon, for every mile or portion thereof which the certifying surgeon is required to travel therefrom for the purpose of examining the workman, an additional fee of 1*s.*

(ii.) For any certificate of suspension or refusal to suspend, under regulation 4, when the medical examination of the workman is made in pursuance of any special rules or regulations under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, a fee of 1*s.*

(iii.) For a copy of any certificate obtained under regulation 6, a fee of 1*s.*

Fees payable by the Employer.

(iv.) For any certificate of suspension or refusal to suspend, obtained by the employer under regulation 4, a fee of 1*s.*

(v.) Where the employer applies under regulation 5 for a certificate that the disease contracted is not due to the nature of the employment, in respect of every such application (to include the certificate, if given), a fee of 2*s.* 6*d.*

(vi.) For a copy of any certificate obtained under regulation 6, a fee of 1*s.*

References to Medical Referees.

8. Where an employer or workman is aggrieved by the action of a certifying or appointed surgeon in giving or refusing to give a certificate of disablement or in suspending or refusing to suspend a workman, he may—

(a) if he is an employer, within seven days of the receipt of the notice of disablement or suspension required to be given under the Act, or, in a case of disablement, if the notice is not accompanied by the certificate of the surgeon, or a copy thereof, and the employer forthwith requires the workman to furnish him with a copy, within seven days of the receipt of such copy; or

(b) if he is a workman, within seven days of the date on which the surgeon has refused to give him a certificate of disablement or suspension, apply to the sheriff clerk of the sheriff court for the district in which the workman was employed at the time of his examination by the surgeon, for the matter to be referred to a medical referee; provided that it shall be within the discretion of the sheriff clerk, on good cause shown, to extend in any case by not more than seven days the period within which an application is required to be made.

9. (a) Any application under the foregoing regulation (Forms 9 and 10) shall be made in writing, and shall state the grounds on which the reference is asked for, in accordance with the form prescribed in the schedule to these regulations, or as near thereto as may be.

(b) The application shall be accompanied by the certificate or a copy of the certificate obtained from the surgeon by whose action the applicant is aggrieved, and by any available report or reports of any medical practitioner by whom the workman has been examined; and if the applicant is an employer, by the notice of disablement or suspension served on him by the workman, and by an undertaking to pay any reasonable travelling expenses incurred by the workman in attending for examination by the medical referee.

(c) The applicant shall also file with the sheriff clerk such copies of the application and other documents as aforesaid as may be necessary for the use of the medical referee and of the employer or workman, as the case may be, hereinafter referred to as the respondent, who together with the applicant is directly interested in the application.

(d) In the event of any dispute as to the amount of the travelling expenses payable to the workman by the employer, the matter may be referred to the sheriff clerk, whose decision shall be final.

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

10. It shall be the duty of the sheriff clerk on receiving an application to satisfy himself that it is duly made in accordance with the foregoing regulations, and if it is not, to return it for amendment. If and when the application is in accordance with the regulations, he shall refer the matter forthwith to a medical referee, and shall forward to such medical referee by registered post one of the copies of the application and the other documents filed therewith, with an order of reference according to the form prescribed in the schedule. (Form 11.)

11. The sheriff clerk shall also make an order (Form 12) directing the workman to submit himself for examination by the medical referee. Before making such order the sheriff clerk shall inquire whether the workman is in a fit condition to travel for the purpose of examination, and if satisfied that he is in a fit condition shall by the order direct him to attend at such time and place as the referee may fix, and if satisfied that he is not in a fit condition to travel, shall so state in the order of reference; and it shall be the duty of the workman, on being served with the order, to submit himself for examination accordingly.

12. The sheriff clerk shall deliver or send by registered post to both parties a copy of the order of reference, and shall also send to the respondent copies of the other documents forwarded to the medical referee, and shall send to the workman a copy of the order directing him to submit himself for examination.

13. In the case of a reference under these regulations, the medical referee shall be one of those appointed by the Secretary of State for the sheriffdom which includes the district in which the case arises, and if the sheriffdom has been sub-divided and medical referees have been appointed for the sub-divisions, shall be one appointed for the sub-division comprising the aforesaid district. Provided that if any medical referee is or has been specially appointed by the Secretary of State, either for the sheriffdom or otherwise, for the purpose of deciding on any specified case or class of cases in which a reference may be made under these regulations, the reference in any such case shall be made to the medical referee so appointed. Provided also that if the surgeon by whose action the applicant is aggrieved has been appointed a medical referee, the reference shall not be made to him, but to such other medical referee as may be authorised to act.

14. The medical referee shall, on receipt of an order of reference duly signed by a sheriff clerk, together with copies of the documents required to be sent therewith, fix a time and a place for a personal examination of the workman, and shall send notice to the employer and workman accordingly (Forms 13 and 14). It shall be the duty of the workman, and, if the employer is the applicant, of the employer or a person duly authorised by him, to attend at the time and place fixed by the medical referee; and in the event of failure on the part of the workman or employer or both to appear as required by this regulation, the medical referee shall decide on the matter referred to him forthwith upon such information as shall be available, and with or without a personal examination. Provided that where the absence of the employer or his representative or of the workman is shown to the satisfaction of the medical referee to be unavoidable, or where the medical referee considers it necessary to apply for expert assistance as hereinafter provided, it shall be open to him to adjourn the inquiry on the reference and to resume it at such time and place as he may fix, after giving due notice to all parties concerned.

15. Except as otherwise provided by regulation 14, the medical referee shall, before deciding on the matter referred to him, make a personal examination of the workman, and shall consider any statements made or submitted by either party.

16. The medical referee shall, in the form prescribed in the schedule (Form 15) to these regulations (subject to such additions and modifications as the circumstances of the case may require), notify in writing his decision to the sheriff clerk, to the applicant, and to the respondent.

17. The medical referee shall send to the Home Office (Form 16) at the end of each quarter a statement (accompanied by any vouchers necessary), in the form prescribed in the schedule to these regulations, of the fees due to him for the quarter under these regulations.

18. The following fees and allowances are authorised to be paid to medical referees under these regulations;—

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

(i.) For deciding the matter referred to him in any reference and for all duties performed in connection therewith, 2 guineas.

(ii.) Where in order to examine the workman the medical referee is compelled to travel to a place distant more than two miles from his residence or such other centre as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, in addition to the above fee, 5*s.* for each mile beyond two, and up to ten, miles distant from such residence or centre, and thereafter 1*s.* for each mile distant therefrom.

(iii.) In cases involving special difficulty the medical referee may apply for special expert assistance, which may be granted by the Secretary of State if he thinks fit, on such terms as to remuneration or otherwise, as he may with the sanction of the Treasury determine.

19. In cases where a claim is made under regulation 18 (ii.) in respect of an examination of a workman, the medical referee, in submitting his quarterly statement under regulation 17, shall certify the distance of the place where the examination was made from his residence or other prescribed centre.

20. The sheriff clerk shall keep a record, in the form prescribed in the schedule (Form 17), of all references made by him under these regulations, and shall send the same to the Secretary of State at the end of each quarter.

21. These regulations shall come into force on the 1st day of July 1907, and shall apply to Scotland.

H. J. Gladstone,
One of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Joseph A. Pease,
J. H. Whitley,
Two of the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury.

I, the Right Honourable Herbert John Gladstone, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and We, the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in pursuance of the powers respectively conferred on us by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, hereby make the following regulations:—

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

Part I.—Definitions and General Regulations.

1. In these regulations—

(i.) "Medical Referee" means a medical practitioner appointed by the Secretary of State to act as medical referee for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906.

(ii.) "Reference" means—

(a) in regulations in Part II., the appointment of a medical referee by a sheriff clerk to give a certificate, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (15) of the first schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, as to the condition of the workman and his fitness for employment, or as to whether or to what extent the incapacity of the workman is due to the accident.

(b) in regulations in Part III., the appointment of a medical referee by a sheriff clerk to give a certificate, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (18) of the first schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, as to whether the incapacity resulting from the injury is likely to be of a permanent nature.

(c) in regulations in Part V., the appointment of a medical referee by a committee, arbitrator or sheriff to report on any matter material to any question arising in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906.

(iii.) "Committee" means a committee representative of an employer and his workmen, with power to settle matters under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in the case of the employer and workmen.

(iv.) "Arbitrator" means a single arbitrator agreed on by the parties to settle any matter which under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is to be settled by arbitration.

(v.) "Sheriff" includes sheriff-substitute.

(vi.) "Sheriff-clerk" includes sheriff clerk depute for purposes of ordinary sheriff court jurisdiction.

(vii.) The words "district in which the case arises" mean the district of the sheriffdom for purposes of ordinary sheriff court jurisdiction in which all the parties concerned reside, or, if they reside in different districts, the district prescribed by Act of Sederunt, subject to any transfer made under such Act.

2. In the case of any reference under these regulations, the medical referee, in the absence of special circumstances, shall be one of those appointed by the Secretary of State for the sheriffdom which includes the district in which the case arises, and shall, if the sheriffdom has been sub-divided, and medical referees have been appointed for the sub-divisions, be one appointed for the sub-division which comprises the aforesaid district. Provided that, where there has been a previous reference in any case, any subsequent reference in the same case shall, if possible, be made to the same referee and be accompanied by the previous report or certificate, or copy thereof, of the medical referee.

3. The medical referee shall not accept any reference under these regulations unless signed or countersigned by the sheriff clerk.

4. The medical referee shall send to the Home Office at the end of each quarter statements, in the forms prescribed in the schedule to these regulations (Forms I, J, K, and L), of the fees due to him for the quarter under these regulations.

5. In cases where a claim is made under the regulations in respect of travelling expenses, the medical referee, in submitting his quarterly statements under regulation 4, shall certify the distance of the place to which he was required to travel from his residence or other prescribed centre.

6. In cases involving special difficulty the medical referee may apply to the Secretary of State for special expert assistance, which may be granted by the Secretary of State, if he thinks fit, on such terms as to remuneration or otherwise as he may with the sanction of the Treasury determine.

7. The sheriff clerk shall keep a record, in the form prescribed in the schedule (Form M), of all references made under these regulations, and of all cases in which a medical referee is summoned to sit as assessor, and shall send a copy thereof to the Secretary of State at the end of each quarter.

8. These regulations shall come into force on the 1st day of July 1907, and shall apply to Scotland.

Part II.—Regulations as to References under Schedule I., paragraph (15).

9. The medical referee shall, on receipt of a reference duly signed, fix a time and place for the examination of the workman, and shall send notice accordingly to both the parties signing the application on which the reference is made (Forms A and B).

10. Before giving the certificate required by the reference, the medical referee shall personally examine the workman and shall consider any statements that may be made or submitted by either party.

11. The certificate given by the medical referee shall be according to the form prescribed in the schedule to these regulations (Form C).

12. The medical referee shall forward his certificate to the sheriff clerk from whom he received the reference.

13. The following shall be the scale of fees to be paid to medical referees in respect of references under this part of the regulations:—

(i.) For a first reference (to include all the duties performed in connection therewith) ... ... 2 guineas.

(ii.) For a second or subsequent reference to the same medical referee in the same case ... ... 1 guinea.

(iii.) Where in order to examine the injured workman the medical referee is compelled to travel to a place distant more than two miles from his residence or such other centre as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, in addition to the above fees—5*s.* for each mile beyond two, and up to ten, miles distant from such residence or centre, and thereafter 1*s.* for each mile distant therefrom.

Part III.—Regulations as to References under Schedule I., paragraph (18).

14. The medical referee shall, on receipt of a reference duly signed (Form D), fix a time and place for the examination of the workman, and shall send notice accordingly to the workman.

15. Before giving the certificate required by the reference the medical referee shall make a personal examination of the workman.

16. The certificate given by the medical referee shall be according to the form prescribed in the schedule to these regulations (Form E).

17. The medical referee shall forward his certificate to the sheriff clerk from whom he received the reference.

18. The fee to be paid to a medical referee in respect of a reference (to include all the duties performed in connection therewith) under this part of these regulations shall be one guinea.

Part IV.—Regulation as to Remuneration of Medical Referee for sitting as Assessor under Schedule II., paragraph (5).

19. Where a medical referee attends on the summons of the sheriff for the purpose of sitting with the sheriff as an assessor, as provided for in paragraph (5) of the second schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, he shall be entitled for such attendance (to include his services as assessor) to a fee of 3 guineas, and where in order so to attend on the sheriff he is compelled to travel to a place distant more than two miles from his residence or such other centre as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, he shall be entitled, in addition to the above fee, to 5*s.* for each mile beyond two, and up to ten, miles distant from such residence or centre, and thereafter to 1*s.* for each mile distant therefrom.

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

Part V.—Regulations as to References under Schedule II., paragraph (15).

Conditions of Reference.

20. Before making any reference, the committee, arbitrator, or sheriff shall be satisfied, after hearing all medical evidence tendered by either side, that such evidence is either conflicting or insufficient on some matter which seems material to a question arising in the arbitration, and that it is desirable to obtain a report from a medical referee on such matter.

Form and Mode of Reference.

21. Every reference shall be made in writing and shall state the matter on which the report of the medical referee is required, and the question arising in the arbitration to which such matter seems to be material. Such reference shall be in accordance with the form prescribed in the schedule to these regulations (Form F), or as near thereto as may be.

The reference shall be accompanied by a general statement of the medical evidence given on behalf of the parties; and if such evidence has been given before a committee or arbitrator, each medical witness shall sign the statement of his evidence, and may add any necessary explanation or correction.

22. On making the reference to the medical referee, the committee, arbitrator or sheriff shall make an order in the form prescribed in the schedule (Form G), directing the injured workman to submit himself for examination by the medical referee. Before making such order they shall inquire whether he is in a fit condition to travel for the purpose of examination; and if satisfied that he is in a fit condition, they shall by the same order direct him to attend at such time and place as the referee may fix.

It shall be the duty of the injured workman to obey any such order.

If the committee, arbitrator or sheriff is satisfied that the workman is not in a fit condition to travel, they shall so state in the reference.

23. The reference shall be signed, if made by a committee, by the chairman and secretary of the committee; if made by an arbitrator, by the arbitrator; if made by a sheriff, by the sheriff; or by the sheriff clerk of the sheriff court in which the arbitration is pending.

24. A committee or arbitrator making a reference, shall, without naming a medical referee, address the reference in general terms to "one of the medical referees appointed by the Secretary of State for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906," and shall forward it to the sheriff clerk of the sheriff court of the district in which the case arises.

Duties of Sheriff Clerk.

25. (1) In the case of a reference by a committee or arbitrator, the sheriff clerk on receiving the reference—

(a) Shall see that the reference is in accordance with these regulations, and if it is not, shall return it for amendment;

(b) Shall insert the name of the medical referee proper to be appointed;

(c) Shall, when the reference is in accordance with these regulations, countersign it, and forward it forthwith to the medical referee.

(2) In the case of a reference by a sheriff, the sheriff clerk of the sheriff court in which the arbitration is pending shall sign (or countersign) it, and forward it forthwith to the medical referee.

26. The sheriff clerk, on receiving a report from a medical referee under regulation 28, shall forthwith file a copy at the court and transmit the report to the committee, arbitrator or sheriff by whom the reference was made.

If the committee, arbitrator or sheriff shall direct that the parties be at liberty to inspect the report, the sheriff clerk shall on receiving notice of such direction permit such inspection to be made during office hours, and shall on the application and at the cost of any party furnish him with a copy of the report or allow him to take a copy thereof.

APPENDIX TO STATUTES.

Report of Medical Referee.

27. The medical referee shall, on receipt of a reference duly signed, appoint a time and a place for the examination of the workman, and shall send him notice accordingly (Form H).

28. The medical referee shall give his report in writing, and shall forward it to the sheriff clerk from whom he received the reference.

29. The committee, arbitrator or sheriff may, by request signed and forwarded in the same manner as the reference, remit the report to the medical referee for a further statement on any matter not covered by the original reference.

Fees.

30. The following shall be the scale of fees to be paid to the medical referees in respect of references under this part of the regulations :—

(i.) For a first reference, to include examination of the injured workman and written report ... ... 2 guineas.

(ii.) For a further statement under regulation 29 on any matter not covered by the original reference ... ... 1 guinea.

(iii.) For a second or subsequent reference to the same referee in a further arbitration on the same case, to include examination, if necessary, and written report ... ... 1 guinea.

(iv.) Where in order to examine the injured workman the medical referee is compelled to travel to a place distant more than two miles from his residence or such other centre as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, in addition to the above fees—5*s.* for each mile beyond two, and up to ten, miles distant from such residence or centre, and thereafter 1*s.* for each mile distant therefrom.
